My hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton made an excellent speech. The House and, I hope, the nation, are grateful to him for having initiated the debate, and it is with mounting impatience that Mr. Deputy Speaker and I await the Minister's reply.

11.56 am

Ms. Joyce Quin (Gateshead, East): I welcome this debate on exports, although at times during the unusual speech of the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), I was not entirely certain that that was the subject that we were discussing. I congratulate the hon. Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) on his good fortune in being able to initiate the debate, because it concerns an important matter which, despite the low attendance, is dear to the hearts of many hon. Members on both sides of the House.

The motion is somewhat curious. Reading it, one would certainly never guess that we have one of the largest balance of payments deficits in our history; that does not emerge from the motion at all.

The motion welcomes

"the contribution made by the continued growth of the volume of exports over the last ten years".

It does not mention the fact that, sadly, the annual growth rate of our volume of exports—3·5 per cent. in the 1979-89 period—was the lowest of any EEC country and also lower than that of Japan or the United States. That is a great pity and to be deplored.

I agree with the hon. Member for Nuneaton that it is important for British business and British exports to be guaranteed the same level of support as is given in other countries. We would all at least say that we agree with that and that there should be a level playing field in terms of support for exports.

Many hon. Members have stressed that trading is vital to our economic health, but unfortunately, over the past 10 years, our record has been little short of disastrous. Between 1979 and 1986, our share of world trade fell by 15 per cent.—a larger fall than that experienced by any other industrial country. In 1988, our current account trade deficit reached £14·5 billion. That was larger than the total of all the United Kingdom's deficits over the previous 40 years. Then, 1988 was followed by the record deficit year of 1989, when the figure reached more than £19 billion. Presumably the total combined deficit of 1988 and 1989 was larger than all the previous United Kingdom's deficits in recorded history. We should bear that in mind when considering exports.

In 1978, we had a £5 billion surplus on the balance of payments. Before this debate, I looked through some old Hansards for that time and noted that plenty of Conservative Members were worried that the surplus was so small.

In manufacturing, our trade performance has deteriorated dramatically, with 1983 marking the first year since the industrial revolution in which manufacturing imports by Britain exceeded our manufacturing exports. In 1989, our manufacturing deficit with West Germany was £9·6 billion, and with Japan it was approaching £5 billion. However, it seems that the Government are not prepared to look those figures squarely in the face and recognise that action is vital.

The hon. Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) gave some interesting figures about the growth in exports, but he took 1981 as his base year, and, as we all know, that was a very poor year for our economic performance. Therefore, that was a low base on which to give further figures.

There is considerable cause for concern when the figures are broken down into sectors. My hon. Friend the Member for Wallsend, (Mr. Garrett) mentioned the machine tool sector about which he is concerned. In that sector, 47 per cent. of our market was taken by imports, but in Japan the corresponding figure is only 7 per cent.

The hon. Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) referred to old and new industries, the situation in both is very worrying. In some of our old industries, which I believe still have an important role to play, we are losing badly in terms of exports in comparison with other countries. One of the great sadnesses for me, coming from the north-east—I know that it is also a great sadness to my hon. Friends the Members for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon) and for Wallsend—is the demise of our shipbuilding industry and the fact that our yards are facing the bulldozers at a time when shipbuilding worldwide is experiencing a great boom.

To reinforce a point that I made to the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford, I believe that in shipbuilding the old and new industries can work very well together. It is foolish simply to dismiss older industries in which there are skilled workers and a great deal of expertise as industries in which we do not want to be involved, when it is clear that there will be a market for those products in future and those products also have important links with the high-technology sector.

The trade deficit in textiles, another of our older industries, was £1·5 billion in 1989. We are also concerned about the steel industry at the moment. It is sad that our steel industry is still considerably smaller than the steel industries in other European countries, particularly those of West Germany and Italy. Perhaps the Minister will comment on the prospects for high-technology investment in our steel industry.

In our recent debate on the future of the Ravenscraig steel plant, my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray) said that Ravenscraig could be well placed to receive high technology investment along the lines of such investment in the United States and Italy. I hope that the Minister will refer to that. Solutions should be sought in the steel sector which can safeguard the help of all the existing steel plants and ensure that those plants can survive and prosper in future.

The hon. Member for Eastbourne said that perhaps we should not consider imports as basically evil and exports as basically good. I rather agree with him, but we want to see them to be in better balance. The imbalance and the size of our trade deficit are worrying us. Of course we need to import, just as we need to export, but we need a better balance between the two.

The trade figures are to be published today and I understand that there will be a drop in the current deficit from about £1·6 billion to £1·3 billion. While I strongly welcome any drop in our trade deficit, we are still dealing with a substantial deficit. In previous years, such a figure would have been greeted with absolute dismay instead of relief. The hon. Member for Eastbourne also tried to pour scorn on statistics generally as a convenient way of overlooking the scale of the problem. However, the weight of all the statistics taken cumulatively concerns me, not the fact that individual statistics may be less accurate than we would wish.

I want now to consider the export services that the Government provide. I was glad that my hon. Friend the Member for Wallsend laid such stress on the importance of the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department. He referred quite rightly to the real anxieties felt by industrialists at the Government's proposals for changing ECGD.

Although it is true that many people in industry have welcomed the Government's proposals to privatise the short-term insurance sector, there is now concern among industrialists that, if it is privatised in that way, it may fall prey to a takeover bid from its main competitor in this country. Perhaps the Minister will refer to that. Exporters are worried that a private monopoly might be created by such a takeover. That would not be in the interests of the services provided to exporters.

Obviously, if the Government go ahead with their proposals to privatise that part of ECGD, there will be discussions and presumably legislation which will be debated by both sides of the House. That might be the most appropriate time to consider the misgivings that have been raised over the common services provided both to the short-term side of ECGD and to the long-term project side. That will be the time to raise worries about whether those common services might be weakened as a result of the policy of privatisation which the Government seem to be pursuing. As we have such a huge trade deficit, now is not a good time to be reorganising, hiving off and weakening ECGD in that way. I can understand the concern of industry about that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wallsend also referred to the project side of ECGD. Once again, industry has been vocal in expressing its fears to hon. Members on both sides of the House about that. My hon. Friends have told me that many firms in their constituencies have expressed concern about the future of the long-term project division and about the increases in premiums, some of which have already taken place and others of which seem likely because of the Government's commitment to the portfolio management system for ECGD.

None the less, we are grateful that the Government have decided to maintain a commitment to the project division of ECGD, because there were unpleasant rumours that certain Government Departments favoured the so-called zero option—taking support from the long-term project division. Industrialists greeted that suggestion with widespread alarm. That commitment to ECGD is very important.

In reply to a written question of mine this week, the Government said that they are now going to consult further before deciding whether finally to introduce the portfolio management system. I am glad to hear that. The reservations expressed to us by industrialists made us worry about prospects for exports if the system had been introduced in the way in which the Government originally envisaged. ECGD and the project side is not just some marginal benefit that is given to companies. It can mean the difference between winning and losing an order. Often fairly minor costs determine whether an order is won.

Mr. Ted Garrett: The Minister will agree that a question of morality is involved. Industrialists like to think that the Government are interested in what they are doing and that the Department in particular is very keen to help them. There has been a tendency to drift from that view. The Minister may challenge that remark, but manufacturers think that the Government are drifting from being interested in their interests.

Ms. Quin: My hon. Friend makes a valid point, and I reinforce it. Many people in industry feel that the avowedly non-interventionist, hands-off approach that the Department of Trade and Industry wants to espouse is not in the best interests of industry, particularly when it seems that many of our competitors are adopting a different approach.

The hon. Member for Nuneaton said that he felt strongly that the playing field should be level and that we should not be disadvantaged by the extra support that other countries might be giving. That reinforces my hon. Friend's point. Opposition Members are committed to ECGD and the short- and long-term aspects of its business. ECGD is not feather-bedding industry. It does not absolve companies in this country from going out and winning orders, complying with the technical requirements that may be laid down by overseas customers, and delivering in terms of quality and punctuality. Exporters must still comply with all those things, but they need the export credit assistance that seems to be available to our main competitors.

Ministers have occasionally expressed the view that large companies in particular are sufficiently equipped to look after themselves, but I remind the Minister that large companies subcontract a great deal of their work to smaller companies, and the economic health of large and small companies is therefore linked. Measures that may be taken because large companies can stand on their own may have an unpleasant spin-off effect on smaller industries, and I hope that the Minister will bear that point in mind.

We do not want business to be deterred from winning export orders, particularly, as was mentioned by the hon. Member for Nuneaton, in the newly opened markets of eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. One of the worries that have been expressed to me is that the premiums for ECGD-supported business to the Soviet Union have increased considerably of late. Although, I understand that, in the changing situation in the Soviet Union, the commercial risk looks rather different from what it was in the past, the Soviet Union, whatever one thought of its regime, was a reliable customer and never defaulted. This is not the time to make it more difficult for companies to do business with the Soviet Union, particularly when, politically, we want to make the point that we support the reforms taking place in that country. We do not want to create more economic and political difficulties in that country. Although I can understand some of the commercial judgments behind the increase in premiums, the political aspect must be borne in mind.

Several hon. Members have mentioned the help that other countries give exporters. It is difficult to find accurate information on the level of export support that other countries give, but I was supplied with some figures from EEC sources in a publication entitled "First Survey of State Aids". It certainly seems as though France, in particular, and Italy spend a good deal more on state aid to trade and exports—2 billion ecu for France and 1 billion ecu for Italy, but only 749 million ecu for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cash: If the hon. Lady is seeking to suggest that state aids are good in the context of the single market, will she bear in mind the fact that the consequence of giving unfair subsidies in the form of state aids in any sector within the single market is bound to distort the market and, in turn, lead to a situation in which we do not have a level playing field? We will end up giving unfair advantages to one part of the community as against another. That is the way to destroy, not to improve, the benefits of the single market.

Ms. Quin: I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman is suggesting that we should stop state aids and let everybody else give state aids. If that were the outcome, our position would become even worse. There must be EEC and wider international agreement on a range of state aids and subsidies. Agreements already exist. Sometimes we understandably worry that those agreements are not always being properly respected, and we must pay attention to that matter also. It is not helpful to talk about state aid as a distortion when we are trying to tackle our economic and export performance at present.

Mr. Cash: It would certainly be true that, if agreements could be arrived at through GATT in which we eliminated the distortions, that would be fine. However, an unlevel playing field is the difficulty. That is the point that I was making.

Ms. Quin: We have all agreed on the need for a level playing field. The hon. Gentleman and I might disagree on what kind of EEC and international system of subsidies we might like. Many of us, including myself, regard regional assistance as an important element and think that it should allow for all countries in which there are clearly demonstrated regional difficulties. In the general sense of wanting a level playing field, I agree with the hon. Gentleman.

We should examine the amount of direct aid to exports that other countries are giving and see whether we can learn something from the services that they provide. It is a matter not of criticising high levels of aid but of looking at the ways in which other companies are successful in promoting exports in certain sectors and across the board.

The Government have made some strange decisions lately regarding exports and our presence in trying to promote British commercial interests in events and exhibitions abroad. The Minister will know that we have had correspondence about the British Government's failure to accept the invitation to be partner nation at the Hanover trade fair in 1992. That trade fair has been described as Europe's biggest industrial marketplace. It is an honour to be chosen as partner nation. It would give us advantages in the number of exhibits and attention to us and our products.

It is most regrettable that the Government have decided not to take up the opportunity. I understand that the French were very keen to take the opportunity when we declined it. The decision seems to have been made for cost-cutting reasons rather than anything else. Perhaps the Minister will address that point.

There have also been reports, especially in The Guardian, about our strange attitude towards the Seville Expo in 1992. I stress that 1992 is an important year and our presence at those events should be as strong as possible. Perhaps the Minister will tell us in what ways Britain is hoping to maximise the benefits of the Seville event.

The hon. Member for Nuneaton referred to the Government's decision to introduce a range of export charges for firms that want various types of export advice. Although it is clear from the Minister's replies to my written questions that the introduction of the charges has had a mixed result, it seems as if they have acted as a deterrent in one or two sectors. Although it could be argued that, if people pay for something, they are committed to it and believe that they will get something worthwhile from it, I believe that export charges could deter casual inquirers, such as people who feel that the export business might be able to offer them something, but who are not sure. They are the very people we want to attract to exporting. We are all agreed on the need to improve industry's awareness of the export business, and I believe that charges could act as a deterrent in that respect.

I do not know the costs and benefits of the charges in terms of adminstration and collection. Perhaps the Minister could give us some details of that. However, there is little evidence that the charges have had a good effect, and some evidence that their effect has been negative.

There has also been a steep cut in support for export marketing research. I am not sure why the Government took that decision, but it certainly does not seem helpful at present.

In response to an intervention by my hon. Friend the Member for Wallsend, I referred to what has come to be known as the "non-interventionist, hands-off" approach of the Department of Trade and Industry. The Financial Times recently reported that the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry was considering whether the private sector should take over the Department's work of providing export support. It appeared as though the Department might get out of the job of export promotion altogether. I hope that the Minister will give us a clear assurance today that there is no possibility of that.

Hon. Members have referred to some of the campaigns run by the Department, such as the enterprise and export initiatives and the "Europe—Open for Business" initiative. Although such campaigns are important in promoting awareness—I am certainly not decrying them—they must be followed up. The Department should monitor the take-up to ascertain what can be done to improve it in those areas where it has been low.

I should be grateful if the Minister could concentrate on the role of the European accreditation centres, which are responsible for testing goods and certifying that they are in accordance with the EEC standards that were agreed under the 1992 programme. I have been told that there is a dramatic shortage of such facilities in this country and that some firms have to wait up to two years before receiving their certificates.

However, the Department of Trade and Industry recently said in reply to a written question that it did not have information about the average length of time that firms in different parts of the country had to wait for testing facilities. Perhaps the Minister can assure me that the Government now have that information and that, if firms in certain areas are having to wait an inordinate time for their products to be tested, the problem will be rectified quickly.

A recent article in the Newcastle Journal, which is concerned about the shortage of European accreditation centres, pointed out that the testing facility is important for more than just exports. A company that operates in Gateshead and sells to another firm in another part of the north-east must meet those standards and be tested in accordance with them. Therefore, the testing facilities are important not only for our exports to other European countries but for our internal domestic trade. I hope that the Minister will take that point on board.

Perhaps the Minister could also direct the Government's attention to the role of the excellent Euro-information centres that were set up recently, which provide information, especially to small businesses, about events in the European Community, and directives and proposed directives that might affect them. There is an excellent Euro-information centre in Newcastle. I have also visited one in Birmingham and I know that both those centres, which were pilot centres under the EEC scheme, are worried that the temporary funding from the European Community is being phased out. They now have to rely on business sponsorship, which is proving difficult to get.

It is important that the Government make a commitment to the future of those centres and to their valuable work, at least until 1992 but also thereafter, if at all possible. It would be helpful if the centres could know that for the next few years their finances will be on a sound footing, instead of having to worry every day about where the next penny is coming from. That will mean that they can provide a service and get on with the job of supplying the firms in their regions with the information that they have found—and I am sure, will continue to find—so useful.

I recognise that that is not directly the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry, as it involves small firms and comes within the purview of the Department of Employment. None the less, as it is so important to small firms and to exports, I hope that the Minister will bear in mind what I have said.

We need to learn from what many other countries, especially Japan and Korea, have done in targeting markets and co-ordinating various export promotion instruments to ensure that we can do better in various sectors and various markets in the future than has been the case in the recent past.

The hon. Member for Nuneaton referred to eastern Europe, which is obviously an important area for us in the future. I recognise that the countries of eastern Europe cannot buy expensive imports from west European countries with hard currency. However, given the importance of regenerating the economies of those countries and of tackling their severe environmental pollution, it is important that we consider a trade and aid package that would involve British firms in supplying much of the equipment needed, either to tackle environmental pollution or to help regenerate those economies. Again, perhaps the Minister will comment on that.

It is depressing to note that, last year, not only did we have a bad trade balance with most of the countries of western Europe but we had a negative one with East Germany, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia and Romania. The gloom was relieved only by the small surplus that we had with Hungary and Bulgaria. The figures for trade between western and eastern Europe show the domination of West Germany and the poor United Kingdom position. While we admire German success, it would not be healthy for the future balanced economic development of Europe if the figures for exports and imports remained as they are.

As the House of Commons Select Committee on Trade and Industry noted, we have opportunities in eastern Europe, particularly as we have a language advantage, because in many of the eastern European countries, English is the most widely spoken foreign language. We should capitalise on that important asset.

The Labour party is keen to see an active and decentralised Department of Trade and Industry working with industry and firms in the regions, and providing them with regional export service. Such regional departments would co-ordinate with the other bodies concerned with export promotion, such as the chambers of commerce, which are increasingly active in this sector.

I strongly support what my hon. Friend the Member for Wallsend said about the need for a professional approach to the business of exporting. He quoted the interesting example of Taiwan, where it was clear that we were falling behind other countries in trade promotions. The need for a more professional service is as important as it ever was. We should encourage the recruitment into the Department of Trade and Industry or the Foreign Office export service of people who already have experience in exporting but who have not gone through the Civil Service career structure. Towards the end of the last Labour Government, proposals along these lines were introduced, but I believe that they have never been acted on.

The Library has provided with me with some interesting information, which clearly shows that we run a substantial trade surplus in military equipment and identified defence equipment. As we know, there are concerns about the prospects of that export sector. That is why the Labour party believes that the arms diversification agency that we have suggested, which would encourage and assist firms to find new markets and move away from their traditional products, is vital.

I was perturbed to hear a Minister in the Department of Trade and Industry say recently during question time, in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett), that firms were fully capable of changing their production and finding new markets. The Government must take a considerable and active interest in this sector to ensure that we do not lose. We do not want the surplus in the military trade to be lost and diversification in that sector to lead to an even more outrageous deficit on our balance of payments.

Mr. Grylls: What role does the hon. Lady see for the Government in this process of switch or diversification from military to civil work? How can they help firms to diversify? The real incentive to diversify is the firm's, because if it does not do so and its armament orders drop, it will go out of business.

Ms. Quin: A firm that sees its markets declining will have a real incentive to diversify, as it will have to move into other markets to survive. However, Government bodies, particularly the export service, have a certain amount of expertise, even if it is not as great as many would like, and they can do a great deal to advise firms. In the past four or five years, France has worked hard to improve, and has improved, its balance of payments position, which was weak. It has done so by a co-operative effort between the Government and industry. That is a good example of how we should be working more actively, and we should follow it.

Export assistance from Government is not the only important factor. The general economic climate is also of enormous importance in determining whether firms will be able to export successfully or even survive. The Government have been responsible for many failures and the deterioration in the economic climate in recent years. The regions of the United Kingdom continue to lag behind the rate of manufacturing investment in 1979. The figures from 1979 to 1987 show that there was a decline in manufacturing investment in the northern region of 43 per cent. That is an enormous reduction.

Investment, training and research and development are vitally important for the future health of our economy and future opportunities for our firms to export. The Confederation of British Industry has rightly criticised the Government's failure to invest in transport infrastructure. It pointed out that the lack of adequate transport infrastructure is responsible for creating considerable economic difficulties for firms. Most Governments would see investment in transport as a clear Government responsibility.

The hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) mentioned the difficulties that firms experience in certain areas as a result of the introduction of the uniform business rate. The publication Forum of Private Business said recently that it had warned the Minister of the dangers of the uniform business rate, and claims that its 1990 survey proves it right. The survey showed that 45,000 businesses failed, 135,000 jobs were lost and various sectors incurred steep rises in costs following the introduction of the rate. Despite its name, it is clear that the effect of the uniform business rate has not been uniform. Businesses in some areas have found their circumstances better than those in others. It is clear that the burden of the rate has fallen heavily on particular businesses in particular parts of the country.

I have raised many issues to which I hope the Minister will respond. We all agree that exports are an important matter. Initially I was surprised that the hon. Member for Nuneaton chose the subject, given the Government's record, but I accept that he is worried about the future of British industry. As he has a constituency in an area such as the west midlands, I am not surprised. The exports record of the past 11 years has been very bad indeed, and the best alternative for Britain is to turn to Labour.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. John Redwood): I am grateful to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, for calling me at this stage in the debate.

Before I begin, I wish to reply to the point of order of the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) about the earthquake in Iran. The House will be delighted to know that Britain is sending relief supplies to the victims of the earthquake in Iran. We hope that they will be there by the weekend. The emergency aid will be flown on specially chartered planes and will include medicines, blankets, tents and other relief supplies. That follows the departure early today of a team of British experts from the International Rescue Corps, which sent 17 of its volunteers to help with the search-and-rescue operation. I pay tribute to the speed of its response and wish the volunteers well. Of course, the Government wish to be associated with the expression of sympathy of the Labour party and the House. We are deeply disturbed to read of the tragic loss of life and the difficulties that the families of the victims must be experiencing.

Ms. Quin: I thank the Minister for his statement about the aid provided for the victims of the earthquake. We welcome it. I also thank him for responding to the point of order raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd).

Mr. Redwood: I am grateful to the hon. Lady.

My hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) has performed a great service to the House by raising an important batch of issues related to our manufacturing and export performance and the progress made by our industry in recent years. My hon. Friend comes from an engineering and industrial background. That makes his comments carry even more weight. It is good tc see hon. Members present on both sides who have a similar background and who can bring their experience of industry to bear on these important issues that shape the nation's future.

My hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton is also an extremely good constituency Member of Parliament, and we often hear from him in that connection. I know that in his constituency the textile industry is of considerable importance. I heard what he had to say about the multi-fibre arrangement negotiations. The Government are proceeding with our partners in Europe, because negotiations on the MFA are conducted on behalf of this country and the other 11 member states by the Commission, and it is a common western European policy. The Government have worked with our partners to make it clear that transitional arrangements and protection against surges in imports need to be built into the system.

The House should also note that 83 per cent. of textile imports last year came from developed countries and not from MFA countries. Therefore, the proportion of our imports in the textile sector that is affected by the MFA is quite modest. However, in my hon. Friend's constituency clothing is more important and it is true that the proportion of clothing imports from MFA countries is higher, and is therefore a matter of considerable concern in that sector. That is why we are trying to negotiate satisfactory transitional arrangements. Those issues have been set out for the House on several occasions, by myself and by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, in debates reflecting hon. Members' concern on the subject.

I want to reassure the House that, through the European Community, we are actively pursuing dumping cases if we think that they need to be investigated or that action needs to be taken. Hon. Members may like to know that the EC already has anti-dumping remedies in force against polyester fibre from the United States, Mexico, Romania, Taiwan, Turkey and Yugoslavia; polyester yarn from the United States, Korea, Mexico, Taiwan and Turkey; and acrylic fibres from Mexico. Complaints about alleged dumping of cotton yarn from Brazil, Egypt, India, Thailand and Turkey are currently under investigation as well as of spun polyester yarn from Korea, Taiwan, Indonesia, India, and China, and of terry towelling from Turkey.

The Government will forward any representations or allegations about dumping to the European authorities. We are keen to see genuine cases of dumping pursued with great care, and with all due speed, so that remedies can be imposed and domestic industry is given the reassurances that it needs.

The hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) and my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton also asked what the Government are doing to assist and promote British trade and investment in eastern Europe. My hon. Friend may know that I and my colleagues have been active in recent months taking parties of business men to the countries of eastern and central Europe. We have been keen to take them there to introduce them to Ministers, senior officials and those who will be running state enterprises and privatised industries there, and so that the business men may identify the opportunities. Also, we have been keen to allow our business men to work with us to explain to the Governments of those newly democratic countries what steps they should take to facilitate trade with the West, and to create a more attractive climate for investment by western companies and countries. We have been pleased with the responses of British industry, and of the countries that we visited, which were courteous hosts and keen to learn from us about the legal and financial framework that is needed to make them attractive to western investors. We shall continue to pursue that vigorously.

Our policy is buttressed by the know-how funds that have been established in several of those countries. It can make money available for those wishing to undertake feasibility studies or other work in eastern European countries governed by the funds.

With other member state colleagues we have contributed to a large know-how fund at EC level, which is also open to approaches from British businesses. In addition to our work as tour guides to British industry, the Department and Foreign Office posts in those countries are making information available so that British business men will know more about the changes under way in the law codes and the investment climate, and about whom they should meet and what opportunities are available.

I take issue with the hon. Member for Gateshead, East on one point. She said that none of the eastern European countries would have a significant amount of hard currency with which to purchase western exports. Let us consider the special case of East Germany. Shortly, it will have a large pool of deutschmarks as a result of the conversion of the ostmark to the deutschmark. On a recent trip to Berlin, I observed a considerable inclination on the part of East German companies—especially those in the retail sector—to use some of that spending power to buy western goods. They expect a surge in demand for western-style products immediately after monetary union.

East German consumers are likely to say that they want western-branded goods and western-style packaging and marketing, and, initially, many of those goods will come from the West. I encourage any British business man who thinks that he may have goods to sell that would be an important element in the restocking and re-merchandising of East German stores to make an approach as soon as possible, as that task is already well advanced in the run-up to monetary union. Major promotions and sales are under way in shops in East Berlin in our attempt to remove the traditional COMECON goods and make way for new stocks—many of which, as I have said, will come from the west.

The hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) made a good speech: I was delighted to hear him speak up for British industry and manufacturing—as he always does—and acknowledge that British industry has done a good job in recent years. I take it as a compliment that he thinks that I am too old to be a yuppie. On a busier day, most of the yuppies in the House can now be seen on the Opposition Benches, as they busily carry out the instructions of Mr. Mandelson to put on collars and ties and ape the yuppie style of dressing.

The hon. Member for Wallsend remined the House that it was a Conservative Government who introduced the Select Committee system, and a Labour Government who damaged parliamentary scrutiny. I am proud that this Government have nothing to hide, and are happy to see their policies and actions probed—rightly—by Select Committees, with regularity and often with some incisiveness.

Many other hon. Members—including the Labour party's Front-Bench spokesman, the hon. Member for Gateshead, East—have drawn attention to the Export Credits Guarantee Department. I shall ensure that the views expressed in this debate are passed on to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, and also to my noble Friend the Minister for Trade, who will be examining the way in which the new system can be implemented. My noble Friend will also be carrying out consultations in the way that the hon. Member for Gateshead, East described. Of course, we wish British industry to have access to a good service, in this as in all other areas where the Department of Trade and Industry supports and helps industry and commerce, as business men go about their task of exporting and representing Britain abroad.

There have always been controls on the amount of credit risk in any given country; that will not be a new feature of the portfolio management system, which is a mechanical device—an aid to analysis—to settle realistic premiums in relation to the risk of the country concerned. That may mean that some go down and others up. The Ministers making those decisions will examine the balance of the package and the results of the risk assessment when deciding how to implement the ideas for change.

The hon. Member for Wallsend asked about missions. I agree that missions are an important part of commercial life. They can be valuable to the business men who take part, and sometimes lead to good follow-up business and orders as a result of the contacts made. There has been no intention to circumscribe or cut them down. For example, last year the number of inward missions increased to 84 from the previous year's 69. The number of outward missions—145—was similar to the 152 of the previous year; money had been offered for 160, but only 145 were organised because of various problems with some of the countries originally targeted.

Mr. Grylls: I am sorry slightly to run over what my hon. Friend said earlier, by returning to the credits available to industry in exports. My hon. Friend rightly said that there have always been restrictions per country. Will he assure the House that, when he considers future policy, he will bear it in mind that Britain has always been very successful in many major exporting projects and competes in a very tough world, and will he make sure that our large firms that compete for orders, together with the small firms that they bring in their wake and that are also extremely important, are not disadvantaged compared with firms in other countries such as Japan and West Germany, which compete in the same markets? Although we certainly do not want unnecessary subsidies, if there is to be any scaling down of subsidies, will my hon. Friend ensure that it occurs only in parallel with what is done in other countries so that we are not disadvantaged? I am sure that he will be the first to accept that it is extremely important that we maintain our share of the export market.

Mr. Redwood: I shall make sure that my hon. Friend's comments are drawn to the attention of the Ministers who will be thinking through the next stage of policy for the ECGD. I am grateful to him for his contribution to the debate.

My hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) told us a fascinating story about the structural changes in industry and commerce under way in his constituency in recent years. Many other hon. Members could tell similar stories of the changes that have taken place in their parts of the country. There has been a fantastic process of regeneration, renewal and change, most obviously in towns such as Corby, where the steel industry closed in 1980 with devastating consequences for employment and for the state of that town. Ten years later, Corby is a flourishing, enterprising town with a whole host of new jobs. More than 11,000 new jobs have been created since the collapse of the steel business there. Many of those jobs have better pay and conditions than the ones that they replaced. Of course, we all recognise that the transition was unpleasant and painful, but we should pay tribute to the towns that have managed to recover so well.

Mr. Ted Garrett: Does the Minister agree that it would have been more painful had Corby not had a reservoir of skilled people from the closure of the steelworks and the ancillary industries that supported the steel industry?

Mr. Redwood: I agree that the skills of the local work force were an important part of Corby's renewal, as was the creation of the enterprise zone, the work of all levels of Government to promote Corby and, most importantly, the work of a large number of inward investors in the private sector who backed Corby, gave it a chance and turned it into one of the most enterprising towns in the country in a short time.

The hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), who unfortunately has had to leave the Chamber, alleged that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was trying to get rid of his entire Department into the private sector, but that is simply not true. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and his ministerial team believe that there are important roles for the Department to fulfil and we are making sure that those roles are properly fulfilled and have the right resources to back them up. We do not intend to wind up the entire Department in the way that the hon. Gentleman alleged.

I agree with the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed that there needs to be transparency in other countries on subsidy and aid patterns. That is one of the intentions behind the Commission's monitoring of state aids throughout the European Community. The Government are giving strong backing to the European Commission, particularly to the Competition Commissioner, to make sure that the right data are collected about state aids across the Community and that follow-up action is taken by the Commission to deal with those flagrant abuses of the state aid regime that can distort competition and therefore distort the markets unfairly in the creation of the single market, which we are backing strongly.

I also agree with the hon. Gentleman about the importance of the GATT round, which has to be concluded by the end of the year. The GATT round is attempting to take on entirely new sectors and to include in its remit agriculture and services as well as making further progress in the traditional area of industrial goods. It is vital to the trading prosperity of the entire world that the GATT round makes good progress in the closing months of this year, and the Government are fully committed to doing what they can with their European partners to achieve a good resolution in that GATT round, as we believe that that would make an important contribution to further world growth in the 1990s.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) paid a tribute to me. I promise the House that it was unsolicited and that no bribe or anything improper passed between us. When he enticed me into making a frivolous intervention, I was referring to the categorisation of orchestra exports; I do not wish to be associated with comments that he made about right hon. and hon. Friends, all of whom I much value.

My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne asked me a serious and important question about what would happen if the Government no longer collected statistics. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to conduct economic policy if we had no idea what was happening to the economy. My hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I share concerns about the accuracy and reliability of some of the statistics, which is why the Government have set out a plan for improving the reliability of data, especially on invisible trade, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne drew attention when quoting from the Central Statistical Office's press release on the previous month's balance of payments. He asked what the reporting line is for the CSO, which is through the Treasury and not the Department of Trade and Industry.

Several points were made by the hon. Member for Gateshead, East. She cited certain industries that are in trouble and drew attention to machine tools, shipbuilding and textiles, but there are many success stories within those industries. I hope to show later how an industrial revival is taking place and that it is spreading ever more widely across industrial sectors and across the country as the most difficult regions participate and become the leaders in the next phase of growth, as some are showing signs of doing.

The hon. Lady's question about our single market campaign and backing information for Europe spans more than one Department, but I promise her that the single market campaign run by the Department of Trade and Industry will continue until the completion of the single market in 1992. It goes through phases, and we are beyond the phase in which the main purpose was to explain to businesses that 1992 will happen. That was a successful campaign, and almost every business is aware of it. The campaign is now working, through the regional offices, seminars and other mechanisms, to advise and to work with companies on the coming of the single market.

Mr. Cash: Does my hon. Friend agree that the information aspect of the campaign is immensely important? I pay tribute to him for the work that he has done on it since he took up his responsibilities. Does he agree that it is essential to convey the message not only that, through marketing and distribution techniques, companies can export their goods to other countries, including eastern Europe, but that they must produce goods of the highest quality with the highest productivity? It does not matter what companies are trying to sell if their products are not good enough, because they will not be sold.

Mr. Redwood: My hon. Friend is right. Quality and value for money are essential ingredients to penetrate the wider marketplace. That lies behind the enterprise initiative that the Department of Trade and Industry is fathering, to help smaller and medium-sized companies in particular, which have not always had the resources, to build quality into their systems, and to attack new markets abroad—where there may be language problems, or familiarity problems about how those countries do business in fairly distinct national markets in western Europe—and to help them with production processes and other matters that may be important to achieve the right quality.

Manufacturing can benefit from BS 5750 and all the other standards, which provide a discipline to companies that wish to build quality into their systems. Often, companies that approach that somewhat hesitantly and say, "Oh dear, this will be an added cost and difficulty", discover that it not only lifts the quality and lowers the reject rate of goods but cuts costs by imposing better disciplines on stocks and by cutting the reject rates so that fewer raw materials and inputs are wasted. As my hon. Friend says, that is an important part of building success in the single market.

The hon. Member for Gateshead, East was right to say that campaigns must be monitored. We are all well aware of that and, in one way or another, we monitor what happens as a result of the campaigns. The hon. Lady said that Labour would like to see active and decentralised Department of Trade and Industry offices. There are already regional offices and they have an important role to play in the enterprise initiative and in the current phase of the single market campaign.

The business rate point is an own goal, for two reasons. It offers to business men and women the guarantee that, once the transition is over, the business rate will not go up by more than inflation. It protects them from Labour councils that were doing untold damage to industry and commerce in Labour-controlled areas by producing high increases in the rates in a way that was impossible to predict from year to year, making business planning difficult. It rebounds against the Labour party, because the revaluations and recalculations that form part of the introduction of the unified business rate produce substantial benefits for businesses in the north, especially industrial businesses, which Labour Members represent.

For years, the Labour party has said that we should tackle that problem. This positive measure will help industry in those towns and cities.

Recently, an important financial commentator in the City, one of the big investment houses, said that the 1990s would see Britain becoming the Hong Kong of Europe. The commentator explained clearly that that meant that Britain would become a centre of manufacturing excellence, based on the productivity and skills of our work force. That conclusion has been reached not just by analysts. It has been shown by the inward investment from Nissan, Toyota and Honda. Those companies have said it in ways that speak louder than words. They have brought major manufacturing plants to this country to expand and revitalise the British motor industry. Not just car makers are involved—Bosch, Fujitsu and Motorola are among many major overseas investors that are coming to this country because they recognise that Britain in the 1990s will be an exciting manufacturing centre. It is part of the western European market but has many natural advantages because of its industrial work force and the climate created by the new labour relations legislation of the 1980s and the Government's successful economic policies.

Overall, industrial investment has surged by more than 50 per cent., in volume terms since 1982. That is a sign that overseas investors and investors that are already here are backing Britain and British industry in the most tangible way possible, by spending their money here and by expanding and modernising their factories.

My hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford pointed out that it was not just a case of manufacturing success and that Britain, too, is an important service provider. I agree with him on that point and I agree that it is invidious to make distinctions between the contribution of manufacturing and the contribution that service providers make to the wealth and creativity of this country. Both are equally important. To achieve a successful modern economy, we must understand the mutual dependence of the service sector and industry and the way in which both need to develop in particular directions.

The British service sector, especially financial services, made an important contribution to British economic growth and success in the 1980s. The international stock exchange, for example, accounts for 65 per cent. of all the international trade in equities that takes place outside the country of origin of the quoted company. That is two thirds in London alone—more than in New York and Tokyo combined. It is a towering achievement. London is the world's foremost foreign exchange centre. It is not second to Tokyo or third behind Tokyo and New York. It is the biggest and is an important marketplace. London contains within the confines of the City and the over-spill of the City further east and west a vast concentration of insurance companies, investment houses and other service providers and support businesses. In 1989 there was a huge surplus of £8·9 billion for the balance of payments on the financial services that we exported over and above the services that we imported. In addition, thanks to the massive overseas investment in recent years, £4·6 billion of net income came from abroad across the services account.

Not so long ago, Labour Members cheered up and took delight in possible misery because they thought that the invisible account had dipped into deficit. We started getting a series of questions as to why the account was in deficit and how terrible that was. The figures have been reworked and we discover that the invisible account has never been in deficit. I hope that the Opposition will share my pleasure that there was no deficit. The enormous contribution made by our service sector should not go without remark.

Ms. Quin: The Opposition were glad that the reported deficit turned out not to be a deficit. None the less the Minister would be surprised if we did not comment on serious trade figures. We are concerned about our overall trade deficit and I hope that the Minister is too.

Mr. Redwood: I am, of course, concerned to see that Britain trades well. I agree that it is important that invisibles should trade well. That has been happening and will continue to happen. In the first quarter of this year, there was a surplus of over £700 million on the invisible account despite the fact that we are still making heavy payments to the European Community. Those Government transfers are deducted from the money made by our private sector service providers.

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West): Does the Minister realise that those figures explain why we are so alarmed? A surplus of £700 million is derisory. In the past invisibles held the balance and we always had an adequate surplus to outweigh the deficit on visibles. This is not happening any more. The £700 million goes nowhere towards meeting the £16 billion deficit on manufacturing alone.

Mr. Redwood: The right hon. Gentleman has foreseen my next subject. If we are to address the balance of payments deficit, we must first ask how big the deficit is. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne for pointing out that the figures are often inaccurate and often revised.

Last year, there was a £15 billion black hole in the figures. I do not know whether the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) wants to contest that point. The statisticians themselves admit that they cannot pin down £15 billion, which is almost the whole deficit. Why might that have been?

There are two serious explanations, which we should examine. One possibility is that we were exporting more services and that the invisible account was far stronger than the figures revealed. An element of that black hole is accounted for by just that point. Why do I believe that? Work has gone on in the United States, which has had a similar problem with a large apparent deficit and a large black hole in the figures. The Americans have carried out additional sampling and issued questionnaires in their service sector and have discovered that the old samples and the old questionnaires were not capturing the growth, the dynamism and the changes within the service sector itself. There was a great understatement of service exports in the United States, which is now being detected through new questionnaires.

An element of that could be seen in the British figures and I welcome the decisive move by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to improve the quality of the statistics. We shall discover that some service exports are underrecorded.

Mr. Cash: My hon. Friend will know that 60 per cent. of our trade deficit is with the European Community. Difficulties may be presented in invisibles when services that we could provide are prevented from entering

[Mr. Cash]

Germany, for example. That creates the sort of imbalance that enables the trade of Germany to have a surplus with the whole of the rest of the European Community of 70 per cent. Will my hon. Friend comment on that?

Mr. Redwood: I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash), who is quite right that on the stated figures the deficit with Germany is large and that it is an important component of the total. One of the complaints that we have had in recent meetings of the Internal Market Council, which I attend on behalf of the Government, is that, having opened up our market in manufactured goods and welcomed many German imports of good quality machinery and consumer goods we expect reciprocity in the marketplace for services. We think that our investment and insurance companies have something to offer the German public, which they might like to buy if the market were less constrained by regulation.

My hon. Friend will be pleased to know that, at the IMC this Wednesday, we made some progress because the other member states agreed with us—not with the Germans—that we had to make progress in liberalising the insurance market. We agreed a motor services directive, which does not go nearly as far as we should have liked, but which will be an important signal to the Commission and to the Community as a whole that most member states want progress in insurance, and we expect a much more dramatic move from the Commission when it brings forward its two passport directives for insurance, which will mean that British insurance companies meeting our regulatory requirements will be able to trade in Germany or France with little additional regulatory hassle.

That is what we intend to deliver for Britain, and we are now building support in the Community. My hon. Friend is quite right to say that the market must be fair and we must be able to export goods and services that we are good at providing as well as importing goods and services that our partners are good at providing.

The second possible explanation of the £15,000 million black hole in the figures is that there has been a major underrecording of inward capital flows. I immediately agree that that is a likely explanation for a substantial part of the black hole. What that means is that we have been a much more impressive magnet for inward investment than even the Government have been led to believe by the figures that we have had before us so far. That would be all at one with the picture of a country growing far faster in recent years than its trend rate of growth in the 1960s and the 1970s and with the analysis of many outside commentators and business men, who say that Britain is now a foremost manufacturing and investment centre in Europe and an attractive place to which to bring business.

The growth of manufacturing and the success of the economy have produced some problems, with rapid growth in demand in the past couple of years sucking in a large number of imports. Our problem has not been a shortage of exports or an inability on the part of our exporters to do well. Several of my hon. Friends have already pointed out the great export success that we were recording in the 1980s. It was because domestic demand had grown so quickly and because imports were being sucked in rapidly that the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced measures to curb domestic demand, and those measures will begin to have an impact on the import of consumer goods. Figures published today show that the import of cars, for example, is now declining, which is exactly what one would expect after years of rapid growth based on a major expansion of real incomes.

The successes of the 1980s are quite astonishing: national income up by more than a quarter; exports of manufactures up by more than half in volume terms; real take-home pay up by about a third; manufacturing productivity up by more than half; and car output up by a third. Those are remarkable achievements. Those are the successes that we could never achieve in the 1970s with the interventionist policies that then ruled the roost, and the successes that we were told could never be achieved in the 1980s with our policies. Yet they are there for all to see. Our performance has been one of the most impressive in the western world in all those respects. At the same time, in 1979, Britain had a mere £12,000 million-worth of net overseas assets, whereas today it has £110,000 million-worth of net overseas assets. That represents a ninefold expansion of our national savings abroad, routed through the financial markets in which we are so successful.

How has all that come about? My hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton drew attention to the way in which the aerospace industry, Rolls-Royce in particular in his constituency and ICI in some of its high-tech areas, have been successful in developing new ideas and exploiting market opportunities. I agree with my hon. Friend.

Mr. Ted Garrett: And the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Redwood: As the hon. Member for Wallsend says, the pharmaceutical industry has also been successful. I also pay tribute to it because it is a prime example of a British industrial success story. Several major companies based in the United Kingdom export to the world and have a research and development record second to none.

I have three examples, in addition to the examples refered to by my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford and my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton of wht can happen in particular industries. My first example is the printing industry.

The British printing industry did not have a particularly good reputation when the Conservative Government took office. Parts of it were definitely dogged by labour relations problems and other difficulties with investment and developing for the future. However, there was a tremendous transformation across the board in the printing industry in the latter part of the 1980s. An important part of that was permitted by the legislation that we passed to allow more sensible relations between managers and men and to allow individual trade union members rights to decide and influence the shape of their union's policy and to choose the people who led them. With the efforts of management, that has resulted in a massive expansion in technology and productivity.

In the latter years of the 1980s, the printing industry was cutting its unit labour costs and by so doing was becoming more competitive and doing well in world markets. That industry has continued to have a balance of trade surplus which is a useful contribution to this country's economy at a time when, in several industrial areas, because of the massive expansion in demand, imports have grown even more rapidly than exports.

My second example relates directly to the Government's care and concern for manufacturing as revealed in our pursuit of privatisation policies. The transformation in the British steel industry in all respects is staggering. In 1978-79, it took 14·3 man hours to make a tonne of steel. Today it takes 4·7. The productivity increase has been over 200 per cent., and that increase is now protecting jobs in the steel industry where, in the 1970s, there were massive job losses because there was no productivity improvement and the industry constantly lost market share. Those improvements have led directly to a surge in profitability which enables investment in new plants and technology to be undertaken.

In 1979-80 total losses including write-offs of capital amounted to almost £1,800 million. In 1988-89 British Steel's profits were £733 million. It is important to understand the central role of profits in providing the cash and the incentives for investment. That has made British Steel once again a force to be reckoned with in world steel markets. Building on that success should sustain that industry in future.

Ms. Quin: The Minister's words will sound hollow to the 800 or so workers at Ravenscraig who are worried about their jobs and to the 1,000 workers at the Brymbo mill in north Wales. Will the Minister respond to my point about the prospects for new technological investment in Ravenscraig, which should be a centre for the new technology that is being tried in the United States and Italy?

Mr. Redwood: The essential point is that jobs would not be safe in the steel industry if the industry was not productive, competitive and making money. Of course, the profits give British Steel several options as to where it invests and how to build for the future. However, it will have a future only if it has that money. I cannot give the hon. Lady any guidance on the individual investment plans of British Steel. That is a matter for the board of British Steel. I am sure that the hon. Lady can elucidate that information from the board in the normal way.

The third industry is the motor industry, where it is a different story again. The first story was of a competitive industry in the private sector that responded to new legislation. The second story was of a nationalised industry that was transformed by privatisation. The motor industry had been reasonably successful in the private sector, but it had a poor performing public sector component in the 1970s. It is now being expanded and developed at a rapid pace because there has been a big influx of new technology, new ideas, new money and new factories led by Japanese investors.

What did the Opposition say about that? A few years ago, the Leader of the Opposition roundly condemned what he called the colonisation of British industry. He was trying to make it as unattractive as possible for people to come here, and he was scornful of industry. Some of his right hon. and hon. Friends cast aspersions when investors came here, saying that they would be only screwdriver factories and were not worth having. At least they were better than the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), who called for the nationalisation of Vauxhall, Ford and Peugeot. What an incentive that is to a new inward investor trying to bring private investment into this country.

Mr. Alan Williams: Hon. Members have heard a degree of preposterousness that I cannot allow to go by. The Department must have briefed the Minister. Is he aware that inward investment did not start in 1979? In that Department I provided the grants to bring Ford to Bridgend, and conducted the negotiations to bring Hitachi and Toshiba to this country. We had an active policy on inward investment. We also had a bipartisan attitude towards it. I can remember when the first Minister of State in the Department of Trade and Industry, Adam Butler, talked to a group of Japanese would-be investors. He undid the bipartisan approach by saying how much worse it would be if ever there were a Labour Government. There were Japanese looking for long-term investment having to accept the fact that there are different Governments. We have always played on a bipartisan basis. I am astonished that the hon. Gentleman is taking that line. I assume that he has a brief.

Mr. Redwood: I have done my homework and I have seen the quotes that substantiate what I have been saying. I am delighted that the right hon. Gentleman agrees about the value of inward investment. I am sure that some Opposition Members would wish to associate themselves with that process. I pay tribute to those who have done so.

There has also been an unwelcome strand of criticism from some Opposition Members, and aspersions, such as the "screwdriver" aspersion, have been cast. That is unhelpful. The Japanese are bringing in design and technology, and they are seeking to employ highly talented British people to manage and design within their plants and factories. I hope that everyone will accept that that is the way to go forward, in exactly the same way as many Labour and Conservative Members welcomed inward investment from America several decades ago, which was an important part of the growth of the motor industry in those days.

The question of the magic ingredients for export and industrial success is often raised. Sometimes people urge us to follow the Japanese more closely. There are many things about the way in which the Japanese go about business that we can emulate or learn from. They have been particularly active in introducing just-in-time systems. They have the idea that design should proceed by incremental advances and steps, improving products bit by bit in their approach to quality and to labour relations in many of their factories. We can learn from all that.

The Opposition also said that we should learn from the amount of money that the Ministry of International Trade and Industry uses to subsidise and encourage Japanese industry. I do not know whether the Opposition have done their homework. If we were to follow exactly what Japan does by way of subsidy and grant to industry proportionate to our GNP, we would have to reduce our current level of subsidy and grant. That may not be what people have in mind.

Others say that the Japanese are still too protective by tariff. If we are to reach the point at which EC tariffs are in line with Japanese tariffs, on average the EC tariffs will have to come down, not the Japanese. However, we hope that the whole world will make great progress on tariffs, multilaterally through GATT. It is to that that we intend to turn our mind, and to dedicate our efforts in the closing months of this year.

The message from successful exporting industries, whether in this country or among our leading competitors overseas, is that the first prerequisite of export success is a lively domestic market. The Japanese vehicle and electronics industry, the German chemical industry, the United States computer industry and our British pharmaceutical industry have all established world leadership in many products and export successfully. They all have a similar formula. They are based on several competitive major companies in the country concerned and they are often—this is especially true of Japan—based on a substructure of dozens, hundreds or even thousands of highly competitive small and medium-sized enterprises that work as suppliers, advisers and service providers to those industries.

[Mr. Redwood]

Those are the conditions that we have been re-creating in this country and which account for the staggering growth in productivity, exports, and general economic performance in the 1980s.

As we look to the 1990s, our trade performance and our general manufacturing performance will be more and more determined by the disciplines of the European Community. I agree with my hon. Friends who say that British industry and commerce have always looked far more widely than western Europe, and must continue to do so. Of course, there are huge opportunities in the English-speaking world, where the markets are even more approachable because of the common language, and there are also many market opportunities in the developing world, where we have strong links and are often highly respected.

However, the policy framework is based on EC policies of more competition, no recourse to devaluation as a policy instrument, a prohibition on most types of state aid and subsidy, and growing strength in policing the state aids regime. In that climate, it will be even more important than in the 1980s for industry and commerce to turn their minds to constant improvements in quality, value added, and in manufacturing productivity. Only with such a concentration can we hope to survive and prosper in these competitive markets of western Europe and beyond, in the post-GATT world of the early 1990s.

It is a disappointing spectacle to look across the Chamber, asking oneself what advice the Opposition are giving us on policy. Their policies are all either rehashed policies from the 1970s or retread policies from the 1960s. They say that we need a new DTI, with greater stature, but what they are recommending looks very like the Department of Economic Affairs that they tried in the 1960s and which failed so miserably.

Do you remember that, Madam Deputy Speaker? They were left holding a national plan that was a pure figment of their imagination. There were endless rows with the Treasury, which would never surrender the power of the purse—and nor should it, because it is the Treasury that must provide the economic and financial discipline to run the economy and our economic policy. However, that is what the Labour party is recommending again for the DTI, and, if it were adopted, it would fail again.

The Opposition also advocate a national investment bank. It is a rerun of the old National Enterprise Board, which lost money and destroyed jobs. That is exactly what a revamped national investment bank would do, but on a far grander scale.

The Opposition also propose a national minimum wage and a training levy. That means a massive increase in industry's costs, which would make it far more difficult for us to be competitive in the competitive world of the 1990s.

Labour's income tax policy would soak anybody on more than £20,000 a year. That policy is targeted to hit the middle managers, the designers and the marketers—those who go out and sell our exports, the very people who are essential to building the strength of this country's industry and its success in world trading.

There is also the Opposition's idea about more and more subsidy. I must advise the Labour party that that would be illegal under the treaty of Rome. The whole point of the Commission's attack on state aids is to ensure that such a policy is not pursued in any member state.

Finally, there is the incredible budget—the £20 billion to £50 billion of spending pledges that are to be financed by no tax increases on the bulk of the population. That one simply will not wash. There is no way that we could follow a policy like that, because it suspends the laws of arithmetic.

The way forward is through GATT, and through co-operation within Europe to get a fair and level playing field for all our businesses. It is through building on the great successes of British industry in the 1980s, increasing productivity, stressing quality, going forward with new products and being proud again to be British in the markets of the world. That is why there has been such a restoration of fortunes in the 1980s and that is why the 1990s will be even better.

1.30 pm

Mr. Michael Grylls (Surrey, North-West): This debate, initiated so well by my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens), is one of the most important for the House, particularly because of the debate about the development of the 1992 market and economic and monetary developments in Europe. Against such a background, it could not be more important for us to have a debate about the general trade position.

There has been a certain amount of discussion about the balance of payments. The hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) spoke about the deficit in our balance of trade. However, as the EEC market develops, we may shortly be looking at it rather differently. We shall be concerned more with the figures on trade between the EEC, perhaps an expanded one, and the rest of the world, than with those on made between us and the EEC, which will be irrelevant. We shall come to see trade within the EEC rather as the United States sees trade between California and Florida. That will be a great change. My hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), who has had to leave, made several points about statistics, and they are well known to be inaccurate. A lot of time and taxpayers' money is spent on getting these figures, but I doubt whether they are accurate.

It is easy for Members of Parliament to slip into the habit of criticising imports and saying that they are bad and only exports are good. One cannot export if one does not import. Trade has to be balanced. Perhaps it is just a matter of justified pride that we like to see our goods and firms doing well in the overseas markets, and British products on the shelves of shops overseas. Many of us like to buy British goods in our high streets, and that is proper. In the free trade world that both sides of the House want to develop from the current international negotiations, some of those factors will be less important.

I shall spend a few minutes on one aspect of export trade. Not many years ago, the House would have been unlikely to debate export-import business and trade. It was assumed that most firms were able to undertake their own exports. If they were successful, they were successful, and if they were not, they were not. They went round the world doing their business and getting their orders and needed no help—certainly not from the House of Commons. They might have needed some help from the export department, the ECGD and other such organisations, and from foreign missions, but by and large, it was not necessary for Parliament to take an active part.

That is probably still true today of most large companies, which are able to find their export markets and to till the ground in important markets without any great help or encouragement from the Government. It is perhaps those firms which are not so successful—the rather more flabby firms—which sit back and say, "The Government should help us and encourage us more." I am not sure that it is really necessary for the Government to help them.

I intervened in my hon. Friend the Minister's speech to mention help for some construction firms. All our construction firms must compete on the international market. I shall leave aside the large firms which, by and large, can look after themselves. I wish to concentrate on small and medium-sized businesses.

About 70 per cent. of all businesses in Britain do no export trade whatever. Therefore, there is a vast pool of businesses, many—probably most—of them small and medium-sized which have not yet put their toe in the water of exporting. In that area the Government have a role to play. They must encourage, help and lead such businesses forward until they take the plunge into exporting throughout the world. Of course, Government expenditure on encouraging exports must be cost-effective. We cannot spend large sums of taxpayers's money unnecessarily. Of the 1,400 new businesses created—it is nice to see the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on the Labour Front Bench agree with me and say what good news that is. He always welcomes good news for Britain. The good news is that there is a net gain each week of 1,400 new firms, taking into account firms which go out of business for one reason or another.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): I make it clear to the hon. Gentleman that I am not agreeing with what he says. I am chastising the Minister for his speech not so long ago.

Mr. Grylls: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will think again about any chastisement. I should be the first to leap to the defence of my hon. Friend the Minister. He gave an intelligent and broad-ranging speech. The hon. Gentleman has not been in the Chamber for the entire morning so perhaps he has not yet picked up the flavour of the debate. He should think again about chastising my hon. Friend and I hope that he will not chastise me.

As I said, 1,400 new firms are created each week. There is a vast pool of businesses which should be able to export. In all seriousness I say to my hon. Friend the Minister that we should encourage our export departments, overseas posts and commercial offices to pay greater attention to those businesses. They should encourage the pool of non-exporters to put their toe in the water and take advantage of the huge opportunities.

One of the greatest myths or popular misconceptions put about is that a firm can export only if it is a global business. It is a silly, facile phrase written in articles and so on, but no one understands what it means. There may be a need for global businesses in some areas but it is mainly the smaller firms which will get up and go.

I participated in a trade delegation to Tokyo about 18 months ago. It included delegates from about 16 small to medium-sized firms. None of them have ever been to Japan before, and many had done virtually no exporting. The firms employed on average 50 or 60 people. When we arrived in Tokyo I asked if I could help in any way. The business men looked at me as though I was crazy because as soon as they arrived they simply got stuck in. To them Tokyo was like any other market. They had done their research. Appointments had been made for them extremely efficiently by the commercial department of the British embassy in Tokyo. Although Tokyo was a strange city different from anywhere else that they had been, they got cracking. By the end of the visit many of them said that they believed that they would do business.

Some months later I invited those business men to the House for a drink to find out how they had done. Without exception they were doing business as a result of the trade delegation. That impresses me because they were not moaning and groaning about trade barriers and problems in Japan—which is a difficult and demanding export market because the country is very rich. They started exporting.

Firms in the delegation that I mentioned had their fares subsidised and, to that extent, were given a leg-up. Therefore, we can help, not necessarily by subsidies, but by encouraging people and giving them information. In this age of information technology surely we should be able to persuade even quite small firms to have a VDU so that information on potential contracts could be flashed round the country simultaneously. It would take ages to do that by letter and that would be nonsense today. I hope that we can get information to the hundreds of thousands of British firms which could be exporting if they were given more encouragement.

Also it would be useful to encourage small firms to set up subsidiaries overseas. Sometimes it is assumed that only large firms can afford overseas subsidiaries, and that has generally been the case in the past. However, I can offer an example in France where an organisation was set up a few years ago called APIME—an association of small and medium-sized businesses—to help establish overseas subsidiaries, among other things. When Renault was setting up a plant in Morocco, its management asked APIME to help it get suppliers of nuts and bolts in France to set up subsidiaries in Morocco. The company thought that Moroccan businesses should supply it, so that all the parts did not have to come from France, but Morocco had no indigenous suppliers of motor car parts. A number of smaller firms which supplied Renault in France set up subsidiaries to supply its plant in Morocco, and those companies started to do very well. That is a lesson from which we can learn. We must encourage small and medium-sized firms to set up subsidiaries overseas. Assistance need not necessarily come from the Government. Large British firms which are successful overseas could help, as did Renault.

If a small or medium-sized firm has half a dozen subsidiaries round the world, it will become a stronger firm generally, and will be more able to compete effectively in the international market.

The Minister has given a good account of what the Government have done to encourage firms to sell overseas.

[Mr. Grylls]

In future, can we concentrate that much more on small and medium-sized firms, which have an increasing part to play in the expansion of Britain's export trade?

1.43 pm

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West): In the past the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) and I have agreed on a few issues, but we have disagreed on many more. However, I agree when he says that in general we welcome investment overseas, but we must bear it in mind that that is not necessarily always beneficial. Investment overseas is beneficial only if profits are repatriated. Investment overseas requires a capital outflow and a loss of exports, which will be produced in the local market abroad rather than being exported from Britain. Unless profits are repatriated there will be a net capital outflow, and a diminution of the balance of payments figures.

During his brief and welcome appearance at the Dispatch Box, my hon. Friend the Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) mentioned the Minister's comments. However, he missed the real gem—the Minister's reference to the new business rate. He had, he said, discovered that businesses throughout the country welcomed it, because it had put an end to the drip of blood that they had endured under the old rating system. The Government have come to the rescue: they have slashed all the arteries. The Minister seems to believe that killing off businesses quickly is an act of kindness.

Earlier, the Minister referred to the need for meaningful and accurate statistics. My hon. Friend the Member for Ashfield would have enjoyed that, too. How, the Minister inquired of one of his colleagues, can policy be meaningful if those who developed that policy do not know the basis on which they are working? That, of course, is quite true; but, if it is true when applied to an analysis of trade and industry, it must also be true when applied to an analysis of unemployment and poverty. While working to improve the accuracy of statistics in the commercial sector, the Government have indulged in practices that have rendered those other, social statistics virtually meaningless.

The time of the debate is propitious, as yet another set of trade figures has been published today. The Minister seemed to find them encouraging. Certainly they are not as bad as the last lot, but the deficit is still running at more than £15 billion a year: that should not please any Minister.

The key to the balance of payments problem lies in manufacturing. According to the Minister's predecessor —now Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office—the trouble was that the Opposition were dewy-eyed about manufacturing, and did not understand the potential of invisibles. Given the factors to which the Minister attributed the poor trade in visibles, he will surely understand why we regard manufacturing as crucial to the country's long-term survival.

Whatever the Minister may say, the evidence of one simple set of figures cannot be ignored. When the Government came to office, the manufacturing trade surplus was £3 billion; now the deficit is £16 billion. That enormous transformation accounts for most of our present difficulties. But the problem is not just the reversal from surplus to deficit; it is the fact that it has happened in the high-technology sector. We have a £1.5 billion deficit in office and data processing equipment, telecommunications and sound equipment and electrical machinery, and a £7 billion deficit in road vehicles.

Not only did the Government destroy 20 per cent. of our manufacturing when they came to office; they completely failed to recognise the need to exploit the high-technology and high-value-added sectors.

Mr. Redwood: Is the right hon. Gentleman denying that, in volume terms, manufacturing exports increased by more than half over the 1980s? Does not he understand that, in a fast-growing economy with a large amount of demand, good export performance can co-exist with deficits in some sectors? The fact that people are buying even more than we are producing in this country is a sign of the strength of the economy.

Mr. Williams: With respect, when we are exporting anvils and importing Porsches, we are not getting a very good deal. That is why a manufacturing surplus of £3 billion has become a deficit of £16 billion. Does the Minister not understand the figures? They are quite simple and straightforward, and I have specified the sectors in which the deficits are occuring.

Mr. Stevens: Does not the right hon. Gentleman accept that the electronic and computer sectors, which involve fairly advanced technology, were already in deficit in 1979, although competition has been broadly maintained since then and the deficit has roughly kept pace with the expansion in the industry?

Mr. Williams: Inevitably, some tend to be in deficit and others tend to be in surplus, but if one looks across the spectrum, high-technology industries tend to be in deficit, and I shall explain the reasons for that. The hon. Gentleman referred to the screwdriver industry and that is relevant to my argument. We are into assembly and low-technology industries, but we are not into high-technology industries.

Just a fortnight ago I asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what manufacturing investment would have been in Britain over the past decade had we sustained the average rate of growth that occurred in 1974-79—a period that he and his party condemn as a time of failure. The Chancellor's answer, which can be checked in Hansard, was that we would have invested £30 billion more in British industry had we maintained the growth rate of the 1970s. Those figures are almost meaningless, but if we put it another way, that is the equivalent of 50 Sunderland Nissans. That success was cast aside because, as soon as the Government took office, far from recognising the importance of manufacturing, they cut manufacturing investment by 30 per cent. and spent the next 10 years getting back to where they started.

I put it to the Chancellor that perhaps it is unfair to expect the Government to maintain the high standards of manufacturing investment that were reached under a Labour Government; what would have occurred had they managed to match the growth rate of the French in the 1980s? The Chancellor told me that over a period of eight years we would have had £16 billion more in manufacturing investment had we matched the performance of the French. I asked him what would have happened had we matched the performance of the Germans and he replied that again there would have been £16 billion more in manufacturing investment had we matched the rate of increase in manufacturing investment attained by the Germans. So when we compare the Government's performance with that of the Germans, the French or the previous Labour Government, it is clear that the black hole to which the Minister should be referring is the black hole into which our manufacturing investment has disappeared. It is no coincidence that we have a £1 billion deficit with France and a £10 billion deficit with Germany, in manufactures. It reflects the decade of neglect of manufacturing investment.

If we take not the £30 billion difference between the Government's growth rate in manufacturing and that of the previous Labour Government, but the £16 billion figure, we should consider what that could have meant in terms of investment, had we been pumping that money into putting new equipment and the latest technology into our manufacturing industry.

Mr. Tony Favell (Stockport): Is not it true that the great problem in the early 1980s was the resistance of the trade unions to change? Any proposed change was met with arguments about demarcation. Only when the power of the trade unions was broken were people prepared to invest in Britain.

Mr. Williams: That is not true either. As I said earlier, people were investing in Britain on a massive scale. In 1979, the year we left office, we had the highest level of manufacturing investment ever achieved in the United Kingdom. It increased by 14 per cent. in the previous year and a similar figure in the year before that. There were many inward investment projects, to which I referred in an intervention. I was fortunate enough to be involved in some of them. Hoffman-la Roche made an investment of about £140 million at the time. With respect to the hon. Gentleman, I shall not give him a longer reply. I aim to sit down and enable him to speak so I shall move on to my next point.

The complete turn-round on the manufacturing account reflects the Government's failure to invest in industry to enable it to compete internationally. Superimposed on that, because of the deficit, we are locked in a financial trap, which works against the interests of industry and makes us keep the hot money here to finance it. Therefore, interest rates and sterling must be high, which makes it more difficult for exporters but easier for importers. That helps to explain the figures for the past two months.

The reality, whether the Government recognise it or not, is that we are back on the edge of a new stop-go and the pre-oil position, Sadly, the only hope that the Minister offered was the possibility that in his long-range telescope he may have found a black hole in the statistics.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): The debate has turned largely on exports. Much criticism has been made of export statistics, but for us to understand what is happening in Europe—the global village that we now inhabit—we must have comparative performance statistics.

We must tackle Britain's relationship with the rest of Europe, because 60 per cent. of our trade deficit in 1989 was with the European Community. We must carefully consider that important figure. Almost one third of our trade deficit was with West Germany and one fifth was with Japan. The lesson from that is that we cannot allow the European Community to develop simply on the basis of a system dominated by one country's powerful economy. That is not in the interests of the United Kingdom, it certainly is not in the interests of France, which explains much about French policy on the European Community since 1957 and, in particular, it is not in the interests of the European Community as a whole or West Germany. Given the movements in eastern and central Europe, the problem will grow when West Germany merges with the German Democratic Republic.

Last week, I attended a conference in Hungary at which many people were considering the opportunities for investment in eastern Europe. It emerged—I found this extremely disheartening—that the eastern European countries export only 4 per cent. of their gross national product instead of the 60 per cent. necessary to provide an effective framework for trading relationships.

German trade has a tremendous influence on eastern European countries. Austria makes 30 per cent. of the foreign investment in Hungary, and the bulk of the balance is German investment. The political implications go far beyond statistics and to the heart of the future Europe. If the eastern European countries become economic dependencies of the German and French centre of gravity, and if the management, shareholders and profits of those German companies are attracted back to that centre of gravity by the use of cheap labour and subsidies in eastern Europe, there will be a difficult political problem.

What will happen if there is a hard-core federal system —my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the Cabinet have made it abundantly clear that we will not allow this to happen—within which the single market operates and which is dominated by one or two countries or a cluster of alliances round the economic power base of Germany and/or France? The political power of other countries in eastern and central Europe will be subordinated to the increasing centre of gravity in Germany. The resulting dependency will create division, jealousy and differences of a kind that the European Community is designed to avoid. For that reason, we must ensure that we keep to the central theme of a wider Europe, rather than a hard-core federal system. The economic and political consequences of that are far too dangerous.

The Uruguay GATT round has been going on for some time, but in fits and starts. Now that the European Community cannot be seen as a system that will enable free trade to operate exclusively within its boundaries—there is a global problem as well—it is becoming increasingly necessary to ensure that GATT works. I hope that we can encourage my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State to ensure that every effort is made to free up trade throughout the world and, in particular, to use the GATT mechanisms to achieve that objective.

In the G7 countries, two general criteria have been developed to improve the world economic environment. World savings are the first. Goods of the necessary quality cannot be created without investing in machinery and technology. World savings must be generated and money must be made available for research and development to underpin efforts to improve export performance. We must have monetary and tax policies designed to achieve that.

[Mr. William Cash]

It is interesting that, for all the criticism from the Opposition about the economy, they forget that we have a substantial trade deficit, partly because—as I said in an intervention—we cannot easily get into other markets. Their regulations, policies, company law structures and organisation of industrial and banking systems are designed to prevent us from operating on the level playing field that is necessary for the single market to work effectively. It is absurd for people to talk about the necessity of having a single market if we do not have a genuine competitive framework within which to operate. That in turn must dovetail with GATT at the international level, so savings are needed for investment underpinning. Monetary and tax policies are needed to free the economy and to allow individual enterprises to operate effectively. It is also necessary to ensure that we do not have improper restrictive regulations in other countries. That is what the single market is all about.

The developing countries are also important. I was glad that the Minister referred to the developing countries in this context. I have recently returned from Uganda. The resources of a continent such as Africa are phenomenal. We must make the most use of mutual and reciprocal trade not only in the Community, but in the wider Europe to which I referred, so that we do not create the political difficulties that will occur if we fail to create the wider Europe that is needed, including EFTA. We must also operate globally. In this context we must have regard to other countries, for example in Africa and in South America, which is seldom mentioned.

We are living in a single world. It is true that we need to localise democracy and to ensure that it works effectively on the ground. However, we must operate with the kind of vision on trade that Adam Smith and the East India Company considered as a matter of course in the 18th, 17th and 16th centuries when Raleigh, Drake and other well-known figures lived.

The world is our oyster, but we must produce the goods to enable us to sell in it, and we must have the commitment to working together with our European partners to make it a success.

2.7 pm

Mr. Kenneth Hind (Lancashire, West): I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) for the opportunity to raise this important matter which is fundamental to the future of the British economy. Britain depends on the export of manufactured goods. We have always had either to export or to die. That must be our watchword for the future.

At the risk of being parochial, I will address my remarks to the regional perspective of export trade from the north-west of England. Recently Peat, Marwick, McLintock carried out a survey of 100 chief executives of major companies in the north-west of England. It established a reassuring picture, but one that raises several matters about which there should be concern. The survey showed that the economic prospects for the region were still seen as very good, despite high interest rates and the balance of trade. The feeling that the economic prospects are good is based on a mixture of real success—because we have been highly successful—and somewhat less tangible optimism.

The north-west of England has embraced the opportunity that has been offered by increased inward investment. Many new industries have grown up and they, too, have exported. Over the past three years, we have seen a massive reduction in our unemployment problems. Very few people now talk about the north-south divide because the truth is that many parts of the north-west compare admirably with Godalming and other parts of Surrey and with other more prosperous parts of the south-east.

Interestingly, the survey suggests that 90 per cent. of business decision-makers in the region perceive good prospects for their companies. But they say—and this is a cause of anxiety—that key opportunities are seen for increasing sales probably in the United Kingdom market. I take this opportunity to say to businesses in the north-west that they must be much more outgoing in their approach to Europewide and worldwide trade than is suggested in the survey.

One worrying revelation is that 40 per cent.—an increase on last year—see the single European market having little or no effect on their businesses. Our competitors in Europe will not just stay at home and service their home markets. They will be looking to penetrate our markets and compete against British industry in the sectors that it dominates at present. British industries must worry not just about securing their market share against their British competitors; they must be concerned about those overseas who will come in and try to take their markets. Industry must realise that it is essential to consider exports.

The 100 chief executives identified two matters, both of which have been mentioned in the debate, as essential if exports are to improve. The first is the need to enhance customer service and attain total quality standards. The executives regard that as a key issue and it is something that we must develop and encourage industry to achieve. I believe that the failure of British exporters in the past has been attributable to lack of quality control and of adequate after-care services. That has resulted in our losing export trade.

The second factor, which is also vital, embraces the question of languages referred to by the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), who is no longer with us. The training of key staff—whether in production or in the knowledge of the countries where a company wishes to sell a product or have an export drive—is most important and can be achieved if companies tackle their training needs on an in-house basis. British industry is beginning to take that point on board. I was interested to note the other day figures which show that British industry is now spending £18 billion annually on training its staff. That figure excludes the £3 billion that the Government are spending, through the various training programmes, to train the unemployed and make them available for work. If we in the north-west are to be fit to help our export drive, we must bear those matters in mind.

Let me do a bit of special pleading about the things that are vital if the north-west is to develop further. I welcome British Rail's announcement yesterday—we must have improved rail links—that it will spend £350 million on upgrading the north-west lines to London. That means that we shall have faster freight rail links, which we will inevitably need when the tunnel is opened. I shall not bore the House by saying too much about that but, in the long term, the logic of building a fast link from London to the tunnel, to be connected to the various high-speed links from London to the provinces, is inescapable. I hope that the private sector and British Rail will get together to build that essential infrastructure link.

For the north-west, the King's Cross terminal is part of that and will help our export trade. We need fast freight links from the north-west to the channel tunnel, which will be one of our major export outlets to the Community. People in Merseyside and Greater Manchester want to be able to put their freight for their customers in Europe on to trains in marshalling yards in the north-west and have that freight taken on to Amsterdam, Berlin, Paris and Milan—the markets that are necessary to our businesses.

If such a link does not exist for freight, the north-west will be peripheral. I accept that industry and commerce in the north-west must acknowledge the advantages offered by 1992 and the single market. As a consequence of the survey to which I have referred, I hope that much of north-west industry will say to itself, "Perhaps we are being a little too relaxed about 1992. We need to look positively at exports and take advantage of the opportunities in future."

I want briefly to consider several matters that have concerned me and companies in the north-west. I declare an interest because I have economic ties with one of the companies to which I will refer. The Soviet Union offers a major opportunity to expand overseas trade. Over the past few years the old communist regimes in the eastern bloc have been broken up. The advent of enterprise economies in those countries has opened a fantastic opportunity for British industry, and British companies have an opportunity to export there.

Although the Soviet Union is not one of the world's great economic powers, when we consider its mineral resources, population and geographical size, within the next 30 years it must become one of the world's major industrial powers. Britain has an opportunity to take advantage of that market.

I urge the Government to think carefully about upgrading the Export Credits Guarantee Department facilities for the Soviet Union. A company in Manchester —Doctus plc—has negotiated a £2·6 billion deal with the Soviet Union. Timber will be imported into Europe and sold worldwide and in return the Soviet Union, through a joint venture fund, will buy technological equipment, computers and necessary manufacturing hardward from the west. Those goods can predominantly be British provided that we set up the appropriate arrangements.

The present provision of £240 million of ECGD funds is admirable, but it will not be enough in the long term. The Department of Trade and Industry has an opportunity to help British companies, perhaps through the kind of arrangement that was made—dare I say it? —with Iraq through the ECGD. Under that arrangement a consortium of British banks set up a sum of money which was guaranteed for three months by ECGD. If the national economic bank of the Soviet Union were to be involved in the long term in a similar arrangement, British trade would go to the Soviet Union which might not otherwise have gone there.

I hope that we will see a greater awareness of the need for Britain to export. That is vital, and I commend once more my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton for giving us the opportunity to discuss this subject.

2.20 pm

Mr. Tony Favell (Stockport): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) on choosing this subject. It was a stroke of genius.

As my hon. Friend the Minister said, during the 1980s there was a remarkable transformation in this country. During the 1980s, at long last, this country realised that the world did not owe it a living and that, to make progress, it simply had to roll up its sleeves and get on with the job. That was due to the inspiration of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. When firms were closing down and people were losing their jobs, she said, "No amount of protection sill save you or us from the decision that has to be made. We must sell the right goods at the right price, at the right quality, and at the right time. It is as simple as that." That message is now accepted throughout this country. People did not want to hear it at the time. One of my right hon. Friend's greatest achievements was to get that message over to the people.

Our growth in GDP is the highest of any European country, apart from Spain, which is more or less on a par with us. During the 1980s, total investment in this country was higher than in any other European country. The profitability of our manufacturing and industrial companies has gone up four times. During the latter part of the 1970s, when the Labour Government were in power, profit was a dirty word. Profiteering was a bad thing. People were condemned for making profits. But profits bring investment into the country, encouraging our people to invest here rather than abroad, and produce good things for the people who work in our companies.

Rewards have been spread. The take-home pay of the average man with two children went up by one third during the 1980s—a remarkable achievement. The main complaint in my constituency and in the north of England is that the roads are chock-a-block—they are full of cars. My constituency is on a flight path to Manchester airport. Many of the aeroplanes bring people home from Majorca, Greece, the Canary Islands or further afield, and a very good thing, too.

Ms. Quin: The hon. Gentleman has waxed lyrical about the progress that has been achieved over the past 10 years. Will he explain why there is such a huge trade deficit and the fact that our annual average rate from 1979-80 was lower than in any other EEC country?

Mr. Favell: There is a trade gap. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has said on many occasions, the reason for the trade gap is simply that demand has outstripped supply. That is admitted by the Government. We are spending more as a nation than we ever dreamed would be available to us. People are a lot better off. The working man has one third more to spend than he did 10 years ago. Unfortunately, our supply side has not grown as fast as the availability of money to buy goods. It is as simple as that.

We must look at the trend—it is good news. During the three months to April exports were 11 per cent. higher than they were in the same three months last year—that is, in volume terms—whereas imports were only 3 per cent. higher. During 1989 exports increased by 11·5 per cent. —the highest annual growth for 16 years. When the Opposition were saying that the country was on its knees, we were exporting more and at a faster rate than at any time for 16 years. That is very good news.

[Mr. Favell]

Of course, it is taking time to turn the country round. When the Government came to power in 1979, we were a joke. We were the sick man of Europe. Whenever one went abroad, people said, "What has happened to your once great country? What are you going to do about it?" The country did something about it—it elected a Conservative Government. We have had a Conservative Government throughout the 1980s and there has been the most extraordinary transformation. Nowhere is that more evident than in my constituency of Stockport in the north-west. Simon Engineering has a small head office in my constituency, but it employs 16,000 people worldwide, carrying British technological expertise and engineering into every country, including China, Russia, Africa and America.

British Aerospace is another large employer in Stockport. For the very first time a civil airliner—the brand new advanced turbo prop aircraft—is being produced there and is selling all over the world. The Opposition say that we are not technologically advanced, but what about our aerospace industry? We are selling aeroplanes all over the world. British Aerospace is acknowledged as one of the finest aircraft manufacturers anywhere.

About 90 per cent. of the bowler hats throughout the world are made by Christy in Stockport. It is said that we in Stockport can tell when the Japanese Government are about to change because we get an order for top hats.

None of that has come about because of grants or subsidies—there are no grants in Stockport. It has happened simply because people have rolled up their sleeves and worked together as a team. The chamber of commerce has worked with the schools, the college and the work force. We have encouraged new businesses through the Stockport Business Venture. We are a northern industrial town—like Liverpool, we are on the Mersey and we often hear about the problems of Liverpool—but we have 4 per cent. unemployment. The problem now is to find more skilled people for Stockport. It is a wonderful town—and it is wonderful because it listened to the Prime Minister's message in 1979 when she said, "The world does not owe you a living. Roll up your sleeves, get on with the job and prosperity will come to you." Prosperity has come to us and, if that message is understood, it will spread throughout the country.

Mr. Stevens: With the leave of the House, Madam Deputy Speaker, I should like to reply to the debate. First, I thank my hon. Friend the Minister for giving his time today to answer my debate. In addition to thanking all my right hon. and hon. Friends who have been present, I thank Opposition Members for their attendance, especially the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin) who has been present throughout the debate and who made some interesting points.

The hon. Lady referred to Russia and to our export performance there. One article in a newspaper only this week was headed:

"Slow payers spoil fun of Kiev fair".

That is a problem in Russia at the moment, which we hope is temporary. However, there was also the good news that John Brown, the engineering division of Trafalgar House, has decided to take on a large project in Russia. There was also news about ICI and Rank Xerox, which showed that although there may be reservations, some major British companies are keen to move into Russia.

Inward investment has made a great difference in the past few years. Last year 304 companies came to this country and I am pleased that 86 of them came to the west midlands. They join companies such as Peugeot, which is located just beyond my constituency, and which has made a considerable difference to the engineering industry in the Coventry area. The success of Jaguar has almost renewed it as a car manufacturing area.

Hon. Members have spoken of our trade balances. For example, we have a bad trade balance with Japan, with a deficit of £1·4 billion last year. However, encouragingly, that was 9 per cent., less than the previous year. Even in that, there is improvement. Every hon. Member who has spoken has stressed the importance of exports for our economy and our people. Success in exports depends on our ability right across the board to train people and develop our economy.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Orders of the Day

Private Members' Bills

SEXUAL OFFENCES BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Question —[11 May]—That the Bill be now read the Third time.

Hon. Members: Object.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Debate to be resumed what day? No day named.

MARRIAGE (REGISTRATION OF BUILDINGS) BILL

Not amended (in the Standing Committee), considered.

Motion made and Question, That the Bill be now read the Third time, put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 56 (Third Reading), and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

HARBOURS, DOCKS AND PIERS CLAUSES ACT 1847 (AMENDMENT) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 6 July.

PLANNING BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Bill not printed. Second Reading what day? No day named.

TRADE UNION ACT 1984 (AMENDMENT) BILL [LORDS]

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

RAOUL WALLENBERG (MEMORIAL) BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Second Reading what day? No day named.

CHLOROFLUOROCARBONS (CONTROL) BILL [LORDS]

Order for Second Reading read.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Consideration what day?

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): With the permission of the Member in charge of the Bill, now.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

Mr. Hughes: May I raise a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker?

Madam Deputy Speaker: In a moment.

ABOLITION OF DEER HUNTING BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Madam Deputy Speaker: No, I shall first take the point of order from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. Simon Hughes: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I wrote to the Secretary of State on Tuesday asking for an explanation of the Government's objection to the Chlorofluorocarbons (Control) Bill [Lords], to be given by today. He has been telephoned three times. There is a conference going on just over the river on the Montreal protocol, which deals with this issue. Is there anything that you can do, Madam Deputy Speaker, to facilitate an answer? A negative answer is better than none, but a Government who say that they are in favour of the ban but who block a Bill like this are a Government whose policies are all over the place.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman will know that that is not a matter for me. However, as he has raised it, I am sure that those on the Treasury Bench have heard it.

Mr. Corbyn: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. In objecting to the Abolition of Deer Hunting Bill, would not it have been right for the hon. Member for Upminster (Sir N. Bonsor) to have informed the House that he is chairman of the British Field Sports Society? Should he not have declared that interest in blocking this Bill, which is designed to prohibit cruelty to deer through hunting with hounds?

Madam Deputy Speaker: That is a somewhat remote connection and I would not necessarily request that an hon. Member declare an interest at that stage.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor (Upminster): Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. It is not usual for hon. Members to declare their interests when objecting to Bills at this stage. I do not know what interest the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) had in objecting to the Sexual Offences Bill, but none was declared at the time.

Madam Deputy Speaker: We should now proceed with the business.

PROCEDURE (FUTURE TAXATION) (No. 2)

Resolved,

That, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the practice of the House relating to the matters which may be included in Finance Bills, any Finance Bill of the present Session may contain the following provisions taking effect in a future year—

(a) provisions relating to building societies, deposit-takers and investors;

(b) provision amending section 663 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.—[Mr. Patnick.]

WAYS AND MEANS

Resolved,

Gifts to charity

That provision may be made about gifts to charity.

Paired shares

That provision may be made in relation to paired shares.

—[Mr. Patnick.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Monday 25th June, the Motions in the name of Mr. Neil Kinnock relating to Police may be proceeded with, though opposed, for three hours after the first of them has been entered upon; and, if proceedings on the first Motion have not been previously disposed of, Mr. Speaker shall, at the expiration of that period, put any Questions necessary to dispose of them; and no further such Motion shall then be made.—[Mr. Patnick.]

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (JOINT COMMITTEE)

Ordered,

That Mr. Timothy Kirkhope be discharged from the Select Committee on Statutory Instruments and Mr. Patrick Thompson be added to the Committee.

[Mr. Garel-Jones, on behalf of the Committee of Selection.]

Electoral Registration

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Patnick.]

2.34 pm

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): I wish to discuss electoral registration in the United Kingdom. I shall outline the matters that I intend to cover in case I do not have time to deal with all of them adequately. First, I wish to talk about the poll tax and the impact that it has had on the electoral register. It was clear that the poll tax would have an impact in principle, because it would upset the electoral register, and it has also had an impact in practice. I shall give some details to show how the universal franchise has been undermined.

The second area that I intend to cover is the legislation on expatriate votes which is entirely undemocratic in principle and wide open to fraud and manipulation in practice. The third area is expenditure on encouraging and ensuring full electoral registration. Such expenditure is inadequate and insignificant in the United Kingdom. It is a disgrace in a country which claims to be a democracy.

Fourthly, I shall talk about the wide shortcomings and frauds in the electoral system and their impact on general and local elections and on boundary reviews. Finally, I shall mention courses of action which must be taken to tackle the serious problems.

I have raised this matter on many occasions. I have raised this aspect of the poll tax legislation many times since the Second Reading of the Local Government Finance Bill on 16 and 17 December 1987. On many other occasions I have raised the matter with the Government, the Leader of the House, the Prime Minister and the Home Office. I have raised it within the Labour party and the parliamentary Labour party. Yesterday I had a half-hour meeting with the Leader of the Opposition about this serious issue.

Much of my campaigning activity and my writings in opposition to the poll tax were associated with the effect on electoral registration. In today's Morning Star there is an article entitled "Franchise Farce" which explains some of the points that I shall make.

From the Government's much-vaunted principle—which they claim is a democratic principle—of accountability arises a great problem with the poll tax legislation. The principle of accountability means that almost identical criteria are used in compiling the poll tax register as in compiling the electoral register. The two are interlinked. The poll tax in particular has an adverse impact on electoral registration and leads to the loss of many people from the register. Anyone could see that that would happen.

Those exempted from appearing on either the electoral or the poll tax register are visiting members of overseas forces, diplomats, prisoners, tramps and vagrants, and the severely mentally handicapped. However, the exemption of severely mentally handicapped people from poll tax registration has nothing to do with financial problems. The severely physically handicapped are not excluded from paying the tax, as they qualify for inclusion on the electoral register. There are some areas of division between the two registers, but they are small in comparison with the considerable overlaps.

Some of the categories excluded from the poll tax register were a result of amendments during later stages of discussion on the Local Government Finance Act 1988. Monks and nuns were granted exemption at some stage, on the grounds that they have taken vows of poverty. That would seem to be a good argument for saying that people who have had poverty thrust upon them by the Government should also be excluded. But, that is not an argument that the Government accept. Some extra categories of mentally handicapped people who may appear on the electoral register have been exempted from the poll tax, although the definition of that category is not yet clear.

The only people who are excluded from paying the poll tax but appear on the electoral register are those who are in full-time education up to the age of 20 who attend colleges, reside at home and are not students in receipt of a grant, and also retired people who live in hostels or similar groups. Otherwise, there is more than a 90 per cent. overlap between the two registers.

People who in desperation seek to avoid paying the poll tax may not register for it, and may avoid inclusion in the electoral register. Whatever is done about the poll tax, that will remain true. If the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) gets his way and we have graduated poll tax payments, the same principle will operate. What might occur is that people who pay high poll tax will get out of that by selling their enfranchisement rights, as happened in the 14th century when a new type of poll tax was introduced after the introduction of a flat-rate tax. The people who did not pay then were the people at the top, not people at the bottom.

The problem is serious in principle and in practice. What happens in practice? The computer links between the poll tax and the electoral registers—and with other registers—are checked out. If a poll tax registrar—who is often also the electoral registrar for an area—does not interlink on the two registers, the district auditor will pressurise him to do so. Otherwise the registrar is not considered to be taking sufficient action to raise funds through the operation of the poll tax.

It is not merely the general principle that convinces us that there is a problem with the registers. Statistical evidence, too, points in that direction.

I shall quote some selected instances, and then talk more generally. In Glasgow in 1988, 1989 and 1990 35,000 people were lost from the electoral register—about 6 per cent. That has happened in other Scottish cities. Of course, other factors could be at work—there could be some movement out of the cities—but the figure seems to be too high to be accounted for by such factors.

In Liverpool, 35,000 people disappeared off the electoral register in 1989. The numbers have recovered slightly in the past year and 10,000 people have been replaced on the register because, if they can be found for poll tax purposes, they can be put on the electoral register. However, over a period of two years that is a shortfall of 7·5 per cent.

In Finchley in 1989-90, about 8·5 per cent. of people have disappeared off the electoral register. I sent a letter to the Prime Minister, inviting her to attend the debate, as I am mentioning her constituency. I am interested to know who or what is fiddling the franchise in Finchley, so I extended the normal parliamentary courtesy, but the right hon. Lady has not managed to arrive yet. But we live in hope.

The specific instances that I have quoted could be argued with. One can always find selective instances to back up a particular case. However, general arguments begin to be of much more significance, and some of them have been set out in early-day motion 892, which I tabled. Statistics from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys show that 600,000 people, or more, are missing from the electoral registers in Scotland, England and Wales. The only reasonable assumption can be that the bulk of that loss is caused by poll tax factors. The electoral register in Northern Ireland is in a healthy state; there has been none of the decline that we have seen in England, Wales and Scotland. The difference between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom is that there is no poll tax in Northern Ireland.

Until 1987, the franchise in England was always closely related to the estimated number of people over 18 in the relevant year. If people are doing their jobs correctly in compiling census information and supplying information for the electoral register, we should expect a rough-and-ready fit; in fact, the electoral register was always linked to 99·9 per cent. or more of the appropriate population. However, there has been a decline of 1·5 per cent. between 1987 and 1990, and that involves a significant number of people.

If we examine the list of attainers—those who have come on to the electoral register for the first time—we discover that since 1986 there has been a 3·3 per cent. fall. There is a fear that in some families the person who is missing from the electoral register is the person who was not on the previous register. That person has been excluded in a desperate attempt to save money in the household. In Wales, the drop has not been so dramatic —probably because poll tax in Wales is lower than it is in England—but the figure is 1 per cent. less since 1986. In the previous period, the figure was always above 100·1 per cent. of the relevant population. The number of attainers has fallen by 5 per cent.

In Scotland, the figure is more serious: the drop overall is 1·7 per cent. and the drop in the number of attainers is 5 per cent. During the same period in Northern Ireland, there has been a 0·6 per cent. increase in the franchise, although it is not easy for Northern Ireland to maintain its population, as people move from depressed areas to find work elsewhere. The number of attainers has increased by 18 per cent.

The statistics show a worrying position. It seems that about 600,000 people are missing from the electoral register. Before the poll tax, elections were guaranteed to be free, and operated on a universal franchise. A 1275 Statute of Westminster guaranteed free elections; the Representation of the People Act 1985 drew together previous representation legislation, and was based on a list of guarantees to extend the franchise—first to all men, and then to all women—that had been fought for since 1832. Now, certain practices have undermined the operation of those laws. It may even be that the Representation of the People Act 1985 has been altered and amended within the law, because an Act cannot bind later legislation. Even if nothing is mentioned in the schedules or the amendments about changing earlier legislation, the courts may interpret that it has been changed. That is why I am not paying my poll tax, and why I am keen to challenge the matter in the courts. I would like the opportunity to find out whether the law has been changed and the Act has been undermined. That would be most serious.

A number of hon. Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner), fought vigorously in the House to oppose the Representation of the Peoples Act 1989. That is an unprincipled piece of legislation: it is an open attack on the franchise, whereas the poll tax is a hidden attack. It gives the franchise to people overseas who left this country up to 20 years ago, who are not part of our society, are not concerned with services and provisions here and who do not pay any poll tax—or indeed any other taxes—in this country. They operate on entirely different principles. Furthermore, it is a voluntary franchise in addition to what is supposed to be a compulsory franchise, but the compulsory franchise has been undermined. That does not make sense. That is why I made three speeches against that legislation and voted against it six times. On five occasions I acted as teller, stepping down only for my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), who had tabled a specific amendment.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on his sustained efforts, not only in regard to the fall-off in electoral registration, which he and I believe is due almost entirely to the introduction of the poll tax. I also want to thank him for raising the scandalous business of the Government introducing a Bill that allows people who have been away from the country for 20 years and who have gone to South Africa or any other part of the world to vote in Britain without paying taxes, and that allows young lads and lasses who left the country at four or five years of age to choose almost willy-nilly the constituency in which they vote. It is a serious indictment of the Government that they have legislated to allow people who have emigrated to South Africa and elsewhere to vote in marginal constituencies because they were not on an electoral register when they left the country. My hon. Friend is on to a serious matter and the Home Office must give an assurance that every single overseas voter is registered to vote in the constituency where his family originally resided, otherwise we shall be challenging the results in some marginal constituencies. Once again I thank my hon. Friend for the wonderful job that he has done.

Mr. Barnes: I thank my hon. Friend for his comments. He has illustrated further problems associated with that legislation.

The legislation is not the only cause for concern. Another issue should bother everyone, whether they supported or opposed the original legislation. It arises in comments that have been made in several newspapers, initially in the Morning Star and then in The Independent.

On 10 June Stephen Castle, the political correspondent of The Independent, wrote:

"Tory expatriates have been encouraged to break British election regulations by registering in marginal constituencies where they have no right to vote. Guests at a lunch in Nice last month were told by Patrick Middleton, an unpaid adviser to the local branch of Conservatives Abroad, that they could bypass regulations without detection. Conservatives Abroad is co-ordinating efforts to register Tory sympathisers".

The article continues:

"One of those present at the lunch . . . was John Priestman, a retired diplomat and former private secretary to Sir Anthony Eden, who described the speech as, 'an open invitation to cheat'.".

That issue was also mentioned in Private Eye. The hon. Member for Dorset, West (Sir J. Spicer) wrote to Private Eye under the name Sir James Spencer attacking Backbiter, who wrote the original article, and stating:

"His suggestion that there is a fraudulent plan to register all expatriate voters in marginal seats is not only ludicrous, it is impossible. Electoral Registration Officers have to carry out meticulous steps to satisfy themselves that the overseas applicants have lived in their constituencies within the previous 20 years."

Unfortunately, the hon. Member for Dorset, West was incorrect because meticulous steps do not have to be taken, according to a Home Office circular LXN/89 1/89/4 sent out to electoral registration officers. The circular sets out the conditions in which the registration of overseas electors should operate and suggests that the British Library should be contacted to find electoral registers. It states:

"In some cases copies of old registers may not be available locally and the only available source may be the Electoral Registers Room at the British Library. They would prefer to receive enquiries in writing and will normally reply in the same way . . . Old registers are not held on site."

It is not easy to obtain information. The circular continues:

"You will appreciate that the British Library can handle only a certain number of inquiries without becoming swamped."

The clear impression that is given is: do not put pressure on the British Library and accept what is taking place.

The circular gets worse. "'Young' applicants"—those who were not 18 when they left Britain and who were mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover—"are required to send with their first application a photocopy of their full birth certificate."

Under what other legislation on immigration or anything else is a photocopy of a birth certificate adequate? A photocopy can be fiddled.

The circular deals with people who have guardians of a different name:

"The relationship with a guardian is difficult to establish conclusively . . . The form gives as an example of a reason the statement 'the person named above adopted me and became my guardian in (year)'. In many cases such a statement could, in theory, be checked but we do not suggest that you should do so; we suggest rather, that the statement that a named person is a named guardian might be taken at face value."

If time permitted, I could give other examples of things being taken at face value rather than a check being made. The circular is disgraceful and is not in line with the legislation. The Home Office should carefully consider that.

My next point is about expenditure on encouraging people to enfranchise. In 1988-89, £322,000 was spent on that, 0·3 per cent. of the total Government publicity budget. It is peanuts. They are spending £760,000—twice as much—to inform people overseas of their right to vote in Britain. In addition, unlimited amounts can be spent by the Tory party and its friends overseas on encouraging people overseas to vote.

In 1989, Abbey National held a ballot on it becoming a public limited company. To make people aware of their rights to vote, it spent £6 million—20 times as much as the Government spent on electoral registration.

Mr. David Evans (Welwyn Hatfield): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Barnes: I apologise, but I do not have time.

The consequences are serious for future election results. The legislation manipulates future election results and has serious effects on boundaries. The poll tax has caused some people to remove their names from the electoral roll in some areas, but expatriates have been fiddled on to——

Mr. Evans: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Will the hon. Gentleman allow the Minister to apply?

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): It is usual, in an Adjournment debate when an hon. Member raises issues and asks questions, for the Minister to have an opportunity to respond.

Mr. Barnes: I am sorry to have taken so long, but it is a wide issue. The fewer interruptions I have—not your interruptions, Madam Deputy Speaker—the sooner I shall finish.

First, the poll tax and the electoral register should be separated. If the Government wish to know how to do so, they should read my Re-enfranchisement of the People Bill. Secondly, they should withdraw the Home Office circular on expatriate votes and produce a tougher measure. Thirdly, they should provide funds to the British Library so that it can do a proper job. Fourthly, they should set up an electoral fraud squad to ensure that the Tory party overseas is not involved in this massive manipulation. Fifthly, they should switch advertising expenditure from privatisation and other useless activities to electoral registration. Sixthly, they should set up an independent commission to consider the state of the franchise in this country. Above all, they should repeal the poll tax and the expatriate vote legislation and substitute democratic legislation. As a first step towards achieving that goal—this might be the only point on which the Minister has an opportunity to speak—I suggest that we should have a full debate in the House, rather than a debate at the dog end of the week, when few hon. Members are here.

2.59 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Peter Lloyd): I congratulate the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Ms. Barnes) on securing this debate. He took up a large section of it. He has had a long interest in this subject. We have exchanged correspondence with him and I have taken down a mass of notes and points. I shall not be able to deal with them all. If the Opposition would like to use an Opposition Day to debate these matters, I should be delighted to respond more fully then.

The first concerns of the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East were with the community charge.

Mr. Skinner: Deal with fraud first.

Mr. Lloyd: For once, I shall take the hon. Gentleman's advice. Absolutely no fraud is involved. The Representation of the People Act 1989 properly extended to British citizens living overseas who were last resident in the United Kingdom within a period of 20 years the right to vote in our elections, bringing us into line with most other modern democratic countries.

Mr. Skinner: They do not pay tax.

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. Gentleman shouts, "They do not pay tax." Much of the speech of the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East was based on his belief—which was wrong—that the right to vote in elections was dependent on paying the community charge. If the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) objects to voters abroad who do not pay tax being able to vote, why on earth should the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East object to voters in this country being required to pay tax? They are not required to pay tax because they are voters; they are required to do so because they are citizens in receipt of services from their local authorities.

Community charge officers look at the electoral register to ensure that their registers are as fully up to date as possible. By exactly the same token, electoral registration officers can look—we encourage them to do so—at the community charge register, which is likely to be far more up to date, to see whether there are people who have not been registered for voting and they follow that up. That is the guidance that we give local authorities. The existence of the community charge and the community charge register will ensure in the long run that the electoral registers are more, not less, up to date. I hope that the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East will express some satisfaction at the advice that we give electoral registration officers to use community charge registers. His prime concern may be that people who are elegible to vote should be on the electoral register. Our advice will help to achieve that.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the constituency of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and noted that the electorate had decreased. There are various reasons why the numbers on an electoral register may change. They include the techniques that the local electoral registration officer uses to build up the register. Many carry the names on one year's register on to the next. In Barnet, the electoral register officer has ceased that practice. One would expect that that would produce a substantial change, and it appears to have done so in that constituency. The names of those who were not entitled to be on the register were removed. As Barnet has more than an average number of elderly electors, there are likely to be on the register the names of people who have moved or died.

Mr. Harry Barnes indicated dissent.

Mr. Lloyd: The hon. Gentleman shakes his head. How can he explain the increase in the size of the electoral registers in the constituency of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my constituency? According to the hon. Gentleman's arguments, the numbers should have decreased, but they have not.

The hon. Gentleman referred to advertising. Like him, we are concerned that those who are eligible to be on the register——

The motion having been made after half-past Two o'clock and the debate having continued for half an hour, Madam Deputy Speaker adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at four minutes past Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 11 June 1990

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stockton, North, Official Report, 9 May, column 159, on the disposal of toxic wastes at Atomic Energy Association technology sites, he will make a statement on the specific material provisions for the management and disposal of toxic wastes; and what financial resources have been committed to the development and execution of the programme.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is the UKAEA policy to minimise toxic waste arising so far as is reasonably practicable and to dispose of any arisings in accordance with legal authorisations. Costs incurred by the UKAEA are part of the normal operating costs of each site.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the net incremental cost of exempting from the community charge (a) all persons over the age of 70 years and (b) all persons above the age of 75 years, taking into account the number of such persons already receiving rebate, transitional relief or exemption from the charge by reason of residence in registered residential or nursing homes or others.

Mr. Chope: I estimate the additional cost of exempting persons over the age of 70 from the community charge would be about £950 million whilst exempting persons over 75 would be about £600 million. Both figures are in addition to reductions already received in respect of transitional relief and community charge benefit.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce in tabular form for each district council in England and Wales the percentage figure of non-payment of the community charge.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his oral reply of 23 May to the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) Official Report, column 280, when he expects to be in a position to reply to the letters of the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills of 19 March and 10 May concerning proposals by Walsall councillors to direct resources and services away from wards on the basis of how they vote.

Mr. Chope: I have now written to the hon. Member.

Housing, Basildon

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the average value of a Basildon new town corporation three-bedroomed house;

(2) what is the average length of tenancy in a three-bedroomed Basildon new town corporation home.

Mr. Chope: The information is not collected in the form requested. The Commission for the New Towns in Basildon estimates the open market value of a typical three-bedroomed house to be £57,000, and the average length of tenancy to be 18 years.

Druridge Bay

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Northumberland wildlife trust and others regarding sand extraction at Druridge bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received no representations from the Northumberland wildlife trust. Representations have been received from the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) and Councillor K. L. P. Flaherty of Northumberland county council that the Secretary of State use his powers under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 to revoke the planning permissions for sand extraction. However, the county council has the necessary powers themselves under the 1971 Act to review mineral working sites in their area and to revoke or modify planning permissions as they consider necessary.

Environmental Assessment Directive

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to whom his Department has let the contract for monitoring the implementation of the environmental assessment directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The contract for the research project on "Monitoring Environmental Assessment and Planning" was let to the EIA centre of the university of Manchester's department of planning and landscape on 3 May 1990.

Nature Conservation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain a copy of "Economics of the Environment: the Conservationists' Response to the Pearce Report", produced by the British Association of Nature Conservationists for his departmental library.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department already has a copy of this publication and I understand that a second is on order.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to reduce the imput of dichloros into the marine environment, in accordance with its red list status;

(2) what records he has of the inputs of dichloros into the marine environment for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is estimated that around 15 tonnes of dichloros were input to United Kingdom coastal waters in 1989; figures are not available for earlier years. At the recent North sea conference, Ministers agreed that inputs of dichloros into the North sea should be reduced by the order of 50 per cent. by 1995. The Government intend that such a reduction should be achieved for inputs to all seas around the United Kingdom.

Recycling

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to whom his Department has let the contract for the removal, sorting and recycling of waste paper and other waste from the Palace of Westminster; how long they have had the contract; and what guarantees have been written into the contract to ensure that no paper set aside for recycling ends up in landfill.

Mr. Chope: Following competitive tendering a contract for the disposal of waste from the Palace of Westminster was let to the city of Westminster cleansing department on 1 November 1988 for three years. The paper is collected free of charge as salvage so it is in the contractor's own interest to ensure that it is used to the greatest economic advantage.

Commission for Local Administration

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the service of the Commission for Local Administration in England costs; and what steps have been taken in recent years to measure the efficiency of the service.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The grant to the Commission for Local Administration in England for 1990-91 will be £3,834,119. Management consultants carried out a study of the working of the commission in 1989.

Planning Application, Brentwood

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is considering calling in planning application No. BRW/772/89 Wash road, new industrial area, Brentwood.

Mr. Moynihan: Brentwood district council has been directed not to grant permission for this application without the consent of the Secretary of State. As the application affects land in the green belt, the district council have decided to advertise and consider the application formally when they publish their draft district-wide local plan for public consultation. At that stage, we will consider whether or not the application should be called in.

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to require the water companies to clean up the beaches which do not meet the safety standards set by the European Community within a stated time limit.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend announced on 5 March at column 452 that in general all municipal sewage should receive secondary treatment, but that primary treatment would be more appropriate for discharges to sea where it can be shown that this does not adversely affect the environment. The estimated cost of this new programme is around £1·5 billion. It will be fully integrated with the £1·4 billion programme announced last year to improve bathing water quality and it will be completed as soon as practicable. Discussions with the National Rivers Authority, the Office of Water Services and the sewage undertakers are taking place to work out the arrangements for implementing this policy.

Reservoir Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has commissioned following human poisoning and pollution by blue-green algae of reservoirs; and what action he proposes to take to prevent a similar occurence this summer.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department has not commissioned any research following the occurrence of toxic algae in reservoirs and lakes. However, the National Rivers Authority has just announced a monitoring campaign to detect the occurence of potentially toxic blue-green algae at some 500 sites concentrating on those which are used regularly for water sports and to which the public has ready access. The NRA has at the same time issued a leaflet which incorporates advice from the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food about the effect of toxic algae on humans and health. There is no evidence that treated water supplied from reservoirs with algal blooms is detrimental to public health.

Environmental Conferences

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the future environmental conferences, seminars and meetings which Ministers or officials in his Department will be attending in the next four months and the date of each.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Over the next four months Ministers are to attend the following environmental conferences, seminars and meetings:

June
7–8	EC Environment Council (Luxembourg)
8	British Steel Tin Plate Environment Programme
12	92nd Annual Waste Management Conference
16	EC/Eastern Europe/EFTA Environment Meeting (Dublin)

25 National Association of Waste Disposal Contractors Annual Conference

October
4 EC Environment Council (Luxembourg)
4 Polite Society Conference on Noise
5 Somerset County Council Environmental Conference

Officials will be attending all of these meetings and many more.

Correspondence

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth will be sent a reply to his letter of 26 March concerning Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Morgan of Kenilworth.

Mr. Chope: I replied to my hon. Friend's letter on 7 June.

Regional Planning

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the policy planning guidance note on structure plans and regional planning guidance.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Planning Policy Guidance Note 15, entitled "Regional Planning Guidance, Structure Plans and the Content of Development Plans", was published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office on 25 May. I shall send my hon. Friend a copy.

Oil Pollution, South Devon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any oil pollution still remains on the south Devon coastline following the holing of the supertanker Rosebay.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand from reports received from the South Hams district council, which, as the affected local authority in Devon, has the responsibility for dealing with oil pollution once it is washed ashore, that all holiday beaches in their area are clear.

The local authority is continuing to monitor beaches but there are no reports of further oil landing apart from a small quantity sighted at Hope Cove and Thurleston over the weekend of 2-3 June. There is still some oily scum around the more isolated rocky coves and some remaining bagged oily waste will be cleared from Gull and Causewell coves this week.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to find suitable sites for the long-term storage and ultimate dumping of polluted sand and seaweed scraped off the beaches of the south Devon coastline; and if he will make a statement as to progress to date and the proposed timetable.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The responsibility for identifying sites for the storage and disposal of polluted sand and seaweed lies with Devon county council as the relevant waste disposal authority.

I understand from the Department of Transport's marine pollution control unit, which set up a joint response centre with the local authorities involved in the clean-up operations following the incident, that the county council are currently considering, on the basis of MPCU advice, various options for the treatment and disposal of the oily waste collected.

These options include: assisting the natural degradation of the oil by bacterial treatment prior to disposal to a registered landfill site; stabilising the material to prevent further leaching of oil by treatment with quicklime and then, either disposal to landfill or use of the stabilised waste as a bedding for road building or car park construction.

The timetable will be set by the method eventually chosen and the wish of the county council to avoid any adverse traffic effects that might be caused during the busy summer season by the movement of the mass of collected material.

This material amounts to approximately 1,500 cubic metres and is currently being held in temporary lined holding sites.

Hunterprint

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the company Hunterprint had, or has outstanding, any printing contracts for work associated with the privatisation of the water industry.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Hunterprint was employed last year as sub-contractors to Burrups for the printing of water privatisation documents. There are no outstanding contracts with the company.

Hydrofluorocarbons

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department is to propose any controls on HFCs for non-essential usage.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Methyl Chloroform

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy on phasing out the use of methyl chloroform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is the Government's aim ultimately to phase out all ozone depleting substances. In response to a United Kingdom initiative, the EC Environment Council have agreed to press for a 50 per cent. cut in methyl chloroform production and consumption by the year 2000 in the renegotiation of the Montreal Protocol.

Urban Organisation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to the European Community proposals on the protection of people living in big European cities against health and environmental hazards produced by bad urban organisation.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 8 June 1990]: I have not seen the proposals described although I understand that the European Commission is publishing a Green Paper on the urban environment. The Green Paper will be the subject of consultation with member states and we will give it careful consideration.

Wildlife Protection

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list his responsibilities in relation to Her Majesty's Government's responsibilities and policies on the worldwide protection of wildlife.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Formal responsibility for the conclusion of all international agreements and conventions rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. Within the context of collective Government responsibility, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment implements our obligations under the Washington convention on international trade in endangered species (CITES), the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance, the Bonn convention on the conservation of migratory species of wild animals and the convention for the protection of the world cultural and natural heritage. He also has responsibility for formulating the United Kingdom's contribution to the world-wide development of those conventions.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the annual load factor achieved by (a) the Central Electricity Generating Board nuclear power stations and (b) the South of Scotland electricity board nuclear power stations for each month within the last financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This is an operational matter for Nuclear Electric plc and Scottish Nuclear Limited.

Gas Turbine Electricity, Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has received for the private generation of electrictity by gas turbines by DREH Resources of Milton Keynes in Clwyd and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: On 24 May 1990 Deeside Power Development Company Ltd., in which I understand that DREH resources is a partner, notified my Department, pursuant to regulation 6(1) of the Electricity and Pipe-line Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1990, of its intention to make an application for the Secretary of State's consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to construct a 450 MW combined cycle gas turbine power station at Shotton in Clwyd and to submit an environmental statement with its application.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the impact upon the Merseyside and North-Western electricity board of proposals to construct a gas turbine electricity station in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Baldry: This is a matter for MANWEB plc.

Connah's Quay Power Station

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of Connah's Quay power station; and what is the estimated value of Connah's Quay power station and its surrounding land.

Mr. Baldry: Decisions on the future of power station sites are a matter for the day-to-day management of the generating company concerned. The estimated value of a power station is a commercially confidential matter.

Radiation and Nuclear Waste

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to establish a scheme to assist redundant or former nuclear scientists of the Atomic Energy Authority and Nuclear Electric to provide technical assistance to foreign nuclear generators in radiation and nuclear waste management under article IV of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Baldry: No, though the United Kingdom makes every effort to meet its obligations under the terms of article IV of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Plutonium

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many permanent withdrawals from safeguards of plutonium under article 14 of the 1978 tripartite safeguards agreement between the United Kingdom, Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency, have been made; what were the quantities involved; and what were their isotopic compositions.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 21 May 1990 at column 12.

Tritium

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what safeguards measures exist in the United Kingdom to ensure detection of the diversion of tritium from peaceful to non-peaceful applications.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Worcestershire, South (Mr. Spicer) to the hon. Member for Meirionydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), Official Report, 30 November 1989, columns 400-1.

Hunterprint

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the company Hunterprint had any printing contracts for work associated with the privatisation of the gas industry or has any outstanding printing contracts for work associated with the privatisation of the electricity industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Hunterprint were involved in printing material used in the flotation of British Gas plc. The question of their participation in the forthcoming privatisation of the electricity industry is a matter subject to commercial negotiation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

May Inquiry

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to make additional powers available to the May inquiry.

The Attorney-General: No. Sir John May has made no suggestion to me or to the Home Secretary that the effectiveness of his inquiry is being impaired by its non-statutory basis.

PRIME MINISTER

Rockall

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister is responsible for matters relating to the Isle of Rockall.

The Prime Minister: In terms of the Island of Rockall Act 1972 as read with the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973, Rockall is part of the Western Isles Islands area. It forms part of the Crown Estates. The responsibilities of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State extend to Rockall as to the rest of Scotland.

Rivers, Estuaries and Bays

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all studies being carried out with money from the United Kingdom Government or European Economic Community funds to provide new crossings, barrages or major environmental schemes in United Kingdom rivers, estuaries or bays, and indicate when each report is expected to be completed.

The Prime Minister: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ivory

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy not to extend the reservation enabling Hong Kong ivory traders to dispose of their stocks when it expires; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs stated in his reply of 11 May to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), the six-month reservation will be withdrawn on 18 July 1990. It will not be extended.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any proposals to extend the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to include the administration of local enterprise companies.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. Local enterprise companies will be private companies formed under the Companies Acts, and as such are outwith the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, which encompasses Government Departments, public corporations and public bodies whose functions are exercised on behalf of the Crown.

Leaks

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the number of leaks from Departments of State since June 1983 and give details of the steps which have been taken to trace such happenings and the numbers of individuals who have been held accountable.

The Prime Minister: No.

Redistribution of Wealth

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the Government to commemorate in some form those who devoted their activities to trying to bring about in the United Kingdom a redistribution of wealth from richer to poorer citizens.

The Prime Minister: No.

Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if it remains the Government's policy that Mr. Rushdie will receive the full protection of the authorities, regardless of any financial and manpower cost, so long as there remains a threat to his life.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Rushdie's protection is a matter for the police, who will take any action that they consider necessary in the circumstances.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy in respect of the trend towards increasing foreign control of United Kingdom manufacturing industry.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The Government's general policy is set out in the blue paper on mergers policy, published in 1988.

Our policy towards inward investment by foreigners in the United Kingdom is to welcome it and, broadly speaking, this applies to inward investment by way of acquisition of existing companies as much as to direct inward investment. United Kingdom companies engage in a considerable quantity of overseas investment, including acquisitions of foreign companies, and it is in the interests of the United Kingdom economy that there should be as little official interference as possible in this two-way flow.

For this reason, it is also our policy to try to reduce the barriers to takeover that exist in the European Community. The European Commission brought forward a set of proposals in May to reduce and eliminate barriers within the Community.

Nevertheless, there are instances in which foreign ownership of a United Kingdom company may raise particular concerns, and in such cases the power to make a reference to the MMC is available for use.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Global Warming

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, as a result of the Bergen conference, he has any plans to provide new funding to assist developing countries in their efforts to reduce emissions of global warming gases.

Mrs. Chalker: The issues covered by the Bergen ministerial declaration include assistance to developing countries in the context of global environmental problems. The Government expect that the international community will take this into account in developing a global response to possible climate change. The Government are planning to allocate additional resources to helping developing countries to deal with sources of greenhouse gas emissions such as deforestation and the inefficient use of energy.

Environmental Programmes

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to help developing countries with their environmental programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: Our policies are set out in a new booklet, "The Environment and the British Aid Programme", a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

I have arranged for a copy to be sent to my hon. Friend.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Channel Tunnel (Policing)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether an application has been received from Kent county police to enable further police officers to be recruited to police the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has received an application for 52 posts in 1991-92 for policing the channel tunnel. This will be considered in the coming months with advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary. Seventy police posts have already been approved in connection with the tunnel.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any discussions have taken place between the developers of the channel tunnel and his Department over the level of police manpower required to police the tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No. Under section 14 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 the policing of the tunnel system is a matter for the chief constable of the police force for the county of Kent.

West Midlands Serious Crime Squad

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire as to whether DCI Matthews was interviewed in connection with the inquiry into the west midlands serious crime squad during his recent visit to this country.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Swansea Prison (Dispute)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the impact of the dispute at Swansea prison on detention conditions for persons detained by the police in south Wales.

Mr. Mellor: I very much regret that the dispute at Her Majesty's prison Swansea has led to a number of prisoners having to be held in police cells in the area.

The responsibility for the care and conditions of prisoners in police custody rests with the chief officer of police concerned. We recognise that police cells are not designed for long-term detention and that therefore their use for people who ought to be in prison leaves a lot to be desired. I am sure that the police are doing the best that they can in the difficult circumstances under which they are operating.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to try to resolve the current dispute at Swansea prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: A meeting between representatives of local and regional management, and local and national Prison Officers Association was held on Tuesday 5 June. Whilst the actual dispute was not resolved, sufficient good will now exists between the two parties which should enable police cells to be cleared of prisoners by Wednesday 13 June.

It was agreed that local management and POA should meet locally in an attempt to resolve the current difficulties.

Police Manpower

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of (a) police officers and (b) other staff employed by each police force in England and Wales in (i) 1974, (ii) 1979 and (iii) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested for 1974 and 1979 can be found at appendix 1 of the annual report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary for 1974 and at Appendix 7 of the annual report for 1979, copies of which can be found in the Library.

The comparable position at the end of 1989 is set out in the table:

At 31 December 1989

Arms Theft, Kent

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for a report from the chief constable of Kent on the circumstances of the burglary of rifles and ammunition from a cadet force armory at Longfield upper school, Dartford, Kent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The burglary of rifles and ammunition at Longfield upper school is an operational matter for the Kent police and is already under investigation.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to improve the clear-up rates of police forces in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Decisions about the priorities and methods for the investigation of crime are a matter for chief officers in the light of local circumstances. They already seek to target their resources on those crimes which are of most concern to the public. Clear-up rates for the most serious offences, including violence against the person and sexual offences, remain high at 75 per cent. or more. Most crime is against property, where there is a range of practical preventive measures which we can all take to help the police.

Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps are being taken to ensure that the police and security protection given to Mr. Rushdie is adequate, in view of the further threats to his life.

Mr. Waddington: It would not be sensible to give details of the protection afforded to Mr. Rushdie, but the police will take whatever steps they judge necessary in the light of the threat and any other relevant circumstances.

Police Budgets

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in the budget of each police force in England and Wales in each year since 1974 in (a) money and (b) real terms; and if he will make a statement on efforts being made by his Department to improve value for money in the police service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information relating to police force budgets is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The Home Office is strongly committed to encouraging better value for money in the police service, in partnership with chief officers and police authorities. The main elements in Home Office activity are:

(1) inspection of forces by HM inspectorate of constabulary: developments include further extension of the matrix of indicators used by the inspectorate to assist the inspection process, the publication of inspection reports and the appointment of a business consultant:
(2) encouragement of a programme of efficiency scrutinies in forces, with 19 scrutinies completed or under way;
(3) through controls on police establishment, encouragement of civilianisation, which has released 4,700 officers for operational duties over the last 7 years, with a further 800 posts due to be civilianised this year;
(4) following a Home Office/Treasury study on police manpower, a programme of work is under way to improve and standardise measures of police workloads, activity and effectiveness;
(5) follow-up action on papers produced by the Audit Commission as part of their current programme of work in the police service, include monitoring by HM inspectorate of action taken by forces.

Electoral Registers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he takes to ensure that no overseas elector has his name included on an electoral register in circumstances where his name was not previously included on the register for the same electoral division.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In order to ascertain the eligibility of applicants, electoral registration officers will as a matter of course check old registers, to ensure that potential overseas electors (or, in appropriate cases, a parent or guardian) were included on the register for the constituency within the previous 20 years. Guidance recently issued to registration officers by the Home Office explains which registers should be checked in particular circumstances, and how old registers can be checked when copies are not available locally.

Birmingham Prison (Shortages)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what shortages of kit at Birmingham prison were discovered as a result of the special stock-taking early in the curent year.

Mr. Mellor: A full check in March showed significant shortages of shirts, pants, socks, shoes and towels against the scales laid down to ensure adequate stocks in use, being laundered and in store. Stocks have since been replenished.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there are adequate stocks of underwear at Birmingham prison to enable each inmate to be given a weekly change of underwear.

Mr. Mellor: Yes.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, further to the letter of 8 May from Mr. A. H. Chapman of C3 division to the Rev. J. Gilmore, the document publicised by Granada Television was made public and by whom.

Mr. John Patten: The letter to the Rev. Gilmore contained a typographical error. The document to which it referred was a police report and not, as wrongly stated, a public report. A letter correcting the inaccuracy has been sent to the Rev. Gilmore.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has anything further to add to his Department's statement on the Birmingham pub bombings, dated 29 March, that the document publicised by Granada Television was written before the original trial.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the document in question was in fact written in 1975 after the trial of the six men for the Birmingham pub bombings.

Prisons, South-West

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison spaces in the south-western region need to be replaced or refurbished as a result of recent riots.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 407 cells at Bristol, Dartmoor and Pucklechurch were damaged to such a degree that major refurbishment work will need to be undertaken before they can be brought back into use.

Cells damaged at other establishments where disturbances took place have already been repaired.

Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest representations made to him by the chief constable of West Mercia in the case of Hilda Murrell.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received any recent representations from the chief constable of West Mercia police on this matter.

Young Offenders

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average length of sentence for young offenders in (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Information for 1988 is given in the table. Data for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990.

Average length of sentences of immediate custody for offenders aged 14 to under 21 years

	Months
England	8
Wales	8
England and Wales	8

Chinese Citizens (Temporary Asylum)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards Chinese citizens in the United Kingdom seeking temporary asylum.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All applications for asylum in this country are considered in accordance with our obligations under the United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees.

While the situation in China remains uncertain we are continuing to allow Chinese nationals who were in the United Kingdom on 4 June 1989 to remain here on an exceptional basis. Applications from other Chinese nationals are considered on their individual merits.

Laboratories

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received on the plan to make his Department's laboratories self-financing from April 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The plans to introduce direct charging for forensic science services from 1 April 1991 are being developed in consultation with representatives of police authorities and their chief officers and their views are being fully taken into account. No other representations on this matter have been received.

Police Civilian Staff

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions have taken place between his Department and the Association of Chief Police Officers about trade union membership of police civilian staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been discussions between the Home Office, the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and the local authority associations on a range of issues affecting police civilian staff including training, gradings, career development and representation.

The ACPO has suggested that civilian staff should be represented by a single union. Any such development would be a matter for the staff themselves and their local authority employers. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to require police civilians to belong to a single union or to restrict their trade union or bargaining rights.

Prisoners (Early Release)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has undertaken any study to ascertain whether early release from prison for prisoners serving short terms could be allowed under executive release powers with minimal consequence to the community in order to bring occupancy of prisons nearer to their design capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has seen no need for such a study.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each fire station in the London fire brigade that does not have any accommodation or facilities for female firefighters; and if he will call for a report from the London fire and civil defence authority explaining what proposals it has in the case of each fire station in this category.

Mr. John Patten: With the exception of Leyton fire station, all fire stations within the area of the London fire brigade have facilities for female firefighters. The existing fire station at Leyton cannot be adapted because of its size and design, but the London fire and civil defence authority is currently constructing a replacement fire station which, when completed, will provide separate facilities for female firefighters. On present plans the new station will open during 1991.

Prisons (Slopping Out)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in England and Wales where slopping out still takes place.

Mr. Mellor: The majority of prison places have access to night sanitation and we are looking at ways of providing access for three quarters of all places within the next few years. A list of the prisons in England and Wales at which some or all of the places did not have access to night sanitation as at April 1990 has been placed in the Library.

Fire Prevention

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals for fire prevention campaign activity nationally for the next two years.

Mr. John Patten: We propose to build on the success of our smoke alarm television campaign with particular emphasis on increasing ownership amongst the elderly and lower socio-economic groups. The campaign will also seek to emphasise the need for maintenance of smoke alarms.

We intended to produce an educational and publicity package for five to eight-year-olds. We also hope to produce an integrated educational package to cover the range of school age groups.

We shall be promoting national fire safety week in October in conjunction with the insurance industry and the fire liaison panel network. We shall be continuing to work closely with fire brigades and we propose to hold a series of national and regional conferences for senior fire prevention officers in order to encourage and foster greater awareness on publicity and education and to establish a co-ordinated approach to local and national publicity.

It is our aim to help minimise the risk from fire breaking out and thereby reduce casualties and deaths. In addition to the above, there are a number of continuing educational and publicity initiatives concentrating on the main risk areas activated throughout the year with the valued assistance of local fire brigades.

Merseyside Police Authority

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to meet the chief constable of Merseyside to discuss capital budgets for the Merseyside police authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and noble Friend discussed these and other issues with the chief constable and members of the police authority during a recent visit to Merseyside.

Murder Statistics

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murders were committed in the United Kingdom in 1989; in connection with how many of these arrests have been made or convictions secured; and if he will give the comparable figures for 1950, 1960, 1970 and 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The data for homicides in England and Wales is given below. Equivalent figures for Scotland and Northern Ireland are published by the Scottish Home and Health Department and by the Northern Ireland Office.

In the absence of a court decision it is not always possible to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter and infanticide; they are known collectively as homicide.

Homicides recorded and cleared up in selected years

Drug Arrests, Ynys Môn

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been arrested for possession of (a) heroin, (b) cannabis and (c) amphetamines in each year since 1986 on Ynys Môn.

Mr. John Patten: Separate statistics are not available centrally for Ynys Môn. In the North Wales police force area the number of persons dealt with by the courts for possession of the specified drugs, which may exclude a small number of persons arrested and dealt with in other ways, was as follows:

Drug	1986	1987	1988
		Number of persons
Heroin	10	13	19
Cannabis	148	176	238
Amphetamines	24	17	35

Note: Persons dealt with for possession of more than one of the specified drugs at a single court appearance appear against each drug in the table.

Prisoners (Life Sentences)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving life sentences have been granted parole or released on licence during the past 20 years in (a) England and (b) Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Life sentence prisoners are not eligible for parole but are released on licence. Statistics are not available centrally of the areas to which prisoners are released. Information on releases before 1972 is not readily available. The numbers released in each of the years 1978-88 were published in table 8.5 of Prison statistics England and Wales 1988 (Cm 825), a copy of which is in the Library. The table gives figures for those released in the years 1972 to 1977, and 1989.

Metropolitan Police (Complaints)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers are currently under investigation following complaints against them.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis that complaints are being investigated in relation to 4,708 police officers in the force. The number of compl ints in progress at any one time is a function of the time taken by each investigation, as well as of the number of complaints made. Complaints against officers of the Metropolitan police have been on the decline for some years. In the early 1980's they averaged over 8,500 a year: since 1985 they have generally been fewer than 5,500 a year. In 1989, 5,350 complaints were made against members of the force.

Child Care

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions the ministerial group on women's issues has had about mechanisms for providing child care; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. John Patten: The ministerial group on women's issues has discussed child care at three meetings (April 1989, October 1989 and February 1990).

The group has concluded that choice and quality are paramount considerations. A range of measures has been agreed, therefore, designed to maintain and improve the standards of the wide range of those providing child care for parents who choose to use their services.

Summaries of the initiatives on child care agreed by the group are contained in the press release issued after the group's meetings in April 1989 and February 1990, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Women's Issues

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the ministerial group on women's issues last met; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. John Patten: The ministerial group on women's issues last met on 26 February 1990 and discussed domestic violence and child care. The group also received a report of the United Kingdom's presentation in January to the United Nation's committee on the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women.

The group will next meet on 19 June.

Between meetings of the group there are regular meetings between officials in the Departments concerned to ensure that action agreed by the group is taken forward.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation (Performers)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes there have been in the tax treatment of actors.

Mr. Lilley: From 6 April 1990 theatrical employers were required by the Inland Revenue to operate PAYE on the emoluments of actors engaged under standard contracts based on terms agreed between Equity and theatre managements. The Inland Revenue's view that these are contracts of employment is based on decisions in the Courts, and has been the subject of discussions with the theatre industry for a number of years. There are, however, transitional arrangements which allow established actors, with a history of payment tax under schedule D, to continue to pay their tax under that schedule, and to receive their earnings without deduction of tax under PAYE.

Customs Procedures

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he has taken of the impact of the single market on customs-free travel in 1992 when considering the need for pre-boarding customs checks at the proposed international passenger terminal at Waterloo.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have repeatedly stressed the need to retain essential customs checks on EC traffic after 1992 to guard against drugs smuggling and similar threats to society. Against this background, customs checks on channel tunnel travellers are being design to be as selective and unobtrusive as possible. Checks on departing passengers are expected to be minimal and only a very small percentage of passengers arriving at Waterloo will experience any delay as they pass through familiar airport-style checks.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evaluation his Department made of the feasibility of carrying out all customs procedures on board trains using the proposed international passenger terminal at Waterloo.

Mr. Ryder: A joint working party of officials and British Rail carefully consider the options. Channel tunnel traffic arriving at Waterloo is expected to be heavy, with up to four trains an hour at peak times. The working party concluded that, in preference to checks on board trains, traditional airport-style customs checks at Waterloo would be more cost-effective. Under this system, more than 95 per cent. of passengers can expect to pass through customs without being stopped.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he was consulted in his capacity as director of the European investment bank over the recent decision to extend the loan to the channel tunnel company by a further £300,000,000; and which body or organisation provided a guarantee for this further loan.

Mr. Ryder: Community Finance Ministers and the Chancellor of the Exchequer form the board of governors of the European investment bank. The board of directors is composed of senior officials and private sector representatives from the member states. In accordance with European investment bank procedure, the loan to Eurotunnel was approved by the board of directors.

The loan is guaranteed on the same basis as the European investment bank's previous loan to Eurotunnel: that is, by means of letters of credit from a group of first-class commercial banks, and a pro rata share with the syndicate banks in the charge on the project revenues and assets.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the normal practice of the European investment bank in seeking guarantees for loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The statutes of the European investment bank state that:

"When granting a loan to an undertaking or to a body other than a Member State, the Bank shall make the loan conditional either on a guarantee from the Member State in whose territory the project will be carried out or on other adequate guarantees."

The guarantee for each project is determined on a case by case basis.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment he has made of the impact on the Scotch whisky industry resulting from the elimination of intra-European Community duty free trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: There are no formal proposals in this area but the Commission have made it clear that as a consequence of the completion of the single market, duty-free shopping for intra-community travel should cease.

The Government understand the Commission's view that it makes no sense to grant a tax concession for crossing a frontier when fiscal frontiers have been abolished. Equally, the Government are aware of the economic significance of the United Kingdom duty-free trade.

The Scotch whisky industry and others have made representations about the effects of abolishing duty-free shopping within the Community. The Government will examine all the arguments carefully before any decisions are reached within the Community.

HMSO (Contracts)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Hunterprint company had, or has outstanding, contracts with Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Mr. Ryder: During 1990 HMSO has awarded eight printing contracts to Hunterprint plc. Six of these contracts have been completed, one remains due for completion by July and the other is on-going.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nuclear Accident, Greenwich

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans or studies have been made by his Department to assess measures that would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich in relation to the impact on schoolchildren studying in the area.

Mrs. Rumbold: Action in the event of a nuclear accident involving one of Her Majesty's ships is primarily the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Disabled Students

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he collects from institutions of higher education on provision to facilitate access on the part of students with disabilities.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not routinely collected.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate current transitional expenditure on special facilities, residential accommodation and teaching aids for disabled students in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The responsibility for such expenditure lies with the institutions, which determine their own priorities within the total resources at their disposal. The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on current financial support available to disabled students; and what plans he has to uprate this support.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) on 19 March (Official Report, columns 417-18). Social security benefits for disabled students are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate when the loan element will reach 50 per cent. of student maintenance assuming current inflation figures.

Mr. Jackson: If inflation were to remain at 9·4 per cent. and the total student support from grant (including any parental contribution) and loan were to be increased in line with inflation while the cash value of the grant remained constant, the average maximum loan facility would equal the average maximum basic rate of grant in the academic year 1996-97. The Government's forecast of inflation for the last quarter of 1990 is 7·25 per cent.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update his reply to the hon. Member for Oxford, East, of 18 December 1989, Official Report, columns 36-40, estimating the public sector borrowing requirement effect of the student loans scheme for each year for which figures are available assuming 80 per cent., 90 per cent. and 100 per cent. take-up.

Mr. Jackson: Present estimates of the public sector borrowing requirement effect of the student loans scheme are as announced on 18 December 1989 (Official Report, columns 36-40). The estimates are being revised to take account of new data, including the latest estimates of student numbers, and will be published in due course.

Armouries (School Premises)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has issued regarding the holding of weaponry and live ammunition at schools maintained by local education authorities; if he will indicate his policy on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice his Department gives schools as to the storage of live ammunition on their premises.

Mr. MacGregor: None. Local education authorities are guided in these matters by guidelines issued by the Police Department on regulations issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Haberdasher's Aske's CTC

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what consideration is being given to locating new buildings for the proposed Haberdasher's Aske's city technology college other than those connected with physical education on the site of the current schools' playing fields at Nunhead;

(2) when the feasibility study by his Department on the establishment of a Haberdasher's Aske's city technology college will be completed; and what arrangements will be made to consult the governors, head teachers and parents at the present schools on the building and curriculum plans resulting from this study.

Mrs. Rumbold: The provision of accommodation and facilities for the Haberdasher's Aske's Hatcham city technology college has been the subject of feasibility studies. This work is scheduled to be completed by the end of July. Further consultations on the details of the building programme and the curriculum of the CTC are a matter for the Haberdashers' Company, the governing body of the present schools and the Haberdasher's Aske's City Technology Trust, when established, to decide.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional provision will be made in the funding agreement for the Haberdasher's Aske's city technology college to ensure that future revenue funding will be distributed between the boys' and girls' sections in direct proportion to the number of pupils of each sex attending the CTC.

Mrs. Rumbold: The arrangements for recurrent funding of the city technology colleges (CTCs) and the city technology college for the technology of the arts (CCTA) are set out in the final funding agreement, a copy of which was placed in the House of Commons Library in July 1989. The Haberdasher's Aske's CTC will be funded as one CTC.

Meningitis

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what support is being made available through the Universities Funding Council in the form of block grants to universities for research into meningitis.

Mr. Jackson: Block grant is not earmarked for particular purposes. It is for universities to decide their own priorities for research.

School Closures, Gloucestershire

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools were closed in each of the past five years in the Gloucestershire education authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of schools which were closed in each of the past five years in the Gloucestershire education authority area is as follows:

	Number
1988	9
1987	13
1986	16
1985	23

WALES

Eggs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make representations, prior to the 1 July deadline, to the European Community concerning regulation 2772/75 relating to the marketing of eggs, in order to safeguard the interests of small farmers in this matter.

Mr. David Hunt: No. The proposed Council regulation is only framework legislation. The detail will be included in a Commission regulation which will be adopted under management committee procedure. We shall, of course, bear in mind the interests of all egg producers when the details are discussed and voted on in the management committee.

Menopause Clinics

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many menopause clinics are available in Welsh hospitals.

Mr. Grist: Consultants in a wide range of medical specialties in Wales may hold clinics for menopausal women. However, central records identify out-patient clinics by medical specialty only and menopause clinics are not separately identified.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the role of Cartrefi Cymru in the all-Wales mental handicap strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Cartrefi Cymru offers to county joint planning teams a range of services concerned with identifying the housing needs of people with a mental handicap, establishing their requirements for support, seeking suitable accommodation from housing providers and appointing, training and managing staff.

It works on the basis of contracts with social service departments and health authorities, and has officers based in counties to develop and manage accommodation. There is a central administrative base in Cardiff to co-ordinate and administer the services provided.

M4 (Congestion)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to eliminate traffic jams on the M4.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My plans for major improvements to the M4 are set out in "Roads in Wales Progress and Plans for the 1990s". Traffic management measures are implemented as necessary at particular congestion points and during periods of new construction, improvement and maintenance.

Assembly of Welsh Counties

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet the Assembly of Welsh Counties.

Mr. David Hunt: I met the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance, which includes representatives of the Assembly of Welsh Counties, earlier today.

Ex-service Housing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to encourage the award of grants for modernisation and improvement of housing in Wales which is provided to meet the specific needs of ex-service men and women.

Mr. Grist: Ex-service men and women, in line with any other owner-occupier, landlord or tenant, can benefit from the revised renovation grant system to be introduced on 1 July.

Physiotherapy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated deficit in physiotherapy services in Gwynedd for, respectively (a) pre-school children, (b) children in ordinary schools and (c) children in special schools, at the most recent available date; what were the corresponding figures in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the provision of physiotherapy services for children in Gwynedd following the implementation of the Education Act 1981; and what assessment he has made of whether Gwynedd health authority have acted in line with their strategic plan of 1984.

Mr. Grist: It is for district health authorities and local education authorities to determine the level of provision of physiotherapy services within available resources. The relevant objectives set out in Gwynedd health authority's strategic plan of 1984 indicated an intent to improve facilities subject to the availability of resources and I am informed that the number of physiotherapist/remedial gymnast staff in post has been increased from 40·8 in 1984 to 48·6 in 1989. (Whole-time equivalent at September in each case.)

Mental Illness

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the chair of Gwynedd health authority to discuss the proposal to move psychiatric services to Ysbyty Bryn-Y-Neuadd; and if he will take steps to ensure that proposals are consistant with the all-Wales strategy for mental illness.

Mr. Grist: I am not aware of any formal proposal to move psychiatric services to Ysbyty Bryn-Y-Neauadd nor have I been asked for a discussion by the chair of Gwynedd health authority.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received from Gwynedd health authority any proposal for the relocation of psychiatric services out of Ysbyty Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No. Any proposal entailing a substantial variation in services would of course be subject to the usual requirements for consultation.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the all-Wales strategy for mental illness recommends reversion to the asylum concept of care for mentally ill people, in place of general-hospital-based services.

Mr. Grist: No. It is recognised that the behaviour or condition of a small proportion of mental illness sufferers will continue to require the provision of a protected environment for them, and it is anticipated that any necessary in-patient treatment will be provided at district general hospital units. However, it is a fundamental principle of the mental illness strategy that the great majority of those who need assessment and treatment should receive it in their own locality and within their usual social environment.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which health authorities have agreed to the all-Wales strategy for mental illness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: All health authorities in Wales are participants in the relevant multi-agency county-based teams responsible for the planning and implementation of the mental illness strategy at local level. They are thus all party to the local plans which have formed the basis of funding allocated for the current year.

St. David's Hospital, Bangor

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether Gwynedd health authority will be empowered without reference to his Department to sell St. David's Hospital, Bangor, and to use the proceeds from such a sale at its own discretion.

Mr. Grist: Disposal of St. David's hospital, Bangor is a matter for Gwynedd health authority once it has complied with the conditions set down in the Department's decision letter of 3 March 1989. In the event that the property is then formally declared surplus to health service requirements, the authority may dispose of it without further reference to the Department.

The health authority will be entitled to retain the proceeds from any sale of the hospital land and buildings for the provision of hospital and community health services for which they are responsible under the present procedures relating to disposal of surplus land and buildings.

Beef

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has given any guidelines to health authorities in Wales on serving beef.

Mr. Grist: The Department has issued to all health authorities the text of a statement made on 16 May by the chief medical officer of the Department of Health. This statement confirmed that British beef can be eaten safely by everyone, both adults and children, including patients in hospital.

Ophthalmic Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects figures to be available for new out-patient attendances at ophthalmic clinics in (a) South Glamorgan and (b) Wales for the quarter ending June in the current year.

Mr. Grist: The figures should become available during the autumn of 1990.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hip Replacements

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients are on current waiting lists for hip replacement operations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: A total of 755.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present average waiting period for patients requiring hip replacement operations at Musgrave Park hospital, Belfast.

Mr. Needham: It is 9·5 months.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any proposals to reduce the waiting period for patients requiring hip replacement operations.

Mr. Needham: My noble Friend Lord Skelmersdale recently announced substantial additional funding for the Northern Ireland orthopaedic service, in 1990-91. A sum of £270,000 has been allocated to the Eastern health and social services board to enable it to provide an extra 230 operations at Musgrave Park hospital, including an additional 70 hip operations. A further £100,000 has been made available to the Western board to increase the number of orthopaedic and opthalmology operations carried out at Altnagelvin hospital. The Department of Health and Social Services believes that better management of waiting lists will also help to reduce both the length of the lists and time patients are having to wait and consequently supports initiatives by the clinical resource efficiency support team (CREST) aimed at improving waiting list management.

Whiteabbey Hospital (Orthopaedic Clinic)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how often the orthopaedic clinic at Whiteabbey hospital, Newtownabbey, operates.

Mr. Needham: Once per week.

Life Sentences

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners serving life sentences have been granted parole or released on licence during the past 20 years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: A total of 122 life sentence prisoners have been released on licence since 1 January 1970. Forty-nine prisoners detained at the Secretary of State's pleasure were released on licence in the same period.

There is no system of parole for prisoners in Northern Ireland but there is provision for granting a few hours' compassionate home leave in the event of the death or critical illness of a member of the prisoner's immediate family. In addition, prisoners who have served a substantial period of their sentences may be eligible for short periods of summer and Christmas home leave.

Mortality Rates

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the amount of (a) perinatal and (b) neonatal mortality in each health and social services board in Northern Ireland in each of the years 1986 to 1989.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is in the table:

Health and Social Services Board

	Eastern		Northern		Southern		Western		Northern Ireland
	Number	Rate	Number	Rate	Number	Rate	Number	Rate	Number	Rate

1989	35	3·6	32	5·2	15	2·9	22	4·5	104	4·0

Notes:
1. Perinatal mortality rate is the number of stillbirths and deaths during the first week of the life per 1,000 total births.
2. Neonatal mortality rate is the number of deaths during the first four weeks of life per 1,000 live births.
3. 1989 data is provisional.

Kincora Boys Home

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, in the light of the transcript which has been sent to him of the BBC 2 film on Kincora, and the statements by James, he will set up another inquiry into Kincora.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 7 June 1990]: I have studied the transcript and am satisfied that it contains no material about Kincora not available at the time to Sir George Terry's inquiry. I understand that the individual identified as "James" was in fact interviewed in 1982 by the Royal Ulster Constabulary as part of the inquiry superintended by Sir George Terry.

As I pointed out in my reply of 19 April at column 987, rumours about the homosexual tendencies of one member of the staff at Kincora were in circulation in the 1970's; these were known to the police but did not amount, as the programme made clear, to substantive evidence of homosexual abuse of boys at the hostel. In these circumstances I do not believe that a further inquiry into the events at Kincora could be justified. However, if anyone has substantive new evidence which is relevant he should give it to the police.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 21 May, Official Report, column 30, if he will give the figures for energy consumption in kWh for electricity, litres for oil, therms for gas and tonnes for coal.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 6 June 1990]: The amount of energy consumed in 1988-89 in the buildings occupied by Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office is as follows:

	Energy consumed
Electricity	94,055,748	kWh
Oil	20,149,234	Litres
Gas	1,485,202	Therms
Coal	196	Tonnes

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of energy audits carried out in his Department in the past five years and for each audit a statement of its main conclusions.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 June 1990]: A total of 284 energy audits were carried out over the past five years in the Northern Ireland and Government Office estate.

A statement of main conclusions for each audit could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

CIVIL SERVICE

Pay and Conditions

98. Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what consideration he has given to the report of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee on the civil service pay and conditions of service code.

Mr. Luce: The Committee's recommendations are being considered and the Government will be publishing its response in due course.

Agencies

101. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what proportion of the civil service is now covered either by established agencies or agency candidates.

Mr. Luce: There are at present 31 established agencies, employing some 69,000 staff, and a further 125,000 staff in the 25 announced agency candidates. Together these account for about a third of the civil service.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in which countries the United Kingdom has agreements to hold low-flying exercises.

Mr. Neubert: Under long-standing arrangements, the Royal Air Force carries out low flying training in the United States and Canada (including a significant proportion of training under 250 ft). RAF aircraft stationed in the Federal Republic of Germany also carry out a high proportion of their training in the FRG. Small amounts of low flying may also be carried out in other NATO countries and elsewhere by mutual agreement.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to his Department for low flying facilities used by the Royal Air Force in Labrador and Quebec.

Mr. Neubert: Payments to Canada for Royal Air Force low flying facilities over Labrador and Quebec in the year 1988-89, the latest year for which final bills have been presented, were £5·5993 million.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many farmers have received compensation in respect of damage to livestock caused by the activities of low-flying helicopters from 1 April 1989 to 31 March 90 and from 1 April 1990 to 30 April 1990;

(2) how many farmers have claimed compensation in respect of damage to livestock caused by the activities of low-flying helicopters from 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990 and from 1 April 1990 to 30 April 1990.

Mr. Neubert: Information is not available in the precise form requested and could not be established without disproportionate cost. However, during the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990, 731 claims arising from the activities of low flying helicopters were settled. The figure for 1 April 1990 was 72.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to reduce the incidence of low-flying military aircraft over rural areas in South Down.

Mr. Neubert: There are currently no fixed wing military aircraft undertaking low flying in the South Down area for either operational or training purposes. Flights by military helicopters are carried out for operational reasons, in order to support the RUC in the fight against terrorism. Helicopters are an essential part of the security forces effort to counter the terrorists threat, which in South Down has resulted in the murder of seven soldiers in recent months. Helicopters may need to fly low for operational or weather reasons. I regret the inconvenience that this may cause some of the hon. Member's constituents but I can assure him that low flying is kept to a minimum.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the proposed intermediate-level radioactive waste dump at Rosyth is designed to accommodate waste requirements of nuclear refitting at places other than Rosyth.

Mr. Neubert: The intermediate-level radioactive waste store at Rosyth is being designed to accommodate only the anticipated arisings from processes undertaken by Rosyth royal dockyard.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the proposed new intermediate-level radioactive waste store at Rosyth has been designed to permit expansion of the storage facilities.

Mr. Neubert: The intermediate-level radio-active waste store at Rosyth is not being designed specifically to permit expansion of the storage facilities.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities currently exist at (a) Rosyth and (b) Devonport for the storage of intermediate-level radio-active waste arising from the decommissioning of nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Neubert: No special facilities currently exist at Rosyth and Devonport for storage of intermediate level radio-active waste arising from the decommissioning of nuclear powered submarines.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the transport by (a) rail, (b) road and (c) sea of intermediate-level radioactive waste arising from nuclear-powered submarine operations.

Mr. Neubert: Ministry of Defence policy for transport of all radioactive waste by rail, road or sea is to apply standards no less stringent than those required by International Atomic Energy Agency regulations.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring has taken place of sites used for sea dumping of British chemical warfare stocks, and what have been the results of any such monitoring.

Mr. Neubert: There has been no systematic monitoring of sites where chemical warfare stocks were sea dumped. However, there are no indications of leakage or of any identified hazard to health were that to happen.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations and depths of all sites at sea where British chemical warfare stocks have been dumped.

Mr. Neubert: The United Kingdom abandoned its offensive capability in chemical warfare in the late 1950s. United Kingdom chemical weapons were disposed of over a lengthy period and it would require disproportionate effort to research old records for precise locations. However, I can confirm that all known stocks were disposed of, although from time to time there are discoveries of buried items dating back to the two world wars, which are taken to the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down for safe disposal.

Defence Establishments, Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at which land-based defence establishments in Wales he proposes (a) cuts in establishment numbers, (b) closures and (c) privatisation of services by civilians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence continues to pursue economies and increased efficiency throughout the Department, including regular audits of establishments. There are currently no plans for significant reductions in establishment numbers, closures, or market testing in Wales.

Soldiers (Offences)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many serving soldiers have been convicted within the last 12 months of offences involving violence;

(2) how many soldiers have been convicted within the last 12 months of offences involving dishonesty; and how many have been discharged from the Army;

(3) how many soldiers have been discharged from the Army within the last 12 months following convictions for offences involving violence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers are currently serving sentences at Colchester military correction and training centre; of what offences they were convicted; and what are their sentences.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are 142 soldiers currently serving sentences at the military corrective training centre for desertion/AWOL, dishonesty, violence, drug and sex offences. Their sentences range from 28 days to two years, with just over 100 sentences of six months or more.

Cadet Forces (Armouries)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many armouries of service cadet forces are based in (a) maintained and (b) independent schools; and what standing arrangements exist for their security and for the custody of live ammunition.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are approximately 265 detachments of the Combined Cadet Force (CCF), Army Cadet Force (ACF) and Air Training Corps (ATC) based in maintained schools, and 200 CCF detachments in independent schools. Most of these have armouries, but it would not be possible to give exact figures without disproportionate cost.

Security of cadet force weapons is strictly governed by service regulations. These require arms to be kept securely in appropriate containers or armouries, while ammunition must be stored separately, again under appropriate, secure conditions. It would not be appropriate to give details of these regulations, which, in general, require a higher level of security than the equivalent civil standards for rifle clubs or licenced individual firearms holders. All weapon storage facilities are strictly controlled by the Ministry of Defence and are periodically inspected to ensure that proper standards are being maintained.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expected Mr. Calcutt to report on the case of Colin Wallace when he set up the inquiry; and when he now expects Mr. Calcutt to report.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Mr. Calcutt is conducting an independent inquiry and it is for him to determine how long the work will take. No firm date has yet been set for its completion.

Royal Ordnance Factory, Bishopton

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the action at royal ordnance factory, Bishopton, taken in relation to Graeme Stewart and Allan Milligan of The Scotsman newspaper.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have been asked to reply. On 1 June at the royal ordnance factory, Bishopton, Graeme Stewart and John Allan Milligan were charged by officers of Strathclyde police with contravening section 1 of the Official Secrets Act 1911. A report was subsequently submitted to the procurator fiscal at Paisley. The matter was referred to Crown Office and Crown counsel have instructed that there be no proceedings.

HEALTH

Hospital Beds (North Wiltshire)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total of hospital beds in each of the past five years within the constituency of Wiltshire, North.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about hospital beds is collected centrally by district health authority and is not available for individual parliamentary constituencies. Figures for Swindon and Bath district health authorities are given in the table.

Average daily available beds and in-patient cases treated Swindon and Bath district health authorities, 1984-1988-89

Tampons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 5 April, Official Report, column 745, whether he has yet obtained the information regarding the numbers of deaths in the United Kingdom from toxic shock syndrome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Electorate, Hampshire

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, columns 40-41, if he will now list the number of 1990 electors by which each Hampshire constituency exceeds the electoral quota for an average English seat and the number of additional seats, or part thereof, which would be required to bring the number of Hampshire constituencies up to the English average.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is as follows:

Amount by which constituency differs from the electoral quota based on the 1990 Register

Parliamentary Constituency	Total Parliamentary Electors 1990	Number of Electors	Percentage
Aldershot	83,356	13,799	19·8
Basingstoke	83,111	13,534	19·5
East Hampshire	91,512	21,935	31·5
Eastleigh	91,259	21,682	31·2

Southampton and Itchen	73,223	3,646	5·2
Southampton Test	74,703	5,126	7·4
Winchester	79,226	9,649	13·9
English electoral quota	69,577	—	—
Total excess over quota	—	153,068	—

Note:
The total excess of 153,068 is equivalent to a theoretical entitlement of 2·2 seats of average size.

Transplants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the management of the United Kingdom transplant service.

Mr. Dorrell: The United Kingdom transplant service (UKTS) is at present a non-statutory body funded by the health departments via the South Western regional health authority. Its functions have grown in recent years and a more formal management arrangement is needed. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has decided in principle that a special health authority should be set up to manage the UKTS. The next step will be an independent implementation study by Dr. John Evans to advise on the structure and operation of the authority. Establishing a special health authority for the UKTS should provide a sound basis for the management of the UKTS for the next few years and pending decisions on any more permanent arrangements.

Alcoholism

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that, under the new community care system, adequate funding reaches post-detoxification residential care units for people recovering from severe alcohol problems.

Mr. Dorrell: We shall be directing local authorities to include provision for alcohol misusers in their community care plans. This will ensure that those agencies that provide residential care for alcohol misusers will have access to the funds that are available via local authorities.

Hip Replacements

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources will be made available to the South West health authority to expedite hip replacement operations for those patients aged over 75 years.

Mr. Dorrell: The provision of treatment services in the south west using these and other resources is a matter for the regional health authority.

The initial revenue allocation to the South Western regional health authority for 1990-91 is £919,011,000, 9 per cent. more than the initial allocation for 1989-90.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list in the Official Report the health authorities which have waiting lists of under 12 months for hip replacement operations;

(2) if he will list the average waiting time in the South West district health authorities for patients needing hip replacement surgery; and what steps are being taken to reduce this delay.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on waiting lists is collected centrally by specialty but not for specific operations or procedures. The six-monthly publication of hospital waiting list statistics, which is placed in the Library, provides information about waiting time for admission for each specialty.

The latest information held centrally about the time waited, by operation, relates to patients admitted in 1985 and is published in "1985 Hospital In-patients Enquiry main tables for England series number 27", a copy of which is also available in the Library. Information on the time waited for specific types of operation in 1988-89 is expected to be available shortly.

We are committed to reducing excessive waiting and have invested a total of £119 million over four years from the waiting list fund for this purpose. In 1989-90 £8·7 million was allocated to the specialty of trauma and orthopaedics of which at least £441,000 was specifically used for hip operations.

Funding, Wirral

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason funding for the Wirral family practitioner committee has been cut by £400,000 in the current year; and if he will detail his estimate of the number of reception and support staff local general practitioners will cease to employ as a result of the new budget arrangements.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The preliminary allocation of £1,979,000 to Wirral family practitioner committee for practice staff and premises improvements this year is an increase of over 13 per cent. on its expenditure of £1,745,000 in 1989-90. We shall make any necessary adjustment to this record allocation when we know from family practitioner committees the full year cost of their commitments at the end of March. This will enable family practitioner committees to honour our undertaking to continue full support for existing practice staff.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish a clearing house in his Department to facilitate a more efficient use of hospital resources so that general practitioners and consultants can be directed to those hospitals with the shortest waiting list for each particular category of operation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government believe that central direction is not the most effective way of managing the National Health Service. The reforms set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients", and embodied in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, will create both the incentives, and the means, for the more efficient use of resources and improved quality of service to patients.

Under the new arrangements there will be better information for general practitioners on the waiting times each hospital will be expected to achieve, and greater flexibility to choose the most appropriate package of care overall, taking account of such information.

Battered Women

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of refuges for battered women; and how many places they provide in each local authority in England and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. Data held by the National Voluntary Organisation Women's Aid Federation (England) Ltd. indicate that there are 200 such refuges in England. I will write to the hon. Member about numbers of places in each local authority. Refuges in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether enough supplies of tuberculosis vaccine are now available for routine school vaccinations.

Mr. Dorrell: Supplies of BCG vaccine for routine school vaccinations were restored in May 1990. We have been assured by the supplier that adequate stocks are now available to maintain a continuing supply for this purpose.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report, the reported cases of tuberculosis for each health authority in England for each year between 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The information available is shown in the table.

Notifications of tuberculosis are collected by local authority area rather than by health authority area; aggregating of data is possible to regional health authority (RHA) level, but not to district health authority (DHA) level because of boundary differences. Information at RHA is shown in the table.

Erythropoetin

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newbury, Official Report, 9 March, column 902, whether any decision has yet been reached on licensing of the drug Erythropoetin.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, Tuesday 8 May 1990]: A licence has been granted for the drug Erythropoetin and I understand that the company has now put the drug on the market.

Meningitis

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report details of all research into meningitis currently being funded by his Department, indicating in each case the level of funds being made available.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has made available £55,437 for a prospective case control study of meningococcal disease in eight west country health districts from 1 May 1988 until 30 April 1990. A final report is awaited.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ravenscraig

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if commercial sections in British embassies have been instructed to seek potential investors in an independent Scottish steel industry, following British Steel's recent decision to close capacity at Ravenscraig.

Mr. Maude: Instructions have not been sent to commercial sections. Commercial sections in our embassies are, however, always seeking to identify potential inward investment projects across the range of business sectors and would pass on to the Invest in Britain Bureau details of any interest which may be expressed in steel or any other sector.

St. Helena

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in view of the improvement in telecommunications with St. Helena, steps can now be taken to establish commercial banking facilities.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are committed to strengthening the private sector on St. Helena. Since improvements in St. Helena's telecommunications and communications links were first planned, we have approached a number of commercial banks to see if they would be prepared to establish a branch on St. Helena. None has yet decided to do so. We are also considering other ways of introducing banking facilities, for example the establishment of a development finance institution which might include a banking function.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans have been formulated to improve transportation by sea and air to St. Helena and its dependencies.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of improvements are being made. St. Helena's only regular, though infrequent, link with the outside world is a passenger/cargo vessel built in 1963, which Her Majesty's Government subsidises. The vessel also serves St. Helena's dependencies of Ascension and Tristan da Cunha. Because of its age, the ship is shortly to be replaced by a larger, purpose-built vessel, built at a Scottish yard, which is expected to enter service in late summer. In addition, it has been decided to commence a weekly shipping shuttle, subsidised by Britain, between St. Helena and Ascension Island.

Israel

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will send a message of concern to the Israeli Government about Israel's continued refusal to sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: We take every suitable opportunity to express our concern about this matter, and to reiterate our view that the best way to achieve a nuclear-weapons-free zone in the middle east would be for all states in the region to accede to the NPT.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will send a message of concern to the Israeli Government about the continued imprisonment of Mr. Mordechai Vanunu.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Antarctica

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to representations from individuals and organisations concerned about the threat that mining could pose to the environment of Antarctica; and if he will make it his policy to press British opposition to any such developments.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 14 May at column 312 to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley).

Wildlife Protection

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list his responsibilities in relation to the worldwide protection of wildlife.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is responsible for the conclusion of all international agreements with other states or international organisations, including their extension, as appropriate, to the Dependent Territories.

In the case of wildlife, the four world-wide conservation conventions to which the United Kingdom is party are the Washington convention on international trade in endangered species of wild flora and fauna, the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance, the Bonn convention on the conservation of migratory species of wild flora and fauna and the convention for the protection of the world cultural and natural heritage 1975.

Within the context of collective government, responsibility for fulfilling the United Kingdom's obligations under these conventions and formulating our contribution to their development world wide rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment; in respect of the Dependent Territories my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has those responsibilities.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on negotiations he has had or is having with the relevant authorities in (a) East Germany, (b) Romania, (c) Hungary, (d) Poland, (e) Czechoslovakia, (f) Yugoslavia and (g) Bulgaria regarding the requirement for British passport holders to have a visa, exchange currency and pre-booked accommodation.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have held no such negotiations with the countries concerned. Although the situation varies from country to country, most of these requirements have now been abandoned. We welcome this.

Nuclear Arms

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which terrorities, for which the United Kingdom is internationally responsible, lie within the zone of application of the 1967 treaty of Tlatelolco; and what are the United Kingdom's rights and obligations under the treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The territories of the Falkland Islands, South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands, Cayman Islands, Turks and Caicos Islands, British Virgin Islands, Anguilla and Montserrat lie within the zone of application of the Treaty of Tlatelolco.

Only Latin American states can be full parties to the treaty. The United Kingdom has, however, signed and ratified both the additional protocols to the treaty. Under protocol 1 the United Kingdom, in the territories above, must use exclusively for peaceful purposes the nuclear material and facilities which are under its jurisdiction and prohibit and prevent:

(a) the testing, use, manufacture, production and acquisition by any means whatsoever of any nuclear weapons directly or indirectly; and

(b) the receipt, storage, installation, deployment and any form of possession of any nuclear weapons, directly or indirectly.

Under protocol 2 the United Kingdom has undertaken not to contribute in any way to the performance of acts violating article 1 of the treaty itself in the states to which the treaty applies. Article 1 essentially prohibits and prevents those acts in (a) and (b) above.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) of 4 May, Official Report, column 694, for which regions of the world Her Majesty's Government supports the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones.

Mr. Waldegrave: We support the establishment of nuclear weapon free zones in those regions where their creation can contribute to regional security, to non-proliferation and to disarmament in general.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty review conference, Official Report, 9 May 1990, column 181, what resources and support team of civil servants will be committed by his Department to the review conference; what issues, excepting organisational matters, were raised at the nuclear non-proliferation treaty third preparatory meeting to which he refers; if his Department will provide any resources to non-governmental organisations wanting to attend the nuclear non-proliferation treaty review conference; and whether Her Majesty's Government will support observer status for non-governmental organisations at the conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under the financing formula for the review conference, we are committed to paying 6·13 per cent. of the total costs. I expect to lead the United Kingdom delegation initially. Subsequently, the delegation will be led by Her Majesty's representative to the conference on disarmament. The delegation will comprise a number of officials.

The third preparatory committee dealt only with organisational matters, although other issues were discussed in the margins of the meeting.

We do not plan to make available any financial assistance for non-governmental organisations to attend the review conference. The draft rules of procedure for the conference do not make any provision for non-governmental organisations to be granted observer status, but they may attend meetings of the plenary and of the main committees, in which case they are entitled to receive the documents of the conference.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has prepared a submission for the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty later in the current year.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 9 May at column 181 to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang).

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives Her Majesty's Government have planned in arms control and disarmament.

Mr. Waldegrave: We and our NATO allies agreed at the North Atlantic Council meeting, held at Turnberry on 7 and 8 June, that:

We would instruct our negotiators at the Vienna talks on conventional forces in Europe to pursue new approaches to mutually acceptable solutions, in particular on armour, aircraft and verification. As soon as a CFE agreement is reached, allies will be prepared to undertake follow-on negotiations to further enhance security and stability in Europe.

Negotiations on United States and Soviet short-range nuclear weapon systems in Europe should begin shortly after a CFE agreement is concluded.

The CSCE process should be strengthened and given effective institutional form.

A copy of the Communiqué from the meeting is being placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweatlh Affairs whether any states have indicated an intention to withdraw from the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Romania

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweatlh Affairs what medical supplies, food, clothing and other non-financial aid the United Kingdom has supplied to Romania since 1 March.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development's answer of 19 April at column 1017.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonweatlh Affairs if, pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 110, to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing), he will list in the Official Report the financial aid supplied by the Government to Romania since that date; and what financial aid he intends to supply to Romania over the next six months.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Filipino Wives

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of Filipino wives of British subjects seeking admission to the United Kingdom whose applications were submitted to the independent appellate authority up to the end of March are still outstanding; when the application of Mrs. Nancy Barrera Sanderson will be decided; what are the reasons for the delay in processing such applications; and whether he will take urgent steps to end the distress caused by the delays to lawfully married couples.

The Attorney-General: The information requested in the first part of the question is not available, as the immigration appellate authorities (IAA) do not record information separately about appeals from Filipino citizens.

The IAA have now sent the case papers of Mrs. Nancy Berrera Sanderson's appeal to her representatives in the United Kingdom. When the representatives indicate to the IAA that they are ready to proceed to the hearing before the independent adjudicator, a hearing will be set down within four to six weeks.

Delays in processing appeals at the IAA have been caused by the unexpectedly high rise in the volume of appeals in 1988 and 1989. There was a 60 per cent. rise in 1988; a 30 per cent. rise in 1989; and a further 40 per cent. rise is expected over the next 18 months.

Significant additional resources were provided to the IAA last year, which resulted in a 50 per cent. rise in disposal rates. However, the increased workload has been so great that the backlog of appeals still remains high, but the situation is being kept under review.

THE ARTS

Museums and Galleries (Admission Charges)

81. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last discussed with the national museums and galleries attendances and admission charges.

Mr. Luce: I discuss a wide range of matters with directors of the national museums and galleries on a regular basis.

The question of whether or not to levy admission charges is a matter for decision by the trustees and directors of individual institutions.

Departmental Budget

82. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the increase in real terms in his Department's budget since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The increase in real terms in the Office of Arts and Libraries' Budget since 1979 is 48 per cent. This is a clear indication of the commitment that the Government have to the cultural life of Britain.

Arts Bodies (Administration)

83. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning the cost of administration of arts bodies.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations about the cost of arts administration in recent months.

Three-year Funding

86. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning the concept of three-year funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received representations from all the bodies that I fund directly, and from many others. There has been a wide welcome for the concept of three-year funding, particularly as it provides a firm base for longer-term planning.

Arts Funding (Shire Counties)

87. Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the contribution per head by each shire county in grants or loans to arts organisations.

Mr. Luce: The information is not held centrally. The Chartered Institute of Public Finance (CIPFA) has published the following figures for 1989-90.

Business Sponsorship

88. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Minister for the Arts what proportion of money received under the business sponsorship incentive scheme goes to small, regional or innovative arts bodies, respectively.

Mr. Luce: In 1989-90, 71 per cent. of the award money went to arts organisations outside London, of which 17·8 per cent. went to Scotland and 14·8 per cent. to Wales. Small and innovative arts bodies continue to be successful in attracting sponsorship under the Scheme. I regret that detailed information on the proportion of funds that they receive is not available.

Theatres (Nottingham)

89. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next plans to visit (a) Nottingham playhouse and (b) Nottingham Theatre Royal to discuss funding for east midlands arts.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans at present to do so.

Arts Bodies (Regions)

90. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what major arts bodies have relocated to the regions in the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Detailed information about the relocation of arts organisations is not held centrally. I am aware, however, that a number of major arts organisations are moving all or part of their operations to the regions. They include the transfer of the Sadlers Wells Royal Ballet to Birmingham; the extension of the Tate gallery's range of activities to Liverpool and, in the future, to Cornwall; and the opening by the science museum of the national museum of film, photography and television in Bradford. I welcome these and other developments which ensure that the best of British arts is accessible to the widest possible public.

Arts Funding (NAO Report)

91. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received following the National Audit Office report into the funding of arts bodies.

Mr. Luce: I have received no such representations.

Royal Opera House

92. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the level of public support for the royal opera house for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: In 1990-91 the Arts Council's grant to the royal opera house has been set at £15·2 million. This represents an increase of 11 per cent. on last year's figure, well above the rate of inflation.

"Arts in Education"

93. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has held with "arts in education" teams.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Science, and I have both acknowledged the role which the arts will play in the national curriculum. An important booklet, "Arts and Schools", jointly funded by the two departments has just been published and issued to all maintained schools in Great Britain. It includes a number of case studies of best practice in art in education by various arts organisations—including museums, art galleries and libraries—working with schools to widen the boundaries of classroom learning.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he proposes taking to increase cultural links with eastern European countries in the climate which now prevails.

Mr. Luce: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has provided an additional £2·25 million in 1990-91 to enable the British Council to increase cultural activity in eastern Europe including new British cultural centres there. I am exploring the scope for mounting cultural initiatives within the remit of the know-how-fund. I have also given an extra £50,000 to the Arts Council and £5,000 to Visiting Arts to help bring eastern European arts groups to Britain.

Wilding Report

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Minister for the Arts what reports he has received on the overlapping between the Office of Arts and Libraries, the Arts Council and the regional arts associations in the light of the Wilding report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am aware of the recent National Audit Office report to the Parliamentary Accounts Committee which examined the relationship between the Arts Council, the regional arts associations and the Office of Arts and Libraries. I believe that the changes in the structure of arts funding that I announced to the House on 13 March 1990 will clarify the responsibilities of the Arts Council and the Regional Arts Associations, and strengthen accountability for taxpayers' money.

Devolved Financial Responsibility

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has received representations from the director of the National Campaign for the Arts on the cost implications of devolved financial responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I believe that my proposals will result in a structure for arts funding which will give even better value for money. It is however too early to say what savings will be released from these changes. More importantly, they will lead to clarification of funding responsibilities, elimination of the duplication and overlap between the Arts Council and the regions noted by both the Wilding and National Audit Office reports, and strengthening of regional accountability for the money that they spend on the arts.

SCOTLAND

Land Registration

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any additional resources will be made available to accelerate the introduction of the provisions of the Land Registration (Scotland) Act 1979 relating to registration; and if he will state for each non-operational area (i) the date up to which the relative Sasine Register has presently been completed, and (ii) any representations as to the possible consequences in conveyancing transactions; and what response has been made.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Department of the Registers of Scotland is required by statute to recover its expenditure from fee income. Since 1989 the Department has had more freedom to finance expansion from extra fee income. I have recently made an order, to come into force on 4 July, to increase some of the fee levels previously set in 1981. The additional income will allow backlogs to be reduced and pave the way for extending the Land Register.

Information as at 6 June 1990 about the dates to which the Sasine register volumes are complete is set out in the table below.

Representations have been made from time to time by the Law Society of Scotland about the effect on conveyancing transactions of delays in registration but these have not been specific to individual areas.

In establishing the Department as an executive agency in April 1990 my right hon. and learned Friend set targets for turnround times to be reduced from 30 weeks in 1989-90 to 17 weeks in 1992-93 as respects the General Register of Sasines, and from 35 to 17 weeks for registration of dealings in the Land Register.

Lead Contamination

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money his Department has spent in each of the years between 1979-90, inclusive, on publicising the availability of lead replacement grants; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no separate publicity on grants for replacement of lead plumbing. The Scottish Development Department publishes a guide to all forms of assistance available under the improvement and repairs grant system. This is distributed, free of charge, to all Scottish local authorities, who are encouraged to make it widely available.

Fishing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take action to prohibit the use of mobile fishing gear in sea lochs.

Mr. Lang: My noble Friend the Minister of State recently issued a consultation paper, "Additional Conservation Measures", in area VIA (West Coast of Scotland) in which views were sought on extending the current winter closure of the west coast sea lochs to a full year ban. The consultation period has now ended and responses are being considered.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has of illegal fishing in the Minch.

Mr. Lang: The Minch is subject to regular surveillance by ships and aircraft of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, as are all of the main fishing grounds off the Scottish coast. In 1989 a total of five infringements of fisheries regulations were detected.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on industrial fishing in relation to (a) ammodytes marinus, (b) ammodytes tubianus, (c) ammodytes semiguaranatus, (d) hyperoplus lancealatus and (e) hyperoplus immaculatus.

Mr. Lang: The Government's policy in relation to fishing for (a) Ammodytes marinus, (b) Ammodytes tobianus, (c) Gymnammodytes semisquamatus, (d)

Hyperoplus lanceolatus and (e) Hyperoplus immaculatus, commonly known as sand-eels, is the same as for other industrial species. Stocks are managed on the basis of scientific advice on the effect of fishing effort on stock size. The aim of such management is the sustainable long-term exploitation of the fishery resource.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue guidance to local authorities to make culverts under new roads cobble-bottomed to assist spawning fish to get upstream.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department is currently considering design improvements for culverts which may assist the upstream passage of fish and is co-operating with the freshwater fisheries laboratory of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland in the assessment of a particular design. If the results of the trial prove satisfactory from both an engineering and fisheries point of view appropriate design guidance will be issued to roads' authorities.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will designate the northern Minch as a marine nature reserve.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton It is for the Nature Conservancy Council, as the Government's statutory adviser, to propose any area for designation as a marine nature reserve (MNR). Two potential MNRs have been identified in Scotland by the Nature Conservancy Council using guidelines laid down in the joint NCC/NERC report entitled "Nature Conservation in the Marine Environment". The northern Minch is not one of those potential sites.

Recognised Bodies

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he intends to publish draft regulations on exempt recognised bodies and small recognised bodies;

(2) what consultations he intends to have concerning regulations on exempt recognised bodies and small recognised bodies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Provided that the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Bill receives Royal Assent, I intend to consult widely in the first half of 1991 on the regulations to be made about charities.

Government Buildings (Security)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the performance and cost of security services provided at various government buildings in Edinburgh by Burns Security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am satisfied with the security guarding services currently provided by Burns International Security Services (UK) to the Scottish Office. The contract provided substantial savings for the Scottish Office compared with the previous in-house service.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish his report on the operation of Burns (International Security Services (UK)) Ltd. in public buildings.

Mr. Rifkind: There is no report on this subject; in any event I do not regard material dealing with these matters as suitable for publication.

Disabled People

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he expects employers to contribute to the costs of providing training for people who have disabilities.

Mr. Lang: I see no reason why employers should not make contributions which appropriately reflect the direct benefit which they gain from trainees on placement with them, whether the trainees have disabilities or not, though the level of appropriate contribution will of course vary according to circumstances.

ROF Bishopton

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Ministry of Defence action in relation to Graeme Stewart and Allan Milligan in Renfrewshire on Friday 1 June.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 1 June at the royal ordnance factory, Bishopton, Graeme Stewart and John Allan Milligan were charged by officers of Strathclyde police with contravening section 1 of the Official Secrets Act 1911. A report was subsequently submitted to the procurator fiscal at Paisley. The matter was referred to crown office and crown counsel have instructed that there be no proceedings.

Training (Orkney and Shetland)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure in each of the last two financial years on (a) YTS and (b) employment training in (i) Orkney and (ii) Shetland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 June 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

	Financial year	Youth training £	Employment training £
Orkney	1988-89	336,185	60,252
	1989-90	411,223	59,974
Shetland	1988-89	312,703	48,403
	1989-90	331,355	110,590

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed Training Agency expenditure in 1990-91 in (a) youth training and (b) employment training in (i) Orkney and (ii) Shetland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 June 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

	Youth training £	Employment training £
Orkney	347,277	143,969
Shetland	255,890	137,939

Leukaemia

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies have been made of the incidence of leukaemia among children of people working at nuclear power stations in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 June 1990]: A case control study of all instances of childhood leukaemia diagnosed in Caithness between 1968 and 1986 is in the process of being completed. The findings of this study are expected to become available later this year.

The committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment (COMARE) is currently planning co-ordinated retrospective studies of all cases of childhood leukaemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in the vicinity of all nuclear sites in Scotland.

Bankruptcy

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show for each year since inception of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985 the number of cases where bankruptcy arose principally through (a) personal debt, (b) business debt, (c) cautionary obligation and (d) other.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not separately recorded.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much, in cash and as a percentage of domestic rates, was met from housing benefit or income support in 1989-90.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Estimated 1989-90 expenditure for housing benefit rate rebates in England and Wales is £1·2 billion, which represents 11 per cent. of domestic rate income. The maximum housing benefit rate rebate payable was 80 per cent. of a claimant's domestic rates liability. Help towards the remaining 20 per cent. contribution for claimants in receipt of income support was included in the income support rates. Detailed expenditure information about this specific aspect of income support is not available. Domestic rates in Scotland were replaced by the community charge from 1 April 1989.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the financial implications of the transfer of local authority residential care homes to housing associations, voluntary and private organisations necessitating increased income support payments to some of the residents concerned.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information about expected numbers of income support claimants and expenditure for future years including the cost of such transfers is published in the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm 1014). It has never been the practice to publish separate forecasts about expenditure specifically on people in residential care and nursing homes.

Porthmadog Local Office

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what payments were made by his Department to beneficiaries in the Porthmadog Department of Social Security office area, during 1989-90 or the most recent available year, to help maintain people in (a) private nursing homes and (b) private residential homes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information in the form requested is not available.

Telephone Relay Service

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his reply of 18 April, Official Report, columns 890-91, relating to the Californian relay system, he envisages a similar national unlimited access telephone relay service for deaf people in Great Britain.

Mr. Scott: I am delighted that British Telecom announced on 7 June that it is to provide £4 million over three years to launch the funding of a nationwide telephone relay system in Great Britain. The money will be given to the Royal National Institute for the Deaf (RNID) to meet the costs of building, equipping and running a telephone exchange which will eventually operate on a nationwide basis and provide a 24-hour service.

The new exchange will replace the experimental scheme which the RNID have been operating in London for some time. Although necessarily limited in scope, the RNID service has demonstrated the benefits of enabling a deaf person to use the telephone to call friends, to contact local services and to make business arrangements. The Government and OFTEL as well as the RNID have been keen to see the service expanded so that deaf people wherever they live and at any time of the day, can have the freedom of the telephone system.

The national exchange will be sited outside London, but customers will be charged only on the basis of the final destination of the call.

Social Fund

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases since April 1988 social fund loans have been refused for reasons which included an assumption that the applicant lacked the resources which would allow repayment to be secured.

Mr. Scott: Since April 1988, 39,000 applications, representing 1·3 per cent. of loan decisions, have been refused because of an applicant's inability to repay.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current level of social security benefits received by (a) a single householder aged under 25 years, (b) a single householder with disabilities aged under 25 years, (c) a pensioner couple, (d) a pensioner couple with disabilities and (e) an unemployed man with a dependent wife and two children; and in each case what they would have received at the present time if the pre-April 1988 system of benefits were still operating.

Mr. Gillian Shephard: The question is not sufficiently specific concerning the circumstances of each beneficiary to enable an assessment to be made of what benefit they might have been entitled to under the old scheme, or would be entitled to under the present scheme.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates are currently eligible for family credit and/or income support (a) in Wales, (b) in each county in Wales and (c) in each district council area in Wales; and what is the percentage take-up in each case.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information is not available.

Information about the total number of families eligible for family credit or income support can be obtained only for Great Britain, and only retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether claimants for housing benefit can be disqualified from receipt of that benefit if their name does not appear on the community charge register for the appropriate local authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Entitlement to housing benefit is not conditional on registration for the community charge. However, one of the conditions of entitlement to housing benefit is that the claimant must normally occupy the dwelling in respect of which benefit is claimed as home. It is for local authorities themselves to decide what evidence is reasonably required to determine whether this condition is met.

Debt Recovery

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he intends to privatise any part of his Department's debt recovery function;

(2) what work has been done within his Department concerning the possibility of privatising parts of his Department's debt recovery function.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no such plans. Following a recent efficiency scrutiny on the recovery of money owed to the Department, officials undertaking preparatory work for the ensuing action plan gave some consideration to this possibility. Ministers however have no intention of using private debt collectors to collect money from social security beneficiaries.

National Insurance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the yearly cost of providing (a) spouse additions and (b) survivors benefits to the dependants of national insurance contributors when the benefit paid is dependent on (a) male contribution records and (b) female contribution records.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 24 May 1990]: The estimated cost in 1988-89 on male contribution records of providing (a) spouse additions is £800 million; and (b) survivors benefits is £5·1 billion. On female contribution records the respective figures are £4 million and £5 million.

Note: The figures for survivors benefits do not include graduated pension inherited from a late spouse or basic retirement pension paid to certain widows. These could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EMPLOYMENT

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to counter the effects of the recent publicity about dirty beaches on the tourist trade from home and abroad.

Mr. Nicholls: Department of the Environment Ministers have only recently emphasised the fact that over three quarters of designated bathing waters in England and Wales now meet EC standards; and have highlighted the very substantial programme of remedial works which is currently in hand to bring the remaining bathing waters up to standard.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures on the job interview guarantee scheme giving the number of participants and employers involved for each of the pilot areas; and whether he has any plans to make participation compulsory for the long-term unemployed.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for the job interview guarantee, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the employment service agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady on the first part of her question.

There are no plans to make the job interview guarantee compulsory for the long-term unemployed.

Mentally Ill People

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make more funds available to the Training Agency for people with mental health problems.

Mr. Nicholls: The overall budgets for training incorporate funds for trainees with special training needs, including people with mental health problems.

Tourism, South Devon

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the consequences for tourism in south Devon of the holing of the supertanker Rosebay and subsequent oil pollution; and if he will make a statement as to the current condition of the tourist beaches.

Mr. Nicholls: Due to prompt action by local authorities, the Department of Transport and the local tourism industry, the tourist areas affected by oil pollution were completely cleared within a week. I understand, however, that there has been a slight decline in new holiday bookings in the area. Some of this decline may be attributable to inaccurate media comment about the extent of pollution. Nevertheless, I am confident that the area's excellent reputation for clean beaches will soon be restored.

Women with Children

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest estimated figures for the number of women with children aged under five years who do no paid work in Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: Preliminary estimates from the labour force survey for spring 1989 show that there were in Great Britain 1,792,000 women of working age, 16 to 59 years old, whose youngest dependent child was aged under five and who did no paid work in the survey week.

Tourism Projects

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 333, if he will list those United Kingdom projects relating to tourism which have been accepted for co-funding by the European Commission.

Mr. Nicholls: The 39 projects accepted for co-funding are:

Calderdale Educational Youth Tourism Campaign.
Bournemouth Music Festival.
Yorkshire and Humberside Tourist Board Youth Travel Consortium.
Fermanagh District Council Road Show and Patnerschaftfest.
Youth Hostels Association Gateway Project.
ICOMOS UK European Conference.
Priory High School Tourism Video.

Wine Tasting Competition, Bristol Wine Fair and Festival.
International Festival of Music and Dance, Inverness.
European Tourism Week, Brighton District Council.
St. Bernard Cistercian Trail, Catholic Heritage Tours.
Welcoming West London, Boroughs Promotion.
Paisley International Organ Festival, Renfrew.
Bolton European Awareness Campaign.
The Grand Tour, Great Britain Cities Marketing Group.
St. Albans Festival, St. Albans District Council.
The Jacqueline du Pre International Cello Competition Launch Concert, Torquay.
Durham County Council Town Twinning Project.
Quarry Bank Mill.
The Boat Museum Exchange Project.
Lancashire County Council, European Green Exchange.
Manchester Olympic Festival.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was discussed, and what decisions were reached, at the most recent meeting of the European Community's Labour and Social Affairs Council.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) on 6 June 1990, Official Report, column 668.

Home Workers

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of home workers covered by wages councils whose pay was checked by a visit in 1989, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 1 February, Official Report, column 255.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give estimates of the number of home workers covered by wages councils and the statistics on compliance with wages council rates in 1989 for home workers in a similar format to the answer of 11 May 1989, to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist), Official Report, columns 515-16.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information on home workers in wages council trades is given in the table. No count is made of the numbers of home workers covered by the councils, but estimates suggest that the total lies between 20,000 and 30,000.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the total expenditure on the action for jobs campaign in 1986-87 was spent on (a) press advertising, (b) radio advertising, (c) outdoor advertising, (d) exhibition material, (e) research and (f) presentations.

Mr. Eggar: In 1986-87 £750,000 was spent on press advertising on the action for jobs campaign; £500,000 was spent of radio advertising; £400,000 was spent on outdoor advertising; £600,000 was spent on exhibition material; £50,000 was spent on research; and £950,000 was spent on presentation.

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the total expenditure on the action for jobs campaign in 1988-89 was spent on (a) press advertising and (b) radio advertising.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988-89, £77,000 was spent on press advertising for the action for jobs campaign and £35,000 on radio advertising.

Wages Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the questionnaire sent to wages council establishments to check compliance with the Wages Act 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: There are two questionnaires sent to wages council establishments to check compliance with the Wages Act 1986—one for catering establishments and the other for non-catering establishments. I have arranged for both to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the reasons for not pursuing arrears of wages councils' payments in all cases except those which are not pursued at the worker's request; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Specific information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In the small minority of cases where the wages inspectorate decides not to pursue arrears the decision is taken only after careful consideration of all the circumstances, including the likelihood of success bearing in mind such factors as the employers' ability to pay and the adequacy of evidence.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average fine imposed on employers found to be committing wages council offences in 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The average fine imposed per employer was £305·50.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the numbers of workers covered by wages councils in each wages inspectorate division for 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he will take to reduce the underpayment of wages and other offences committed under wages council legislation which are attributed to ignorance or inadvertence.

Mr. Nicholls: Measures designed to inform employers about statutory obligations on minimum pay include the provision of information in employer and business guides, talks and advice given by the wages inspectorate to individuals and groups, and the maintenance of a register of employers in scope of wages councils and to whom wages orders are sent. Given the very high level of compliance with wages orders these measures are considered adequate.

Wages Inspectorate

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide information on all employees of the wages inspectorate division of the Department of Employment broken down by grade, sex and race.

Mr. Nicholls: Following is the information:

Grade	Male	Female	Ethnic minority origin
7	1	—	—
Senior executive officer	7	1	—
Higher executive officer	13	1	—
Executive officer	37	25	—

Disabled People (Employment Quotas)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford of 21 February, Official Report, column 825, if he will list the criteria used to grant quota exemption permits under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Eggar: Instructions to disablement resettlement officers require that they consider: (i) the availability of suitable registered disabled people; and (ii) the degree of commitment shown by employers towards meeting their obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

TRANSPORT

Road and Rail Investment

14. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much will be invested in road and rail schemes over the next three years.

Mr. Parkinson: We expect that over the next three years some £6·2 billion will be invested in rail and underground schemes. In the same period £5·7 billion will be invested in the national road network and a further £2 billion on local roads.

Airline Competition

15. Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to create a level playing field of competition on United Kingdom domestic aviation trunk routes out of Heathrow.

23. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to create a level playing field of competition on United Kingdom domestic aviation trunk routes out of Heathrow.

Mr. Parkinson: It is very important that competition on our domestic routes—as on international ones—should be fair and in the interests of users. If there is any suggestion that competition is being distorted by unfair practices, there now exist expedited procedures for dealing with any complaint an airline puts forward, within a matter of weeks.

51. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to meet the European Commissioner responsible for competition to discuss airline policy.

75. Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to meet the European Commissioner responsible for competition to discuss airline competition policy.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend saw the Commissioner at the last EC Transport Council meeting in March when they discussed aviation competition issues. My right hon. Friend expects to see the Commissioner again at the next meeting later this month.

36. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next hopes to meet the chairman of British Airways to discuss airline competition policy.

52. Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next hopes to meet the chairman of British Airways to discuss airline competition policy.

Mr. McLoughlin: I meet the Chairman from time to time, and our discussions cover a range of issues.

31. Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to create a level playing field of competition on United Kingdom domestic aviation trunk routes out of Heathrow.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is very important that competition on our domestic routes—as on international ones—should be fair and in the interests of users. If there is any suggestion that competition is being distorted by unfair practices, there now exist procedures for dealing with any complaint an airline puts forward, within a matter of weeks.

27. Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Midland Airways to discuss airline competition in the United Kingdom.

33. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Midland Airways to discuss airline competition policy.

44. Sir Giles Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Midland Airways to discuss airline competition policy.

39. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Midland Airways to discuss airline competition policy in Great Britain.

Mr. McLoughlin: I meet the chairman from time to time, and our discussions cover a range of issues.

Freight

16. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of freight is carried by rail in (a) Great Britain, (b) the United States of America and (c) the European Community countries.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, the latest year for which international comparisons are available, the proportion of freight tonnes lifted by rail in Great Britain was 8 per cent. The average for the European Community was 8 per cent. We do not have a comparable figure for the United States of America.

Dangerous Dogs

17. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to ban dangerous dogs from public transport.

Mr. Freeman: No. Public transport operators already have powers to refuse dangerous dogs.

Airshows (Regulations)

18. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review regulations in force at air shows to which the public are admitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The current regulations concerning safety at air shows at which more than 500 spectators are expected, article 56 of the air navigation order 1989, first came into force on 31 January 1989. The regulations are kept under constant review.

SOLAS '90 Regulations

19. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement regarding the progress of negotiations on the retrospective implementation of the SOLAS '90 regulations.

Mr. McLoughlin: A proposal to implement the SOLAS '90 regulations to existing ro-ro passenger ships was put to the maritime safety committee at IMO on 21 May. The committee referred the proposal for evaluation to a specialist sub-committee on stability matters. It is our intention to invite European maritime administrations to an early meeting to discuss the application of the SOLAS '90 residual stability standards to all existing ro-ro passenger ships.

Potholes

20. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received in respect of the recommendations in the Horne report.

Mr. Atkins: We have received over 100 representations this year from Hon. Members and others seeking implementation of the Horne report, recommendations. We intend to introduce legislation to reform the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 at an early opportunity.

Traffic Flow (Basingstoke)

21. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on measures being taken to improve safety and the flow of traffic on roads in the Basingstoke area.

Mr. Atkins: Most roads in the Basingstoke area are the responsibility of Hampshire county council as local highway authority. Trunk roads, for which my Department is responsible, are confined to the A339 and the M3 motorway.

Preparations for the A339 Basingstoke northern bypass stage 3 dualling scheme, to improve the 2·5 mile length between the Reading road and Roman road junctions, are now well advanced. We hope to start main works next spring for completion by late summer 1992.

The national programme also includes major schemes on the A339 for providing a grade separated junction at the present Black Dam roundabout at Basingstoke, and for improving the length of about 7 miles between Basingstoke and the planned Headley bypass. For both these schemes, the roads report "Trunk Roads, England: Into the 1990s" gives a target date of 1993 for the next key preparation stage, announcement of preferred route.

We have no current plans for improving the M3 in the Basingstoke area.

London Transport

22. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chair of London Transport to discuss improvements in London transport.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend and I regularly discuss such matters with the chairman of London Regional Transport.

25. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much London Regional Transport has proposed to him to be invested to modernise the network.

Mr. Freeman: In last year's Autumn Statement, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a 115 per cent. increase in Government grant to London Regional Transport for the three years to 1992-93, which is sufficient to allow them to invest £2·2 billion. I am of course unable to anticipate the contents of this year's Autumn Statement.

Channel Tunnel

24. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration is being given to the effects of the channel tunnel on future rail and road investment.

Mr. Freeman: The effect of the channel tunnel on road investment is fully taken into account in the national roads programme. Planning and operation of rail services are matters for British Rail.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what security checks will passengers and baggage using the channel tunnel go through and at what point in the journey.

Mr. Freeman: The Government take very seriously the need to protect the Tunnel and those who will use it. A security check regime will be required. It would not be appropriate for me to disclose the details of the proposed security arrangements.

26. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussion he has had with British Rail on the route of the channel tunnel rail link.

35. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a statement on the current position in relation to plans for a high-speed rail link through Kent.

54. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and whether they discussed the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: Since November last year British Rail has been discussing the proposed channel tunnel high speed rail link with Eurorail Ltd. with a view to forming a joint venture. The parties have kept the Department in touch with progress and we are now considering their proposals.

Bus Deregulation

28. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on bus deregulation in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Freeman: Following deregulation, bus mileage in West Yorkshire increased by 7 per cent., with improvements in frequencies, the introduction of minibuses, more operators and a reduction in tender prices.

48. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the effects of bus deregulation on reliability and quality of service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The competition introduced by deregulation encourages operators to provide more reliable and better quality services. As a safeguard, traffic commissioners have powers to place restrictions on an operator's licence for various reasons including failure to operate services as registered and inadequate maintenance arrangements. These powers were exercised for these and other reasons on 150 occasions up to March 1989.

East Coast Electrification

29. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated rate of return on British Rail's investment in electrifying the east coast route to Edinburgh.

42. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated rate of return on British Rail's investment in electrifying the east coast route to Edinburgh.

46. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated rate of return on British Rail's investment in electrifying the east coast route to Edinburgh.

59. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated rate of return on British Rail's investment in electrifying the east coast route to Edinburgh.

Mr. Freeman: The electrification of the east coast main line for InterCity services was approved by Ministers on 27

July 1984, on the basis that the scheme met the then normal criteria of a 7 per cent. financial return for investment in BR's commercial sectors.

45. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met British Rail to discuss its proposals for the completion of electrification of the east coast main line between Aberdeen and Edinburgh.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail at present has no proposals for the electrification of the line between Edinburgh and Aberdeen. I understand that ScotRail has appointed a project manager to review the possibilities for extending electrification in Scotland.

Airport Security

30. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will commission an inquiry into British airport security, in the light of the United States report on PanAm Flight 103.

Mr. McLoughlin: I do not consider any further inquiry to be necessary. The disaster is the subject of a major police investigation, which covers the aviation security aspects at Heathrow. The air accident investigation branch is investigating the immediate cause of the crash. The Lord Advocate has announced that it is his view that a fatal accident inquiry should be held. The Department has carried out a thorough review of its aviation security requirements and a number of far-reaching improvements have been introduced or are in train. And the Transport Select Committee has examined airport security in the light of the disaster. It has published its report and the Government's response.

Diesel Emissions

32. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department has to tighten the limits on diesel emissions.

Mr. Atkins: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 21 May 1990 at column 5.

"How to Meet the Demand"

34. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the issues raised in the document "How to Meet the Demand" at Heathrow, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend is reflecting on the proposals made by British Midland Airways, which raise environmental issues requiring careful consideration.

Network SouthEast

37. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of Network SouthEast's investment is for schemes situated inside Greater London.

Mr. Freeman: Network SouthEast's investment cannot readily be disaggregated geographically. Network SouthEast operates a network of routes which radiate from London to various parts of the South East and the majority of their investment is by line of route. Because Network SouthEast's primary function is to move commuters into and out of central London each day, virtually all line of route investment, eg resignalling and new rolling stock, will benefit Greater London either directly (insofar as part of the route is inside Greater London) or indirectly (by providing a more reliable and efficient service generally to London). Some expenditure, for example on station modernisation and smaller infrastructure works, is specific to a particular location outside Greater London, but this forms only a small part of Network SouthEast's £1·2 billion three-year investment programme. However, over the next five years, investment of some £700 million in new Networker trains and associated infrastructure work is planned for south east inner suburban services the benefits of this will fall almost wholly within Greater London.

71. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of Network SouthEast's investment is funded from the public purse.

Mr. Freeman: Over the next three years, Network SouthEast plans to invest some £1·2 billion, out of a total BR investment programme of over £3·7 billion. BR's overall investment programme will be funded from both internal and external sources. Internal sources (including receipts from the sale of assets owned by the taxpayer through BR and funding through the revenue account and also linking capital improvements) will account for some 45 per cent. of the total programme of £3·7 billion. External sources of funding are classified as public expenditure and comprise revenue subsidy paid by the Government and borrowing, principally from the National Loans Fund. These external funding sources will account for the remaining 57 per cent. of the programme. British Rail's sectors, such as Network SouthEast, do not have audited accounts and the public expenditure figures are not broken down between them.

Eastbourne

38. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make an official visit to Eastbourne by train.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend or I will be happy to do so when a suitable opportunity arises.

Traffic Growth (London)

40. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what forecast he is now using for projecting traffic growth in London.

Mr. Atkins: We do not forecast traffic growth in London as a whole. Specific forecasts are made for individual trunk road schemes. These tend to be lower than the 1989 national road traffic forecast, which covers the whole of Great Britain.

Travelling Safety

41. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to improve public awareness of safety while travelling.

Mr. Atkins: We launched the "Safety on the Move" campaign on 1 May with the express purpose of improving public awareness of safety while travelling on all forms of transport. I want to concentrate the attention of every individual on what he or she can do for their own safety and the safety of others. The campaign has the support of a wide range of transport organisations and operators.

London Docklands

43. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in developing the transport infrastructure in London docklands.

Mr. Freeman: The docklands light railway is to be completly resignalled so as to improve reliability and to cope with the greatly increased service levels planned for the 1990s. Additional trains now entering service will double capacity to Tower Gateway from this summer, and a further fleet will be available in time for the inception of single-track running to Bank early next year. The second tunnel to Bank is on course for completion late in 1991, and following the normal commissioning period a full service should commence early in 1992. Construction of the Beckton extension is underway for completion by the end of 1992, and LRT are continuing their evaluation of the case for a possible further extension to Lewisham.

A Bill is now before this House for the first major Underground line in a quarter of a century, for the Jubilee line to run from Green Park via Westminster, Waterloo and London Bridge to the Surrey Docks, Canary Wharf, the Greenwich Peninsula, Canning Town, West Ham and Stratford. Provided Royal Assent is received by mid-1991, I would expect the new line to be in service by the beginning of 1996.

Network South East is now reconsidering its proposed renovation of Stratford Station so as to take full account of the Jubilee line extension. The main line platforms are to be refurbished so as to allow calls by most outer surburban and InterCity services, and there will also be new through services from May 1991 to Stansted airport and Cambridge. Network South East is discussing with the London Docklands Development Corporation implementation early next year of a scheme for waterproofing and renovation of the Connaught tunnel so as to improve reliability of the North London line.

LRT is considering its evaluation of the case for possible extensions of the East London line northwards to Dalston and southwards to Peckham Rye and East Dulwich. Subject to confirmation of a satisfactory investment case and appropriate funding arrangements, including contributions from developers who will benefit from the scheme, LRT hope to be able to deposit a Bill in November.

LRT is now out to tender for a new express bus service from Waterloo and London Bridge to the Isle of Dogs and Leamouth for which LDDC and a consortium of Docklands employers are contributing towards the first year's operational costs. London Buses and Docklands Minibus are continuing to tailor their services to improve reliability and links from Docklands, especially to the City.

Riverbus continues to operate a frequent, fast service on the Thames between central London and the Docklands and Greenwich with separate services to Chelsea harbour and London City airport. Season tickets and a tourist rover ticket have recently been introduced.

All of the LDDC's Docklands Highways in the Royal Docks are now in at least partial use, bringing high quality road access from the M25 to within sight of London City airport. The first direct road link between the Isle of Dogs and the Royal Docks—the Lower Lea crossing is under construction for completion in the spring of 1992, bringing London City airport within a 15 minute drive from Canary Wharf as the Canary Wharf eastern access road will be completed this autumn. LDDC hope to let the main contracts by late summer for the East India dock link and the Poplar link, and construction of the Limehouse link is on course for completion to Westferry Circus in the summer of 1993.

Consultations continue on the inclusion of the A13 west of Butcher Row in the pilot red route. The first of my Department's improvements to the key junctions on the A13 trunk road should start on site at Leamouth road next month, and diversion of services is already in hand for an interim scheme due to start this autumn at the junction with West India dock road concurrent with its widening by LDDC as part of the Poplar link scheme. We hope to go to public consultation before the end of this year on improvement of the A13/A112 junction and to publish draft orders early next year for a new dual two-way flyover at the A13/A117 junction. Schemes to widen the A13 Ironbridge and make final improvements to the A13 junctions with the Blackwall tunnel/Cotton street, West India dock road and Butcher Row are programmed for completion by the mid-1990s. We have published draft orders for widening of the A13 from Dagenham to the M25. The City of London's Bill for construction of the A12 Hackney to M11 link through Epping Forest is now in another place, and subject also to confirmation of a compulsory purchase order I would expect to see construction begin from the Redbridge end in the Spring of 1991. A new traffic control system for east London should be completed late next year.

A two-year scheme has now started for renovation of the old Blackwall tunnel. We are conducting a study of the riverbed regime so as to help decide whether the proposed third tunnel at Blackwall should be a bore or a submerged tube. Consultations will be carried out later this year on terms of reference for the proposed study into the need for possible additional cross river capacity between Blackwall and Tower Bridge.

Public inquiries begin on 3 July into the proposed changes to the east London river crossing and the planning applications to allow use of London City airport by more types of aircraft.

My Department and LDDC are now collaborating on the publication in September of a joint update to their respective publications on Docklands transport.

British Rail

47. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had any recent discussions with the chairman of British Rail concerning environmental matters.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Central London Rail Study

49. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on the central London rail study.

Mr. Freeman: The further work required before a decision can be made is being given a high priority. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Local Authority Airports

50. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any recent representations on the way local authority plc airports are run.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has received no formal representations on this subject recently.

Railway Gauges

53. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to upgrade mainline rail routes throughout Great Britain to continental gauge standard in order to obtain the maximum benefit from the opening of the channel tunnel and the completion of the single European market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail rather than the Government to plan rail infrastructure and rail services for the United Kingdom. All freight trains in use by British Rail at present are compatible with the continental (Berne) gauge. The cost of converting United Kingdom lines to the continental (Berne) gauge would be considerable. Passenger trains for services through the channel tunnel will be specially designed to suit different platform heights in different countries. For freight it would involve setting back station platforms so that these wider trains could pass through, and the replacement of all passenger rolling stock using the stations affected. British Rail plan to use new wagon technology—such as small wheel bogie wagons —that will enable larger loads, equivalent to those generally carried in mainland Europe, to be carried on the existing United Kingdom loading gauge, and will be more commercially viable than expensive infrastructure modifications.

Heathrow-Central London Rail Service

55. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold discussions with British Rail management on the finalisation of a target opening date for the Heathrow-central London British Rail service.

Mr. Freeman: Neither British Rail nor the British Airports Authority, who are joint sponsors of this project, can finalise the opening date until the Heathrow Express Railway Bill completes its remaining parliamentary stages.

Shipping

56. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for Government support to British shipping.

Mr. McLoughlin: The most valuable assistance that we can give the British shipping industry is generally to encourage a free market in shipping and, where necessary, to persuade our competitor nations to reduce their restrictions on free and open competitive shipping markets. We have, however, taken some specific measures to give financial assistance to our shipping industry for training and crew relief costs. My right hon. Friend has also announced a joint working party to establish the present circumstances in which the British shipping industry operates.

Rail Links (South Yorkshire)

57. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the improvement of rail links in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Flags of Convenience

58. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review the practice of registering ships under flags of convenience.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under the Merchant Shipping Acts qualified owners are entitled but not obliged to place their ships on the British flag. The identification of the main obstacles to the use of the British flag is included in the terms of reference of the joint working party announced by my right hon. Friend in his answer of 24 May to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) at column 288.

Trunk Roads

60. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trunk road schemes are currently under construction; and at what total cost.

Mr. Atkins: There are 59 trunk road schemes currently under construction in England, with a total works cost, at current prices, of £1·4 billion.

Commuter Services (London)

61. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has received from London Underground Ltd. and British Rail to increase commuter services in the Greater London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has set London Underground Limited the objectives of increasing peak capacity by 5 per cent. over the next two years. Network SouthEast plan to operate 2 per cent. more train miles overall in the coming year than they did in 1989. The operators require our approval for proposals to increase the capacity of their services only if these involve major new capital expenditure.

LRT Project (Greater Manchester)

62. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has estimated the effects upon commerce and trade in the Greater Manchester area of the light rapid transit project linking Bury and Altrincham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: An assessment by the Greater Manchester Passenger Transport Executive of the possible effects of the project on economic activity in the Greater Manchester area indicates that the improvement in accessability may provide some stimulation to commerce and trade in the Greater Manchester area. The precise effects are however difficult to forecast. In consultation with the Department, the Executive has made arrangements to monitor the actual effects of the project.

M4 (Widening)

63. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on schemes for widening the M4.

Mr. Atkins: We are planning four separate improvements to widen the 58 miles of M4 between M25 and Swindon, and the 10 mile stretch east of M5. For all these schemes the next key preparation stage is the announcement of a preferred scheme; that for the two sections between M25 and Theale (Junction 12) is expected next summer, between Theale and Swindon (Junction 15) in 1993, and for the Avon section (Junction 18 to 20) in 1992.

Air Traffic Control

64. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in the proposals to integrate Europe's air traffic control offices.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has recently agreed with 22 other European Transport Ministers an action programme to increase capacity in Europe buy integrating air traffic control systems and optimising the air traffic route network. The integration programme commits European states to intensify work on measures to handle safely the forecast growth in traffic to the end of the century. The integration programme, which follows much hard work between ourselves and our European partners, is a major step forward. It builds on the substantial investment in air traffic control systems in Europe, not least by UK's Civil Aviation Authority.

69. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been invested by the Civil Aviation Authority to improve air traffic control.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Civil Aviation Authority has invested more than £140 million over the five years to 31 March 1989 to improve air traffic control facilities.

Urban Roads

65. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department is taking to make urban roads more environmentally acceptable.

Mr. Atkins: Local authorities are responsible for the vast majority of urban roads. My Department publishes advice on a wide range of urban traffic issues, including a variety of traffic calming measures which can be introduced in suitable circumstances and make the environment safer and more pleasant.

On trunk roads, 37 bypasses completed in the last 3 years have removed through traffic from towns and villages. 150 bypasses and relief roads are in preparation. Already this year we have announced that we shall make more use of our discretionary powers to provide noise insulation, that we will appoint consultants to produce guidance on environmental treatment of urban roads, and that we will improve the environment of existing roads.

Air Transport Agreements (USA)

66. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent progress has been made concerning bilateral air transport agreements between Britain and the United States of America.

73. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what benefits for British carriers he is seeking in his discussions with the United States' authorities regarding the air services agreement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Negotiations are continuing.

London Regional Transport

67. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contributions he expects London Regional Transport to receive in the year 1990-91 from London borough councils, in lieu of the rate-related contributions of previous years.

Mr. Freeman: The London Regional Transport ratepayer levy was abolished with effect from 1 April this year. The grant paid to LRT now comes entirely from central Government.

Road Priorities (Northampton)

68. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on road priorities in the vicinity of Northampton.

Mr. Atkins: The trunk roads programme contains three schemes in the vicinity of Northampton. Construction of the A43 Blisworth and Milton Malsor bypass started in April this year and is expected to take two years to complete. A Public Consultation exercise into the A43 Moulton bypass and A43 Moulton to Broughton dualling schemes has recently been carried out. Subject to the satisfactory completion of statutory procedures work could start in mid 1995 with completion in 1997. There are other trunk road proposals within Northamptonshire as a whole which are listed in the current Roads Report "Trunk Roads, England" which was published in February this year.

Priority Routes (London)

70. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made on the priority routes pilot project for London; and when it is now expected to be implemented.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has commissioned Ove Arup and Partners to plan the introduction of the pilot scheme. We have started a comprehensive consultation exercise with the local authorities and interest groups concerned. The scheme is expected to be implemented later this year.

Level Crossings

72. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review safety procedures pertaining to automatic unguarded rail level crossings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Professor P. F. Stott was appointed in 1987 to review the safety of automatic open level crossings, following the accident at Lockington. His report made a number of recommendations, which are being implemented.

Learner Drivers

74. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the measures he proposes to tighten up on the rules for the supervision of learner drivers.

Mr. Atkins: The consultation on the draft regulations ended on 18 May. I am now considering the responses, with a view to bringing forward regulations very soon.

London-Newcastle Air Service

76. Mr Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase competition on the London-Newcastle air service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The pattern of services on individual routes is a matter for the commercial judgment of airlines who may apply to the Civil Aviation Authority at any time for a licence in accordance with published procedures.

Vehicle Excise Duty

77. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has as to the amount of revenue lost in 1989-90 as a result of evasion of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Atkins: The amount of revenue lost through vehicle excise duty evasion in Great Britain during the financial year 1989-90, is estimated at £103 million.

Drink-driving

78. Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will exclude from consideration in further road safety measures any proposal to link the level of alcohol in the blood at which it is deemed dangerous to drive and the age or experience of the driver.

Mr. Atkins: It would be wrong to exclude anything from consideration or public debate that might help reduce deaths and injuries among young and inexperienced drivers.

Child Fare Permits, London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he was consulted concerning the decision of London Regional Transport to discontinue the child fare permit scheme with local authorities; and what are the savings to boroughs and London Regional Transport.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the scheme has been withdrawn because boroughs no longer make any significant use of it, preferring to subsidise travel for scholars aged 16 or over by reimbursing parents directly. Across the whole of London, London Regional Transport received requests to issue only 341 permits this year. There is no question of their having to consult Ministers about minor changes of this sort. I understand that the change will result in a small saving in administrative costs.

Wheelchair-adapted Vehicles

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department is planning research into the design of the fittings used to adapt vehicles to carry wheelchair passengers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department has a continuing programme of research, in close co-operation with industry, looking at the design and operational effectiveness of wheelchair restraints and occupant harnesses and the means by which they are fitted to vehicles.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents involving vehicles specially adapted to carry wheelchair passengers have occurred for each of the past 10 years, by region; and how many wheelchair passengers were (i) injured and (ii) killed in these accidens.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not available, as it is not recorded on STATS 19 accident report form.

Railway Subsidies

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 May, Official Report, column 328, whether any subsidies paid to the railways in other European Economic Community countries have fallen foul of Community legislation relating to Community directives and regulations concerning competition policy.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the Commission and individual EC member states.

Rail Services (Customs Arrangements)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much of the £98·5 million recently authorised for the international passenger terminal at Waterloo is accounted for by the decision of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise service to construct green and red channels for the use of passengers prior to the boarding of trains.

Mr. Freeman: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise checks at the Waterloo international terminals will be comparable to those at airports and seaports. The only facility being provided for departing passengers is a VAT office at an estimated cost of £70,000. The cost of constructing green and red channels and the necessary ancillary accommodation to handle arriving passengers is estimated at £3·44 million.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on decisions taken by the French, West German, Belgian and Luxembourg authorities in regard to their own rail services and customs requirements.

Mr. Freeman: I have no information on these countries' current domestic arrangements. I understand that these countries are proposing to sign a treaty which abolishes internal border checks but which strengthens external checks and internal measures.

Oil Spillages

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what proposals he has for increasing the number of vessels capable of mechanically recovering oil;

(2) how many vessels capable of the mechanical recovery of oil are available for hire in the United Kingdom; and where they are normally located.

Mr. McLoughlin: The speed of ships—10 to 12 knots—makes them slow to deploy to the scene of an oil pollution incident which could occur anywhere around the 3,000 miles or so of United Kingdom coastline. And mechanical oil recovery systems are unable to operate in the weather conditions that exist around United Kingdom coasts for much of the year. Because of those limitations the Marine Pollution Control Unit's contingency arrangements are for government owned and commercial sets of portable equipment held in shore stockpiles to be fitted into suitable vessels as and when the occasion demands. There are many such vessels which can be used for this purpose and the nearest suitable ship would be chartered together with a coastal tanker to receive recovered oil.

There is one commercially owned purpose-built sea-going oil recovery vessel for hire in the United Kingdom; this is normally based in the Forth. I have no plans for increasing the number of such vessels. The Department's first-line response strategy is aerial dispersant spraying. MPCU has under contract seven dedicated Dakota DC3 spraying aircraft and two Cessna remote-sensing aircraft to direct and control operations.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to recommend the strengthening of oil tanker hulls.

Mr. McLoughlin: The standards governing the strength of tanker hulls are reviewed periodically. The International Maritime Organisation is however investigating ways to reduce the quantity of oil released from a tanker in the aftermath of a collision or grounding and this may lead to changes in tanker design.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to ensure that there would be no delay in compensation payments following an oil spill from a vessel not registered in a state signatory to the civil liability convention for oil pollution damage.

Mr. McLoughlin: In such circumstances compensation would come from the international oil pollution compensation fund based in London. It is the fund's policy to pay claims with the minimum of delay; in certain circumstances provisional payments may be made before final settlement of a claim if that is necessary in order to mitigate undue financial hardship to a claimant.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what incentives exist for oil-carrying vessels to register in a state which is a signatory to the international convention on civil liability for oil pollution damage.

Mr. McLoughlin: The 1969 international convention on civil liability for oil pollution damage allows a shipowner to limit his liability in respect of claims in member states following an oil spill. The shipowner has to have compulsory insurance cover to meet his maximum liability which is calculated on his ship's tonnage and this insurance can be obtained at reasonable cost. These advantages to the shipowner have to be balanced against advantages to claimants. Claimants do not have to prove fault, the shipowner is strictly liable. Further the requirement for compulsory insurance guarantees that funds will be available to meet claims. In the event that the total claims exceed the shipowner's limit of liability a 1971 convention provides that any excess can be claimed from an international fund financed by a levy on oil importers. The majority of European states are members of both the 1969 and 1971 conventions. Improvements to both conventions were agreed in 1984 and we are actively encouraging their international entry into force.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to regulate the strength of oil tanker hulls and their impact resistance strengths through the fitting of removable bumpers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Merchant Shipping (Cargo Ship Construction and Survey) Regulations require the structural strength of an oil tanker registered in the United Kingdom to be adequate for its intended services. Removable bumpers on tankers have severe practical limitations. In general, bumpers are suitable only for low-energy contact of the sort encountered in harbours and terminals.

M40 Extension

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if ducting will be laid alongside the M40 extension through Oxfordshire to allow the installation of comprehensive lighting at a later date.

Mr. Atkins: No. When the design of the motorway was underway the Department did not consider the expenditure ncessary to make provision for lighting at a future date was justified.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he has received from the Thames Valley police authority on the lighting proposed for the M40 extension through Oxfordshire.

Mr. Atkins: We have no record of this issue being raised by the Thames Valley police.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation has been made of the need for (a) lighting and (b) fog hazard warning lights on the M40 through Oxfordshire.

Mr. Atkins: The need for lighting was assessed in accordance with my Department's policy and was not justified except at the more major grade separated interchanges. As with all unlit motorways, my Department will review regularly the need for lighting. Matrix warning signs are being installed and should be operational to coincide with the motorway opening. No specific fog warning system is proposed at present. We will review the situation following detailed evaluation of the fog warning system currently being installed on the M25.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the arrangements for lighting the M40 extension through Oxfordshire.

Mr. Atkins: Lighting will be confined to the major interchanges at the A418 (Waterstock) (J8), Windlebury (J9), Ardley (J10) and Banbury (J11).

Collision and Avoidance Systems

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many tenders for collision and avoidance systems research have been received by his Department in the past five years;

(2) how many research projects into collision and avoidance systems are currently funded by his Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: During the last five years, the Department has received and accepted tenders for three research projects into collision and avoidance systems. These were marine collision risk—mathematical models; a behavioural study of the collision avoidance task in bridge watchkeeping; and collision avoidance behaviour: a simulator study. The simulator study has recently been completed; its recommendations are being considered and further research may be proposed.

Bidston-Wrexham Railway

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any application from British Rail for investment in the Bidston-Wrexham line.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to introduce compulsory training for motor cyclists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As part of our measures to improve the safety of young motor cyclists on the road compulsory basic training for all new riders of motor cycles and mopeds will be introduced on 1 December 1990. This will apply throughout Great Britain, except for residents of the smaller off-shore islands. I am grateful for the hard work of all those concerned from the motor cycle industry, user groups and safety organisations who have made it possible for me to set this firm date.

The part I motor cycle test will continue for six months after the introduction of compulsory training. This is to allow those learner riders who already have their licences the choice of taking either the part I test, or a compulsory training course, before applying for the accompanied motor cycle L test.

I have also decided that the proposal to reduce the validity of provisional motor cycle licences from two years to one year will not be proceeded with at this stage. It will be reconsidered in the light of progress with compulsory training.

I am very grateful to all those organisations and individuals who submitted comments on the Department's consultation paper on compulsory training. I will be issuing the Department's response shortly.

I also welcome the initiative of the Motorcycle Industry Association to set up a joint action group, with full participation from the Motorcycle Retailers Association, training organisations, road safety officers, and the Driving Standards Agency. Its aim will be to see that adequate facilities exist and ensure that the introduction of compulsory training takes place throughout Great Britain as smoothly as possible.

Speed Limits

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reasons for the difference in traffic speeds and the level of enforcement of speed limits on the M4 and the M1.

Mr. Atkins: Traffic speed depends on the volume of traffic which can vary with time of day and day of week. Such variation is different for different motorways. The responsibility for the enforcement of road traffic laws on all roads, including motorways, is a matter for individual chief officers of police. Chief officers are committed to effective motorway enforcement.

Traffic Information

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he proposes to give more traffic information to drivers.

Mr. Atkins: I attach great importance to drivers and transport managers having available to them more comprehensive and up to date information on traffic and road conditions to help them plan their journeys. I shall shortly be meeting the main organisations which collect and disseminate such information to discuss the way forward.

Ro-ro Ferries

Mr. Terry Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decision was taken at the maritime safety committee of the International Maritime Organisation in May on the proposal that the committee should consider the adoption of a standard of residual stability for existing roll-on roll-off ferries higher than that now required by the convention.

Mr. McLoughlin: The proposal to implement a higher standard of residual stability to existing roll-on roll-off ferries was referred by the Maritime Safety Committee to a specialist sub-committee on stability matters.

Tuesday 12 June 1990

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Quarantine

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for which diseases quarantine restrictions on animals can operate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Quarantine restrictions on imported animals are currently applied in relation to foot and mouth disease, Newcastle disease and rabies. Considerable importance is attached to quarantine and the Government believe that such measures should be maintained as long as they are necessary to prevent the introduction of disease.

Caseous Lymphadenitis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries where caseous lymphadenitis is found.

Mr. Gummer: Caseous lymphadenitis is known to occur in many parts of Africa, south America, Asia, Europe, United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of (a) sheep and (b) goats affected by restrictions for caseous lymphadenitis by county.

Mr. Gummer: Restrictions are at present imposed on (a) one flock in Buckinghamshire and one consignment undergoing post import on-farm isolation in Nottinghamshire (b) two herds in Buckinghamshire, two herds in Oxfordshire, and one herd each in Berkshire, Surrey and Lancashire. The flock of sheep in Buckinghamshire and one of the two goat herds in Buckinghamshire are on the same premises and subject to the same restriction notice.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food from which country the current outbreak of caseous lymphadenitis originated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The current outbreak of caseous lymphadenitis appears to be associated with the import of goats from West Germany.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to prevent further cases of caseous lymphadenitis from being imported into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We continue to rely on certification by exporting countries that sheep and goats sent to the United Kingdom come from premises which are free from caseous lymphadenitis and the herd of origin has shown no clinical serological or pathological signs of the disease in the previous three years. Animals should also be examined immediately prior to export. Ministry veterinary officers, local veterinary surgeons and producers have been asked to be vigilant for any signs of the disease and have found infection in April in a group of sheep which were undergoing post import on-farm isolation.

Contaminated Pigfeed

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 9 May, Official Report, column 132, if he will list the contaminants now found in pigfeed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No present problems with contaminants have been reported and feedingstuffs associated with recent contaminants have been withdrawn.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many pigs have now been slaughtered as a result of the contaminated pigfeed; from which counties they came; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the up-to-date information concerning the number of farms and pigs affected by contaminated pigfeed on a county-by-county basis.

Mr. Gummer: The total number of pigs that to date have been slaughtered for welfare reasons and the number of farms where pigs were affected by contaminated pigfeed, county by county, is as follows:

	Pigs	Farms
Devon	3	1
Hampshire	15	1
Humberside	85	7
Durham	126	5
Nottinghamshire	5	1
Yorkshire	1,100	62
	1,334	77

Scrapie

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there is any evidence of the scrapie agent being present in sheep milk.

Mr. Maclean: No transmissible spongiform encephalopathy, including sheep scrapie, has been shown to transmit through milk. Scientific studies on scrapie have shown that the agent is not found in milk.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the frequency of infections by (a) the scrapie agent in the muscle (meat) of scrapie-affected sheep and (b) the BSE agent in the muscle (meat) of BSE-affected cows.

Mr. Maclean: Scientific studies have shown that the scrapie agent is not found in the muscle (meat) of sheep naturally affected by scrapie. By analogy with scrapie, a very similar disease to BSE, the BSE agent is not expected to be found in the muscle of affected animals. Studies are nevertheless under way to confirm this.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide a summary of the results of any research work on whether the scrapie agent can be vertically transmitted by an infected ram.

Mr. Maclean: There has been much work carried out in this area, all of which has shown that the scrapie agent is not found in the reproductive organs or semen of scrapie-infected rams.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there is any restriction on the use for human consumption of sheep meat and offals including those from scrapie-infected sheep.

Mr. Maclean: No specific controls apply since scrapie is not a risk to human health.

British Cattle Exports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries that have now banned the import of all live British cattle.

Mr. Maclean: Australia, Austria, Canada, Finland, Israel, New Zealand, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Tunisia, Turkey, USA and the USSR.

Mr. Cash: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will take action against France and Germany under article 170 of the treaty of Rome for their banning of beef imports from the United Kingdom in contravention of article 30 of the treaty of Rome;

(2) if he will formally join with the European Commission in proceedings against France and Germany for their banning of beef imports from the United Kingdom in contravention of article 30 of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Maclean: The action taken by France and Germany to ban imports of beef from the United Kingdom offended Community rules and I supported the Conmmission's intention to institute legal proceedings should these bans remain in place. However, as I announced in the House on 7 June, those bans were lifted following discussion in the special Agricultural Council.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the names and number of cases of BSE detected at each abattoir;

(2) how many cases of BSE were (a) volunteered by farmers, (b) detected at cattle markets, (c) detected at abattoirs by veterinary inspectors and (d) detected at abattoirs by other personnel.

Mr. Maclean: Over 98 per cent. of suspect cases of BSE have been reported on farm. Up to 31 March 1990, 133 suspect cases had been reported in markets (of which 92 were confirmed) and 203 suspect cases reported at abattoirs (of which 149 were confirmed). A breakdown of abattoirs involved is not available.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether the Government will initiate a programme to look for the possible occurrence of spongiform encephalopathy in dogs;

(2) if he will investigate the incidence of canine spongiform encephalopathy among breeding bitches in licensed and unlicensed puppy farms;

(3) if he will investigate the incidence on puppy farms of proprietors feeding their dogs on (a) dead sheep which have may have died of scrapie, (b) condemned meat and (c) beef infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make it his practice to advise all puppy farmers to avoid feeding any meat which contained offal.

Mr. Maclean: There have been no reports of naturally occurring or laboratory-induced spongiform encephalopathy in dogs. Nevertheless, as recommended by the Tyrrell committee, the health of dogs is being monitored by veterinary surgeons and a study is being planned on hounds, which are traditionally fed fallen livestock.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who is responsible for the disposal of the carcases of BSE-affected cattle; and what proportion are (a) incinerated, (b) disposed of in toxic waste tips and (c) disposed of in domestic refuse tips.

Mr. Maclean: The disposal of carcases of BSE-affected cattle is the responsibility of the Ministry. Nationally about two thirds are incinerated and one third are disposed of by burial on licensed waste disposal sites approved by local authorities for this purpose. Information on the classification of individual sites is not held centrally.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made in developing a test for identifying BSE in live cattle; and how soon he expects such a test to be available.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 21 May at column 86.

Drift Nets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations are currently in force to prevent the use of drift nets of over 5 km in length on United Kingdom boats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that no United Kingdom vessel uses drift nets as long as 5 km and indeed the substantial proportion are between 200 and 400 m in length. There is no general length restriction in force but there are several regulations which limit drift nets in specific fisheries or areas to well within 5 km in length.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the annual accidental catch of birds and marine mammals by United Kingdom drift net boats is reported to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is known that fishermen in the United Kingdom may accidentally catch mammals and birds in their nets, but there is no evidence that this occurs on a significant scale. The drift net fisheries around our coast are quite modest and do not give rise to the sort of environmental problems associated with the very large-scale drift netting operations in the Pacific, about which there has been justified concern.

Veterinary Products

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that the use of veterinary products that are likely to affect the wider environment, whether licensed or not, are recorded, regulated and monitored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All veterinary medicinal products must be licensed under the Medicines Act. They are assessed for safety, quality and efficacy before any licence is issued. The likely impact on the environment is taken into account by independent scientific experts on the Veterinary Products Committee as part of that assessment process. My Department is currently carrying out a review to ensure that all licensed veterinary medicinal products meet up-to-date standards. Any person who causes or knowingly permits veterinary products to pollute any controlled waters is liable to prosecution by the National Rivers Authority under the Water Act 1989. Under the Animals and Fresh Meat (Examination for Residues) Regulations 1988 farmers must keep records of medicines administered to animals and these are subject to checks by members of the state veterinary service.

Fish Farms

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the Veterinary Products Committee regarding the review of the licence for Aquaguard for use on salmon farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I hope to make a statement shortly.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has measured the quantity of antibiotics released into the marine environment as treatment for diseases of farmed fish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All veterinary medicines including antibiotics used for treating fish diseases are assessed for safety, quality and efficacy under the Medicines Act before a licence is issued. Any likely impact on the marine environment is taken into account by independent scientific experts on the Veterinary Products Committee as part of that assessment process. When a licence for such a product is due to expire, evidence of environmental impact is carefully assessed before any decision is made to renew the licence. Antibiotics used for treating fish disease are available only on prescription from a veterinary surgeon.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been conducted by him into antibiotic residues in farmed salmon; and when and where the results will be published.

Mr. Gummer: Surveillance for antibiotic residues in farmed salmon is in progress and the results will be published in the food surveillance paper series once the work has been completed. It would be premature at this stage to make a statement.

British Beef Exports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries that have now banned all imports of British beef.

Mr. Maclean: The following countries have notified a ban on imports of British beef: Austria, Bahrain and Turkey.

Hound Ataxia

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will instruct veterinary surgeons to conduct post mortem investigations in cases of hound ataxia to ensure that it is not unrecognised canine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware that any cases of hound ataxia have occurred in Britain in recent years. No cases of spongiform encephalopathy have been identified in canines but the state veterinary service investigates suspect cases in various species referred to it.

Live Horses (Export)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy not to allow the export of live horses to Europe for slaughter to start again.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's policy is to maintain controls to prevent the export of horses for slaughter.

Casualty Animals (Slaughter)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will consider the introduction of a certificate of receipt system for the slaughter of casualty animals;

(2) whether he will consider a review of the Slaughterhouses (Hygiene) Regulations 1977, to prevent the slaughter of casualty animals without a veterinary officer's certificate.

Mr. Maclean: The Slaughterhouses (Hygiene) Regulations 1977 already require a veterinary health certificate for animals known or suspected to be injured or diseased, and for carcases of such animals, intended to be presented at the slaughterhouse, subject to certain exceptions. These relate to injuries of recent origin, such as during transit when a veterinarian will not be available, and for welfare reasons to sheep and lamb carcases, where a declaration by the owner is acceptable.

It is an offence to allow casualty animals or their carcases to enter a slaughterhouse uncertified under any other circumstances.

I am already considering whether any changes to the regulations may be desirable.

Bovine Head Meat

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will introduce regulations to ban the removal of meat from a bovine head until the skull and brain of the head have been removed from the head by an authorised boning plant;

(2) whether he will introduce regulations to ensure that the trimming of meat from bovine heads is allowed only after the removal of the skull and brain.

Mr. Maclean: Cattle which show signs of BSE, or are suspected of having the disease, are slaughtered and do not go for human consumption. The ban on brains and other specified offal is an ultra-precautionary measure applying to clinically healthy animals.

Nevertheless, we are aware of concerns about particular methods of brain removal. Wherever possible, head meat should be removed before the skull is opened so that brain tissue does not come into contact with the meat. We have conducted studies into the methods employed for removing brains where this is not feasible. The Tyrrell committee has been asked to review our findings and I shall consider whether any further action is desirable having regard to the committee's advice. In the meantime, the state veterinary service is ready to give advice if needed.

Beef Cattle (Slaughter)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will ban the slaughter of beef cattle presented for slaughter at a slaughterhouse, where those cattle have been transported more than 20 miles.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so.

WALES

Project 2000

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will reconsider the contents of his circular of 27 April, reference DGM/90/32, concerning the phasing in of Project 2000 in Wales; and if he will take urgent steps for full implementation of Project 2000 throughout Wales at the earliest possible date, if possible by autumn 1991 in line with the original proposals.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 24 May.

Herbal Remedies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek to ensure that dispensation is achieved from European Community harmonisation regulations in order to safeguard the right of people in Wales to continue to use herbal remedies.

Mr. Grist: European Community legislation applies equally in all member states. Herbal remedies currently available are controlled by the Medicines Act 1968 and subject to the provisions of the EC directive 75/319/EEC for the regulation of proprietary medicinal products. We are not aware of any proposals for further harmonisation directives concerning herbal remedies.

Steel Industry

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to maintain employment in the steel industry.

Mr. David Hunt: I am naturally anxious to maximise employment throughout the Welsh economy, including the steel industry. However, employment in any individual sector must take account of demand for products.

Mortality Rates

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of (a) perinatal and (b) neonatal mortality in each district health authority and management division in Wales in each of the years 1986 to 1989.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the tables. Care should be taken in interpreting mortality rates derived from fewer than 20 events, and these are marked in the tables with [2].

Acid Rain

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review the co-ordination between the National Rivers Authority in Wales and the Forestry Commission with a view to overcoming the acid rain problem affecting rivers and lakes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Forestry Commission is in close touch with the National Rivers Authority about the problem of acid rain affecting rivers and lakes in Wales, and I see no need to review the arrangements.

Farm Woodland Schemes

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been approved for farm woodland schemes in 1988-89 and 1989-90 for (a) Carmarthen district, (b) Dyfed, (c) Wales and (d) Britain.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of applications approved under the farm woodland scheme since its inception on 1 October 1988 is as follows:

	1 October 1988— 30 September 1989	1 October 1989— 31 May 1990	Total
(a) Carmarthen District	1	—	1
(b) Dyfed	5	5	10
(c) Wales	17	14	31

A further 12 applications are under consideration; four of these are in Dyfed but none falls within Carmarthen district.

NHS Nursing Staff

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of nursing staff employed (a) at 31 March 1989 and (b) at 31 March 1983 in national health service hospitals, homes and clinics in Wales; what were the corresponding whole-time equivalents; and how many of them had nursing qualifications.

Mr. Grist: The available information which relates to total nursing and midwifery staff, employed by the NHS, and in post as at 30 September is given in the table:

Numbers	30,328	33,236
Whole-time equivalents	25,981	28,037
Numbers with qualifications[1]	18,056	19,533

[1] State enrolled and state registered.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines to health authorities in Wales to ensure that when regulations regarding the ambulance service are being drawn up, or amended, prior consultation takes place with the local medical committee representing general practitioners in the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No. The management of the service at a local level is the responsibility of the relevant district health authority. It is for the health authority concerned to determine whether consultation is appropriate when changes in operational policy are being considered.

Beef Producers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what special measures he is taking to assist beef producers in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on Thursday 7 June.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people who have not so far paid the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have made no such estimate. I have every confidence that the vast majority of Welsh charge payers are law-abiding and will pay their community charge.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average cost in Wales per person of collecting the poll tax.

Mr. David Hunt: The average cost in Wales per person of collecting the community charge will be about £7 in 1990-91 based on local authority budget returns.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received seeking changes in the poll tax legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations on a variety of matters. The Government are reviewing the operation of the community charge system. It is too early to say what changes might be made or whether legislation will be needed.

Water Pollution

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the presence of toxic algae from the dumping of sludge and chemicals in Liverpool bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I am advised by the National Rivers Authority that it has not detected the presence of any potentially toxic algae in the Liverpool bay area.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has of illnesses and viral infections in Wales following swimming in the Irish sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not collected centrally.

Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was capital spending on Wales local education authority schools for each of the years from 1980 and county by county.

Mr. Roberts: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Employment Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the amount of cash in real terms for employment training in Wales for each of the years from 1980 including the current year and the proposed amounts for 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: Employment training commenced on 5 September 1988. The budgets for 1988-89 and 1989-90 were £13·671 million and £32·741 million respectively. For 1990-91 the budget is £30·279 million. This is a reflection of the overall decline in unemployment.

Deeside High School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will visit Deeside high school, Queensferry, and meet members of staff;

(2) if he will visit Deeside high school and meet the parent-teachers association and school governors to discuss with them school closure plans.

Mr. Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on Thursday 8 February 1990.

Cancer Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make a decision on his report concerning treatment for cancer sufferers in north Wales.

Mr. Grist: Responses to recent consultation on the comprehensive review of cancer treatment services to north Wales patients are presently being studied. I will make an announcement when these have been considered.

Health Boards

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his criteria for appointments to health boards in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Members will be appointed on the strength of the skills and experience they can bring to an authority's work.

Beaches

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the beaches in Wales that meet the blue flag award standards, and those which do not.

Mr. Grist: One beach in Wales, Cefn Sidan, has been awarded a 1990 blue flag.

Ophthalmic Clinics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the figures for new out-patient attendances at ophthalmic clinics in (a) South Glamorgan and (b) Wales for the quarter ended December 1989 and the quarter ended March 1990.

Mr. Grist: The number of new ophthalmology out-patients recorded in NHS hospitals during the quarter ending December 1989 is given in the table. Information for the quarter ending March 1990 is not yet available.

	South Glamorgan	Wales
New out-patient attendances	1,952	11,415

Welsh Water

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the individuals in respect of whom Welsh Water, in the 12 months prior to the sale of shares, paid for overseas travel together with the capacity in which they were engaged, the purposes of each visit and the cost involved.

Mr. Grist: This was a matter for the Welsh water authority prior to 1 September 1989 and subsequently for Welsh Water plc.

Diabetes and Glaucoma

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were suffering from diabetes and glaucoma in (a) Wales and (b) each county in Wales during 1988-89 and 1989-90, respectively.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally.

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of loft insulation jobs completed so far in the current year and completed in the equivalent periods of 1987, 1988 and 1989; and what were the full-year figures for 1987, 1988 and 1989 for Wales.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of dwellings for which home insulation grants were given in the periods requested is shown in the table:

Home insulation grants—Wales[1]

	Number of dwellings
1987 1st quarter	7,087
1988 1st quarter	5,667
1989 1st quarter	3,184
1990 1st quarter	1,326
1987	19,990
1988	14,016
1989	7,180

[1] Includes grants given for loft insulation. Data on specific insulation works are not collected separately.

Railway Service, Maesteg

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that British Rail implements fully the scheme approved by the Welsh Office in November 1989 to reopen a passenger service to Maesteg.

Mr. Roberts: I met the chairman of British Rail recently and he is aware of the importance of the Maesteg project to the economic regeneration of south Wales. The provision of rolling stock for the line is for resolution between British Rail and Mid Glamorgan county council.

History Committee for Wales

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received the final report of the history committee for Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am publishing the report of the national curriculum history committee for Wales today. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

I am very grateful to the members of the committee, and to its chairman Professor Rees Davies, for the hard work they have undertaken in completing their task, and for the comprehensive report they have produced.

The report sets out their recommendations for the history course for pupils from age five to 16 in the schools of Wales, and has been prepared in the light of the final report of the history working group which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science published on 3 April.

The report is being distributed to local education authorities and maintained schools in Wales, and to other interested bodies. I shall publish later my proposals for attainment targets and programmes of study for history within the national curriculum in the schools of Wales. These will be subject to statutory consultation as required by the Education Reform Act 1988.

HIV

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in Wales, the number of persons infected with HIV; and if he will separately distinguish these numbers by age.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 7 June 1990]: To safeguard confidentiality and in line with reporting procedure under the AIDS (Control) Act, actual numbers between one and nine—inclusive—diagnosed in individual health authorities are not published. Distribution by age is therefore shown for all Wales.

Opencast Mine, Buckley

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Alyn and Deeside council and Buckley town council to hear their views concerning the opencast executive's proposals for mining coal in the Buckley area.

Mr. David Hunt: In view of my statutory planning role it would not be appropriate for me to do so.

PRIME MINISTER

Environmental Co-operation

Q35. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will raise with President Gorbachev technical co-operation between the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom on environmental problems, including cellulose-related pollution of Lake Baikal.

The Prime Minister: I was not able to raise environmental questions in any great detail with President Gorbachev in the time available. We are of course aware that the environmental problems of the Soviet Union are serious and we are at present considering what role we might best play in the ecological research centre that it is proposing to establish at Lake Baikal.

Housing (London)

38. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what further representations she has had calling for the alleviation of the housing crises in London.

The Prime Minister: The Government receive many representations about the housing situation in London.

Nuclear Material

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government concerning the transfer of nuclear materials, and in particular enriched uranium, to countries which have not signed the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: The transfer of nuclear materials, including enriched uranium, is authorised in accordance with the policy set out in 1976 by the then Foreign Secretary, the right hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth, Mr. Callaghan; that is to say:

"When considering the export of nuclear equipment, material, or technology, we shall study each case on its merits. Our first consideration will always be the provisions of the Non-Proliferation Treaty, the Euratom Treaty, and whether or not the prospective customer has concluded a Safeguards Agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Our detailed requirements will include the application of IAEA safeguards or comparable safeguards which are verified by the IAEA to exported nuclear equipment and material; an assurance that whatever we export will not be used to manufacture nuclear explosives for any purpose; an assurance that our exports will be adequately protected against the possibility of theft or sabotage; and assurances that if the equipment or material that we export is re-exported, then the new purchaser will be required to give the same assurances of safeguards, non-explosive use and physical protection as were given by the original customer."

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the studies conducted inside the Cabinet Office and Prime Minister's offices by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

The Prime Minister: There has been no expenditure on management consultants by my office over the last 10 years. Until 1988-89 financial information about management consultancies engaged by the Cabinet Office was not identified separately from other types of consultancy. Expenditure on management consultants in that year and in 1989-90 was as follows:

1989-90	51,500

Information on individual consultancies is available only from 1985 onwards. The management consultants employed by the Cabinet Office and the nature of their assignments are as follows:

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what progress the interdepartmental group on child sexual abuse has made since her answer of 4 May 1989, Official Report, column 211.

The Prime Minister: Since May 1989 the interdepartmental group on child abuse has met four times and has made good progress in addressing a wide range of issues in relation to child care matters, including research.

International Whaling Commission

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister who will represent the United Kingdom at the International Whaling Commission meeting in the Netherlands in July.

The Prime Minister: As is usual the United Kingdom will be represented by the United Kingdom's commissioner for whaling, a senior official from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

ACOST (Chairmanship)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the chairmanship of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology.

The Prime Minister: I have appointed Sir Robin Nicholson to succeed Lord Tombs of Brailes as chairman of the Advisory Council on Science and Technology (ACOST) after the council meeting on 11 July.

Lord Tombs of Brailes has chaired the Advisory Council on Science and Technology since it was formed in 1987 and also chaired its predecessor the Advisory Council for Applied Research and Development from 1985 to 1987. The Government are very grateful to him for the very valuable service he has given in these posts.

Engagements

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 June.

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Open University

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the consequences of forthcoming radio wavelength changes on the work of the Open university.

Mr. Mellor: Our attention has recently been drawn to deficiencies in AM radio reception in parts of Scotland. This would have affected reception of the BBC's Open university and other educational programmes following their transfer to the new Radio 5 service in August of this year. In the areas concerned the BBC will continue transmitting these programmes on FM until the AM problem is resolved.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest crime figures for Basildon.

Mr. John Patten: Crime figures are published annually in the report of the chief constable of Essex. The latest figures are given in his annual report for 1989 when 14,559 notifiable offences were recorded in the Basildon division.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the crime figures in the west Lancashire district in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. John Patten: Information for the southern "C" division (which includes the west Lancashire district) is published in the annual report of the chief constable of Lancashire. Statistics of notifiable offences recorded in the Lancashire police force area are published in table 2.4 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1988" and in table 7 of "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 10/90"; copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Badgers

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been under the Badgers Act 1973 and the Wildlife and Countryside Acts 1981 and 1985 for taking or destroying a badger; and what was the percentage of convictions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No figures are available for specific types of offences under these Acts. However in 1988 there were a total of 74 prosecutions for offences under the Badgers Act 1973 and 41 convictions. That is a conviction rate of 55·4 per cent.

Fire Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on nationally recommended minimum standards to maintain fire service cover.

Mr. John Patten: The conclusions and recommendations in the report of the joint committee on standards of fire cover, which was published in 1985, were recommended to fire authorities by fire service circular No. 4/1985 on 22 May 1985, copies of which are in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter dated 2 May from the hon. Member for Worsley with regard to information about possible terrorist activity.

Mr. Waddington: I wrote to the hon. Member, after consulting the police, on 5 June.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth will be sent a reply to his letter dated 12 March referring to Mrs. Frances Bennett of Rugby.

Mr. Mellor: I replied to my hon. Friend on 26 March. I have today sent him a further copy of that letter.

Mr. John Harker

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will now make a statement about the case of John Harker, prisoner R69121, HM prison Kirkham, Preston, Lancashire;

(2) if he will make a statement as to the outcome of the inquiry into the case of John Harker, prisoner R69121, HM prison Kirkham, Preston, Lancashire.

Mr. John Patten: I will be writing to my hon. Friend shortly about this case.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why John Harker, prisoner R69121, Her Majesty's prison Kirkham, Preston, Lancashire, has not yet heard from the parole review board held in January 1990.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. Harker's case is still under consideration. We expect the outcome to be known around the end of June.

Teacher Vetting

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to speed up teacher vetting.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that four additional civilian staff have been deployed on this work since April. I am not aware of general delays outside London.

Arson

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to increase the maximum penalty available to the courts for arson involving damage to property, where no personal injury has occurred.

Mr. John Patten: All offences of arson, whether or not they involve personal injury, already carry a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

Parole

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of cases in England and Wales in which a prisoner has not been given the opportunity to be interviewed by a member of the local review committee as part of the process of parole review for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Figures are not recorded centrally. On those rare occasions when an interview is inadvertently denied, our policy is to offer a fresh review.

Police Complaints Authority

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out for each police force in England and Wales the total number of inquiries in which a Police Complaints Authority member supervised the investigation during the most convenient recent 12-months period, the total number of hours spent on such investigations, and assuming the necessity of the Police Complaints Authority to employ its own investigators at executive officer, senior executive officer and higher executive officer grade, and working a normal home civil service week, what would be the cost implications for the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Strangeways Prison

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest estimate of the cost of repairing the damage recently caused by disturbances at Strangeways prison.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is now able to give the total cost of the destruction and the policing following the prison riot at Strangeways prison.

Mr. Mellor: I announced on 17 May at columns 489-90 plans for the refurbishment of Strangeways prison to provide a range of new and improved facilities, including integral sanitation at a cost of £60 million. This work will also include repair of the damage done during the recent disturbances, which amounts to about £30 million.

The Greater Manchester police authority advises that the additional cost of policing as a result of the disturbances was £580,000.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in considering Sunday trading.

Mr. Mellor: Since the defeat of the Shops Bill, the Government have made it clear that they are prepared to consider reform short of total deregulation if a solution can be found which is widely accepted, enforceable, practicable and likely to command a parliamentary majority. No such solution has yet emerged and I see no prospect of sufficient support to enable us to put forward legislation in the near future.

Dangerous Dogs

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he now expects to bring forward proposals to strengthen the law on dangerous dogs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering whether to do so.

Dog Fighting

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the priority given to prosecuting those involved in dog-fighting activities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Open Banking

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received representations regarding the security aspects of open banking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. A working group appointed by the standing conference on crime prevention to look into commercial robbery mentioned in its 1986 report the increasing popularity of open-plan offices in bank branches. The working group found no evidence that the move towards open plan increased the risk of attack, but the matter is being kept under review by the Home Office, the Metropolitan police and the banks themselves.

Trevi Group

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what subjects of discussions by the Trevi group the Minister expects to be resolved during the Italian Presidency of the European Economic Community;

(2) what areas of United Kingdom law are being looked at with a view to changes to meet the needs for common European Economic Community action as identified by the Trevi group;

(3) if he will list all the meetings of the Trevi group, and the subject discussed at each meeting and decisions arrived at; and if he will indicate the future areas of work the Trevi group will be addressing.

Mr. Waddington: During each presidency of Trevi a number of working groups meet to further co-operation against terrorism, drug trafficking and other serious crimes, reporting their conclusions to senior officials and Ministers. I and my colleagues will be reviewing the work done under the Irish presidency in Dublin next week, and I shall report the outcome to the House. The declaration made at our last meeting in Paris on 15 December 1989, a copy of which is in the Library, sets out a programme of work which is likely to be further progressed during the Italian presidency. No changes in United Kingdom law are currently being considered as a result of work in Trevi, which is concerned with practical police co-operation.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions the Trevi group has had about passing information from the United Kingdom, held on the central police computer, relating (a) to criminal records and (b) suspected crime and suspects; and what protection the group intends to provide to protect the civil rights of any individual so identified;

(2) what discussions the Trevi group of Ministers has had about setting up a European Economic Community-wide database; and what consideration has been given in such discussions to the laws relating to privacy in such countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Trevi Ministers agreed at their meeting in Paris on 15 December 1989 to initiate a study of a possible common information system among member states, designed to combat the most serious forms of crime. The protection of data and of personal privacy is among the considerations to be addressed in this study, which is at an early stage. No decisions have yet been taken on whether to set up such a system and, if so, on what information it should contain or how it should work.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the Trevi group of Ministers has agreed with regard to political asylum refused by one European Economic Community state; how applications will be considered in other European Community states; and what steps are being taken to harmonise the grounds for granting political asylum.

Mr. Waddington: At their last meeting in Paris on 15 December 1989, EC Immigration Ministers adopted a declaration relating, among other subjects, to measures on asylum. A copy of the declaration is in the Library. The next meeting is to be held in Dublin on 14 and 15 June and the outcome will be reported to the House in the usual way.

Overseas Voters

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the leaflets printed and distributed encouraging overseas electors to enrol in the United Kingdom; how many were distributed; and through what channels in (a) South Africa, (b) Zimbabwe, (c) Australia, (d) Canada, (e) New Zealand and the EC.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Two million copies of the leaflet "Keeping your vote when living abroad" have been printed at a cost of £30,000. Of these, 1,023,000 have been sent to diplomatic posts and missions abroad; the remainder have been sent to electoral registration officers, or to United Kingdom organisations with overseas connections, or have been retained for future use.

Distribution of the leaflets by British diplomatic posts abroad began in May and is continuing by various means, including mailshots to expatriates, inclusion with renewed passports, and in response to direct requests from individuals, firms and organisations. Details of the precise means of distribution in specific countries could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Disability)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities are provided for disabled prisoners who are (a) physically disabled, (b) blind, (c) mentally ill or (d) deaf.

Mr. Mellor: As indicated in the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 16 May 1990 at column 411, prison establishments seek to meet the needs of those with disabilities on an individual basis. Their requirements are assessed by medical and other staff as part of the reception procedure.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned into the needs of disabled people in prison.

Mr. Mellor: A survey was undertaken last year into the accessibility of prison establishments for people with disabilities, including inmates, staff and visitors. The survey focused on the problems of those with physical disabilities.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there is any extra support for disabled prisoners' rehabilitation needs on discharge.

Mr. John Patten: The probation service should be informed by the prison authorities of any medical matters relating to the discharge of inmates, with particular attention given to the individual needs of blind or otherwise handicapped prisoners. This procedure will become a requirement with the issue of prison department standing order 11 later this year.

With regard to the provision of after care, the home probation officer can arrange contacts with relevant social services departments and other bodies that are able to offer support and guidance.

Prison Service (Disabled Employees)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disabled employees there are in the prison service.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 March 1990, the prison service employed 45 people who had declared that they were registered disabled.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to obtain a transcript of the speech of Commander Richard Monk of the Metropolitan police on 7 June, on child abusers, for study by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend asked for a transcript of the speech which Commander Monk made on 7 June.

Polling Stations

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that all electors arriving at their polling station during the last 30 minutes before the doors of the polling station are closed are not denied their right to vote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Polling hours at parliamentary, European parliamentary and local government elections are laid down in the relevant legislation. We have no reason to believe that the statutory requirements are not being complied with, but if the hon. Member knows of a particular difficulty, perhaps he would write to me about it.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what plans or studies have been made or commissioned by the Metropolitan police to assess the measures that would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to questions from the hon. Members for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 8 June at column 724.

Life Imprisonment

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report, the recommendations from the House of Lords Select Committee on Murder and Life Imprisonment which have been accepted wholly or in part by Her Majesty's Government; indicating which, if any, have already been implemented.

Mr. John Patten: The White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" (Cm 965) announced our decision that the mandatory sentence of life imprisonment for the crime of murder should remain to mark the heinous nature of this crime. We are carefully considering the Select Committee recommendations on the release of prisoners sentenced to life imprisonment made by the House of Lords Select Committee on Murder and Life Imprisonment. I welcome the recommendations to improve the arrangements for victims' families, and the recent victims' charter endorses this approach.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Facilities

Sir David Steel: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will make it his policy to ensure before 1992 that hon. Members enjoy the same international line telephone facilities to Strasbourg and Brussels which are available to Members of the European Parliament.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The provision of such facilities is under active consideration at present and I hope proposals will be brought before the Services Committee in the near future.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members are provided with telephones in accommodation in London not owned by the state outside the House where the cost of calls arising from the use of that equipment is paid for by public funds.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No hon. Members are provided with such telephones by the authorities of the House.

Committees (Televising)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the number of times and the dates when each Select Committee of the House has been televised since the introduction of television.

Oral Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what estimate he has made of the saving in cash and paper if the proposals of the Procedure Committee on oral questions, in its first report of the current Session, HC 379, are accepted.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: If the proposals are accepted it is estimated that savings to the public purse of around £1 million annually will arise. Over 10 million sheets of A4 paper will be saved.

Vote Bundle

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 297, what is the total cost to public funds for the supply of the Vote bundle as a whole since the 1987 general election and the volume of paper consumed in production of the Vote bundle for the same period.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The total cost to public funds for supply of the Vote bundle as a whole since the 1987 general election is estimated at £17·5 million, to the end of April 1990. The volume of paper consumed in production of the Vote bundle for the same period is estimated at 800 tonnes.

Recycled Paper

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 297, whether the items mentioned will be made from 100 per cent. recycled paper from low-grade paper waste; whether orders for the non-recycled versions have ceased; and when he expects present stocks to be exhausted.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand that the items mentioned will contain more than 50 per cent. pre-consumer recycled waste but will not be produced from recycled low-grade waste. Orders for the non-recycled versions have ceased and present stocks are likely to be exhausted by autumn this year.

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No study of this nature has been undertaken by the Privy Council Office in the last 10 years.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Services (Administration)

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, answering for the House of Commons Commission, when he expects Sir Robin Ibbs to complete his report on the administration of House of Commons services.

Mr. Beith: A timetable for the completion of the review which I announced on 23 May, Official Report, column 179 has yet to be agreed with Sir Robin Ibbs. It is hoped, however, that the Commission will be able to consider any advice from Sir Robin before the end of the year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Vehicle Test Certificates (Northern Ireland)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Attorney-General, in 1987, 1988 and 1989, how many persons were convicted in Northern Ireland of not having a vehicle test certificate.

The Attorney-General: I regret that this information could not be made available except at disproportionate cost.

Television Licences (Northern Ireland)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Attorney-General, in 1987, 1988 and 1989, how many persons were convicted in Northern Ireland of not having a television licence.

The Attorney-General: I regret that this information could not be made available except at disproportionate cost.

Anton Piller Orders

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his written answer of 5 June to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, which problems the intended changes in the regulations on Anton Piller orders are designed to overcome.

The Attorney-General: The civil justice review recommended that as a general rule the same remedies should be available in both the High Court and the county courts, but that the power to grant Anton Piller orders should normally be reserved to the High Court judiciary in view of the draconian nature of these orders. The Government have accepted this recommendation, which will be taken forward in clause 3 of the Courts and Legal Services Bill and in regulations under clause 3.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Recycled Paper

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department is doing to encourage a market for recycled paper and to expand industrial capacity to process waste paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: There is already a strong market for paper products which contain recycled fibre. Government Departments generally are important and reliable customers in this market buying general notepaper, index books, graph paper and brown stationery manufactured from recycled fibre. The letterhead paper used in my Department, including that used by Ministers and senior officials, contains recycled fibre and we are increasing the use of recycled paper in our publications.

Following a successful pilot scheme, my Department will by the end of this month be collecting separately, from eight of our London buildings, high-grade office waste paper which is currently used in the production of higher-grade recycled paper.

Post Office

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of the Mail Users Association recent report on the performance of the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I received with interest the MUA's report, "Deliver us from the Post Office", published in May last year and its follow-up "Improving Postal Services", published in March this year. Quality of service is an operational matter for the Post Office. However, I know that the chairman regards this as a key priority and is constantly searching for ways to improve performance. In this he has my full support.

Peace Dividend

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies he is undertaking on the effects of the peace dividend on the structure of industry and employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what he estimates the current usage in the United Kingdom of chlorofluorocarbons in the cleaning of printed circuit boards to be; and what percentage of total United Kingdom usage this comprises.

Mr. Forth: In March this year DTI issued a report on "Chlorinated Solvent Cleaning: The Impact of Environmental and Regulatory Controls." Among other chlorinated solvents, the report estimated United Kingdom consumption of the chlorofluorocarbon CFC-113 to be 7,500 tonnes with 45 per cent. of that total applied in the electronics sector. The report does not contain figures for printed circuit board application in particular.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to stimulate and promote research into the replacement of the use of chlorofluorocarbons in the manufacture of printed circuit boards.

Mr. Forth: Both the producers of chlorofluorocarbon (CFC) solvents and the users within the electronics industry are actively engaged in research to develop and implement alternative cleaning products and processes to reduce the use of CFC solvents in the manufacture of printed circuit boards. The range of alternatives available are described in a report produced for the Department of Trade and Industry and published by HMSO in March 1990, entitled "Chlorinated Solvent Cleaning: The Impact of Environmental and Regulatory Controls." The DTI, in conjunction with the Ministry of Defence, is to support a collaborative assessment by the electronics industry of the technical performance of the alternatives to CFCs. The results of this study will be disseminated to small and medium-sized enterprises within the electronics industry. Support for collaborative research is also available through general DTI research and development programmes and, for collaboration within Europe, through the Eurek Euroenviron programme. In addition, CFCs and their alternatives are one of the selected priority areas eligible for grant aid for research up to "proof of concept" stage under the Department of the Environment's environmental protection technology scheme.

Furnishings (Flammability)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurance he has sought from the European Commission that legislation concerning the flammability of furniture and furnishings will meet the highest safety standards for British consumers.

Mr. Forth: My Department has had discussions with the Commission and the second draft of the directive already contains elements of the requirements of the United Kingdom furniture regulations, including resistance to ignition by cigarettes and matches.

We will continue to press strongly for our requirement for ignition resistance of foam and other fillings, at forthcoming meetings with the Commission and parallel meetings to determine European test standards.

We shall shortly be circulating consultation papers including copies of the second draft of the directive.

Because the directive is to cover contract furniture as well as the domestic variety, this will be a combined exercise with the Home Office, which has the wider responsibility for fire prevention.

Vehicle Mileometers

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to bring forward proposals to further control the clocking of vehicle mileometers.

Mr. Forth: I have no plans to do so. This practice is a criminal offence under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 and local trading standards officers have the appropriate powers to investigate and to prosecute offenders.

Postal Services

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has recently received about the quality of the postal services in London.

Mr. Forth: Since the beginning of this year my Department has received 37 written representations about the quality of the postal services in London. In addition, two questions on this subject have been tabled in the House by hon. Members.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to establish any new bodies to oversee particular sectors of industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department has no plans to establish any new bodies to oversee particular sectors of industry.

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the amount of Government cash given to (a) United Engineering Steels Ltd., (b) British Steel Corporation and (c) British Steel under Phoenix I and Phoenix II plans.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 7 June 1990]: When United Engineering Steels Ltd. was established under the Phoenix II plans the Government provided £55 million of funds through BSC. Government money was not given to BSC under the Phoenix I plans, the corporation's interests being funded internally.

Brymbo Steelworks

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the amount of Government cash given to (a) United Engineering Steels Ltd., (b) British Steel Corporation and (c) British Steel which was (i) earmarked or (ii) spent on Brymbo steelworks, Clwyd.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 7 June 1990]: When United Engineering Steels Ltd. (the owners of Brymbo steelworks) was established the Government provided £55 million of funds to UES through the British Steel Corporation. The disposition of these funds within UES was entirely a matter for the company.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will visit Brymbo steelworks to meet steelworkers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 7 June 1990]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Brymbo steelworks.

Refrigerators

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department is considering the introduction of deposit systems on the price of new refrigerators to encourage recycling of CFCs and other ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 11 June 1990]: A recent report for the Department of Trade and Industry, entitled "CFCs and Halons: Alternatives and the Scope for Recovery for Recycling and Destruction", found that there is scope for further development of CFC recycling activity in respect of refrigeration. The DTI and the Department of the Environment will be examining what more needs to be done to encourage such development. Strengthening of the controls on CFCs, where the Government are committed to complete phase-out of CFCs as soon as practically possible, and certainly by the year 2000, will itself contribute a strong incentive to increase the level of recycling undertaken.

Chlorinated Solvents

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what further action his Department proposes to take following the publication of its report on chlorinated solvent cleaning;

(2) what action his Department has taken, following the publication of its report on chlorinated solvent cleaning, to increase the levels of awareness of the Montreal protocol in small and medium-sized enterprises and in the general engineering industry.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Copies of the chlorinated solvent cleaning report, and briefing sheets relevant to each of the sectors considered by the report, have been widely distributed to the trade associations for the general engineering, electronics, precision engineering, and dry cleaning industries.

The parties to the Montreal protocol are to meet in London at the end of June 1990, when they are expected to strengthen the controls within the protocol on chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs). They are also likely to place controls on some other ozone-depleting substances, including 1.1.1 trichloroethane (methyl chloroform), which is widely used by the general and precision engineering industries. In July 1990, the DTI and the Department of the Environment are to brief trade associations on the results of this international meeting and the potential implications for their sectors.

In March 1990, the Department of Trade and Industry co-sponsored a conference on electronics manufacturing and the environment. This was designed specifically to provide information to small and medium-sized enterprises in the electronics industry on the current and likely future controls on ozone-depleting substances within the Montreal protocol, and the range of environmentally acceptable alternatives available.

This autumn DTI is planning to hold a series of regional seminars designed to inform SMEs, particularly those within the engineering industry, of the Montreal protocol and its likely impact. This activity complements the information provided by a number of suppliers of ozone-depleting solvents to their customers about the controls on such substances and the options available for reducing usage and switching to alternatives.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department will propose any new codes of practice to discourage companies from disposing of solvents and to encourage their collection and return to manufacturers.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Solvent recovery and disposal is already one of the subjects covered by a European Community code of practice for the design, construction and operation of CFC-113 solvent-cleaning equipment. This code, which has been drawn up by industry and updated to take account of the development of new technology in this area, sets out guidelines to maximise the level of recovery and recycling and ensure that contaminated solvent is disposed of safely.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures on the take-up of each restart option in the Bristol area, the south-west, and Great Britain.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for the restart programme became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the chief executive of the employment service will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many women are in (a) part-time and (b) full-time employment; what were the similar figures in 1960, 1970 and 1980; what the figure is estimated to be in 1995, 2000 and 2010; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Information for full-time and part-time employment was collected only from June 1971. The Department does not make forecasts of employment. The available figures are as follows:

Female Employees in Employment
(Thousands, United Kingdom, Seasonally adjusted)

	Part-time	Full-time
June 1971	2,793	5,603
June 1980	3,913	5,739
December 1989[1]	4,479	6,516

[1] Latest available.

Employment Service Offices

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list by region (a) the number of employment service offices that have been established since December 1989 and (b) the number of surplus properties which are now to be disposed of following the reorganisation of the service.

Mr. Nicholls: The employment service, which is responsible for jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Benefit Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when claimant advisers have worked out an estimate of the in-work benefits to which a claimant may be entitled if they took a low-paying job, what instructions are they given and what action should they take against a claimant who refuses to follow up the vacancy when in-work benefit calculation shows the claimant would (a) clearly be better off in work, (b) be only marginally better off or (c) be financially worse off; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for the claimant adviser service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the chief executive of the employment service, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of claimants who have refused actively seeking work review interviews; and if he will estimate the percentage of those receiving actively seeking work warning letters who are not given the opportunity of a review interview prior to the submission of their case to an adjudication officer.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for the claimant adviser service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disablement resettlement officers and blind persons resettlement officers there are in the employment service; and how many referrals have been made by them to adjudication officers following doubts on (i) actively seeking work, (ii) restricted availability and (iii) refusal of employment, since 9 October 1989.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for the provision of employment services to people with disabilities, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many UB671Ws have been issued by new claimant advisers at initial claim interviews.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service, which is responsible for the new client adviser programme, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the spending on the community insulation programme in (i) each region, (ii) England as a whole, (iii) Wales and (iv) Great Britain in each year from 1983-84 and estimated for 1989-90.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on expenditure on community insulation projects operated under the community programme from 1983-84 to 1987-88 is not readily available. Expenditure for Great Britain in 1988-89 was £6·34 million, but is not readily available by region. Expenditure in 1989 is shown in the table.

	£ million
Northern	0·57
Yorkshire and Humberside	1·10
North West	0·94
West Midlands	0·54
East Midlands and Eastern	0·33
Wales	0·52
South West	0·38
London	0·07
South East	0·29
Great Britain	[1]10·08

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the number of draught-proofing jobs completed so far in the current year and completed in the equivalent periods of 1987, 1988 and 1989 for (a) the London borough of Camden and (b) the London borough of Islington; and what were the full-year figures for 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the United States Secretary of State to discuss whether short-range nuclear weapons should be included in the current CFE talks.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Baker and other NATO colleagues at the North Atlantic Council meeting held at Turnberry on 7 and 8 June. NATO agreed at that meeting that negotiations on United States and Soviet short-range nuclear weapons systems in Europe should begin shortly after a CFE agreement is concluded.

We shall continue to be in very close touch with the United States on this subject in preparation for the NATO summit in London from 4 to 6 July.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from Governments in the Indian subcontinent and the middle east respectively, regarding nuclear proliferation in their global region.

Mr. Waldegrave: No such representations have been received, although Egypt has put forward in the United Nations an initiative calling for a middle east zone free from weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what directions are to be given to the United Kingdom delegates to the non-proliferation treaty review conference to be held later in the currrent year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As one of the three depositary powers for the treaty, the United Kingdom will be working for a positive and successful review conference.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the membership of the 1963 partial nuclear test ban treaty of the political union of North and South Yemen.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Yemen Arab Republic signed the partial test ban treaty in Moscow and Washington on 6 September 1963; the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen acceded to the treaty in Moscow on 1 June 1979. The new Republic of Yemen announced on 22 May has stated that it will respect all the international obligations of its predecessors.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the occasions, and level of political communications when Ministers or civil servants of his Department have raised the membership of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with (a) member state representatives and (b) non-parties to the treaty (i) during preparatory committee meetings for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty's fourth quinquennial review conference and (ii) other occasions, since 1 January.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have discussed this subject on numerous occasions and at various levels.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the membership of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of the political union of North and South Yemen.

Mr. Waldegrave: In a letter of 19 May to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, the Foreign Ministers of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen stated that, following the formation of the Republic of Yemen, all treaties and agreements concluded by either state, in accordance with international law, would remain in force.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number and types of nuclear weapons and nuclear explosive devices cancelled or disamantled since 1970 as a result of multilateral or bilateral nuclear disarmament negotiations involving Britain with the United States of America or the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Waldegrave: No British nuclear weapons have been the subject of such arms control agreements. But we are fully committed to the aim of enhancing security through agreements achieving a balance at lower levels of forces: NATO has unilaterally reduced its stockpile of nuclear weapons in Europe by 35 per cent. since 1979.

South Africa

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will seek to extend the COCOM export controls to include South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: The proscribed destinations to which the COCOM controls apply are determined by strategic security reasons. South Africa does not fall into this category.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will adopt the proposals made by the Commonwealth committee of Foreign Ministers on southern Africa to strengthen the arms embargo on South Africa.

Mr. Waldegrave: We already offer the assistance to the United Nations arms embargo committee which was called for by the recent meeting of the Commonwealth committee of Foreign Ministers on southern Africa at Abuja.

Council of Ministers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will be attending the next meeting of the European Community Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend will attend the meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 and 19 June.

Palestine

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received the latest United Nations Relief and Works Agency estimate of the number of Palestinians killed and injured in the occupied territories since December 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. We are deeply concerned about the continuing violence in the occupied territories and the number of Palestinians killed and wounded.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss with the Falkland Islands council the possibility of permitting a limited number of British passport holders from Hong Kong to settle there.

Mr. Sainsbury: No such discussions are proposed as it is a matter for the Falkland Islands Government.

Antarctica

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will review the British response to the proposed Antarctic minerals convention in view of the concern expressed by individuals and organisations in Britain about the threat which mining developments would pose to the Antarctic environment.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 11 June.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 3 May, column 626, what response his Department will make or has made to the joint paper on the French and Australian proposals received on 3 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my replies on 9 May to the hon. Members for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton) and for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) and to my reply on 15 May to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn).

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which conference Dr. John Heap has attended as a representative of his Department, since February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. In his personal capacity, however, Dr. Heap has attended conferences or meetings organised by the Sir Robert Menzies Centre for Australian Studies and the Royal Geographical Society in London, and the Fridtjof Nansen Institute in Oslo.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the special consultative meeting of Antarctic treaty countries will take place; who will represent his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Arrangements for the meeting have not been finalised.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the petroleum companies whose representatives his Department has met within the last 12 months with regard to the convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities; the dates of the meetings and the nature of the discussions.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Hong Kong

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of the People's Republic of China concerning the status of British overseas citizens in Hong Kong after 1997; what assurances he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The right of abode of British overseas citizens in Hong Kong after 1997 is safeguarded under the agreement with the Chinese Government, and is set out in section XIV of annex 1 to the joint declaration.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the numbers and ages of those held in custody in Sri Lanka by the security forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: According to figures released by the Sri Lankan Government, in November 1989 there were 8,000 youths in detention under emergency regulations. No more recent or comprehensive figures have been released.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to make a formal response to the recent report of the Western European Union Assembly on low flying.

Mr. Waldegrave: Formal responses to recommendations in reports of the Western European Union Assembly are the responsibility of the WEU permanent council. We have no plans to make a separate response.

SCOTLAND

Under-fives

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what actions have been taken by the Government since 1979 to assist with the expansion of pre-five facilities;

(2) what financial assistance he has been able to offer regional councils to expand their pre-five facilities.

Mr. Lang: It is for local authorities to decide the extent and nature of the provision they make for children under five. In doing so they are assisted by financial provision made available as part of the revenue support grant settlement. This has enabled nursery education and day care places to be increased by 35 per cent. since 1979.

Mortality Rates

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of (a) perinatal and (b) neonatal mortality in each health board in Scotland in each of the years 1986 to 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Health Board Area	1986	1987	1988	[1]1989

Community Education

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the volume of community-based adult education provided in each year since 1979; and whether he has made any assessment of changes in the quality of the education provided over the same period;

(2) what steps he has taken to monitor the provision by education authorities in Scotland of community-based adult basic education and English as a second language services; and what criteria he has laid down for determining their adequacy in terms of (a) scale and (b) quality;

(3) what are his priorities and objectives for the expansion of community-based (a) adult basic education and (b) English as a second language provision in Scotland; and what guidance he has issued to local education authorities on the development of this provision;

(4) what plans he has to ensure that all those leaving long-stay institutions without essential skills in literacy and numeracy receive adult basic education;

(5) what steps he has taken to ensure the development of an educational dimension to care in the community;

(6) if he has any plans to make additional earmarked funds available to local authorities to enable them to develop community-based educational provision for priority groups.

Mr. Lang: The provision of community education in Scotland, including adult education and English as a second language, is primarily the responsibility of education authorities. They determine the extent and means of provision in the light of local needs and with regard to their own priorities and the total resources available to them, including those resources provided by central Government.

In 1990-91 revenue support grant of £2,479 million has been made available by central Government, representing an increase of 10·5 per cent. over the level of £2,244 million in 1989-90 and 23·5 per cent. over rate support grant of £2,007 million in 1988-89. There are no plans to make additional funds available in 1990-91 to local authorities specifically for community education purposes.

No central record is held of the volume of community-based adult education in Scotland. Her Majesty's inspectors of schools make inspections of providers of adult education, report on the quality of provision and make recommendations.

Detailed advice on service planning in the field of community care was issued in April 1985 to health boards and regional and district councils in respect of social work, education and health functions.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to provide funding for the professional training and accreditation of adult basic education practitioners in Scotland along the lines of the local education authority training grants scheme in England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: Professional training and accreditation for adult basic education practitioners in Scotland is being developed by the Scottish adult basic education forum together with the community education validation and endorsement (Scotland) group, both of which were set up by the Scottish Community Education Council. I would expect such new developments to qualify for support under the current scheme for in-service training of teachers and community education workers.

Open Learning Centres

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to increase the funding provided by his Department for local open learning centres.

Mr. Lang: We would be prepared to consider funding additional adult learning provision run by the voluntary sector, provided it is of an innovative nature.

Industrial Oil and Chemicals

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will immediately implement section 31A of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 as substituted by schedule 23 to the Water Act 1989 so as to regulate industrial oil and chemical storage on industrial sites.

Mr. Rifkind: I am considering, with the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales, the preparation of regulations to control the storage of industrial oil and chemicals.

Nursery Education

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from Strathclyde region on the need to place nursery school facilities on a statutory basis; and what response he has made.

Mr. Lang: No such representations have been received.

Lead Contamination

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of the reported cases of illness, or high levels of lead in the blood, caused by lead in the water supply, lead pipes and lead water tanks, in each of the years between 1979 and 1990 inclusive, for (a) pregnant women, (b) babies, (c) young children and (d) the general population; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available. The Government have always recognised the health implications of lead in water and have taken practical and positive steps to tackle them in the light of developing medical evidence and advice.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to privatise the Forestry Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have no plans to privatise the Forestry Commission.

Sand-eel Fishing

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to impose a moratorium on sand-eel fishing in Shetland waters.

Mr. Lang: Under arrangements already in place fishing for sand-eels in Shetland waters will close for this year on 15 June.

GPs (Fund Holding)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether it is intended to reimburse the preparatory costs of those general practitioner practices preparing to submit formal applications for fund-holding status from April 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. A preparatory allowance of up to £16,000 per practice will be available to practices which have reached agreement with their relevant health board to undertake preparatory work for fund holding. The allowance will be used to reimburse the costs of additional work which practices will need to complete in order to be in a position to take on fund-holding status from 1 April 1991. Parliamentary approval to this new service is being sought in the main estimate for hospital and community health services, family practitioner services (part) and other health services, Scotland—class XV, vote 27. Pending that approval and the enactment of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill when formal applications for GP practice fund-holding status can be made, urgent expenditure estimated at £160,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

Fish Poisoning

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of (a) Nuvan chemicals and (b) Aquagard chemicals in the poisoning of salmon and sea trout.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Aquagard, formerly known as Nuvan, is a licensed veterinary medicine which is used to treat sea lice infestation in farmed salmon.

Responsibility for the assessment of the safety, quality and efficacy of veterinary medicines rests with the Veterinary Products Committee, which advises the Government in such matters. The committee considered the safety of Aquagard to both humans and animals, including fish, in its consideration of the application for a product licence under the Medicines Act 1968.

On the advice of the Veterinary Products Committee a one-year product licence for Aquagard was issued in June 1989. A review of the product is currently being undertaken and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food hopes to make a statement shortly.

Fishing

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conclusions he has drawn from his study of the deep oceanic intake of waters into Loch Coruisk in the Isle of Skye and the surrounding area in relation to sea trout numbers in north-west Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Loch Coruisk is a freshwater loch. Sea water cannot enter the loch, but its outflow is directly into the sea. The long-term sea trout catch records for the lochs on the Strathaird estate, including Coruisk, show a sustained decline. Fishing effort over the same period has remained stable and there has been no change in land use in the catchment area. It could be inferred that the cause of the decline lies in the sea, but there is no evidence to confirm this.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he has made of the impact on fishing in Scottish rivers of summer tourists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: No special studies have been made on the effect of summer tourists, as opposed to fishermen generally, on fishing in Scottish rivers. It has been alleged that angling for immature sea trout by summer tourists may have contributed to the recent sharp decline in sea trout catches. But it is not possible to say how much, if any, of this increased mortality results from the activities of tourist anglers.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial provision he makes for the extra cost of working at night to carry out fishery research.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: This information is not available in the form requested. Total expenditure on overtime and allowances at the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland marine and freshwater fisheries laboratories in 1989-90 was around £375,000.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his co-operation in fisheries research with experts in the west of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Scientists of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland keep in close touch with scientists and fishery managers from the Salmon Research Trust of Ireland at Burrishoole and the Department of Marine in Dublin about their respective research programmes. There is also frequent contact with counterparts from the Republic of Ireland in various working groups of the International Council for Exploration of the Sea or meetings of other international organisations.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he is making of habitat erosion and fish spawning.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Some of the effects of habitat erosion on fish spawning are well understood. For example, bankside erosion is known to cause loss of cover for parr and adults, loss of terrestial food organisms from bankside vegetation and silting up of spawning gravel downstream.

These effects may result from over-graving, intensive bankside activity by anglers and changes in flow regime. The latter can have several causes including land use changes or exceptional rainfall in catchments or changes in drainage, planting or clear-felling in forestry. Research has shown that such changes can be minimised by adopting good management practices.

A study of the effects on salmonid fishes of changes in drainage patterns following afforestation is currently being undertaken by scientists from the freshwater fisheries laboratory at Pitlochry in co-operation with the Forestry Commission, the Institute of Freshwater Ecology and the Atlantic Salmon Trust. A study of the effects of clear-felling on salmonid fishes is also in progress with Forestry Commission help.

Extensive surveys of the distribution of juvenile salmonid fishes have recently been undertaken by freshwater fisheries laboratory staff. These surveys give an important indication of the success of salmon spawning in different areas of Scotland.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are taken to ensure adequate enforcement of legislation providing that if a trawler catches more than 10 per cent. of its catch in the form of protected species, the skipper loses his licence.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The by-catch restrictions vary according to the target species and are all vigorously enforced by the fisheries department. The penalty provided for by legislation for exceeding by-catch limits is a fine not exceeding £5,000 plus a fine not exceeding the value of the fish in respect of which the offence was committed or actual forfeiture of the fish. In addition, any person guilty of such an offence is liable to forfeiture of the net or other fishing gear used in committing the offence. This penalty applies rather than licence revocation.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he is making of the impact of seals round the mouths of fishing rivers in dry summers on sea trout entering the rivers to spawn.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: There has been no specific study of the impact of seals at the mouths of fishing rivers although some work has been done on the diet of seals in the Moray Firth. A series of papers has been produced as a result of this and other research on seals commissioned by DAFS and the results will be published over the course of the next 18 months.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he is making on Loch Eriboll of the inter-breeding between wild and farmed salmon; and if he will make a statement on the results.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: In February 1989, a large number of growing salmon escaped from fish farm sea cages into Loch Eriboll in northern Scotland as the result of a single accident. By August it had become clear that escaped farmed fish were entering the nearby River Polla with the native run of wild fish. Scientists from the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland supported by the Atlantic Salmon Trust, the university of Stirling and the Scottish Salmon Growers Association, studied the spawning of wild and farmed fish in the river.

The movements of radiotagged fish were monitored and it was established that wild fish and farmed escapees could be distinguished by appearance and by pigment analysis of samples of muscle taken from fish of both types. All the fish entering the river were sexually mature and farmed fish of both sexes were observed to spawn. All the females captured towards the end of the year had become spent. Farmed and wild fish were observed to cross. Wild fish were distributed throughout the river's length at spawning but the distribution of farmed fish was more restricted. Farmed fish of both sexes tended to spawn especially in the lower reaches of the river. This tendency was particularly marked in the case of females. The difference in the distributions of farmed and wild fish at spawning was confirmed, in the case of females, by pigment analysis of eggs sampled from redds located throughout the river's length. Farmed females tended to spawn later than wild ones. Farmed females cut redds on areas of spawning gravel on which redds had previously been constructed by wild fish.

The results of ths study were presented at an international symposium in Norway in April 1990 to consider "Interactions between Cultured and Wild Atlantic Salmon". Full details of the study have been submitted for publication in the scientific literature.

Study of the River Polla will be continued this year to determine whether farmed salmon enter the River Polla again and, if they do so, whether last year's findings may be generalised between years at the same site. Further studies are being performed to establish whether escaped farmed females spawned in the Rivers Hope—Strathmore—and Dionard which flank the River Polla to the east and west, respectively. Pigment analyses will be performed on eggs and alevins sampled recently from both rivers. In addition, with the Queen's university of Belfast, it is intended to test whether observations of the crossing of farmed and wild fish can be confirmed using genetic "fingerprinting" techniques to establish the parentage of juveniles.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give his salmon advisory committee a remit to concern itself with sea trout.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: We have no plans to do so. The salmon advisory committee already has a very substantial programme of work to complete on Atlantic salmon.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he is making of fish-bearing pathogens.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Scientists at the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory investigate the causes of pathological conditions in wild and farmed fish in Scotland and carry out research on the detection of pathogens and the diagnosis and prevention of infectious diseases in fish.

This research provides the basis for advice to my right hon. and learned Friend on the use of his powers under the diseases of fish legislation and to district salmon fishery boards, fish farmers and fishermen to help them prevent or minimise the effects of diseases in farmed fish.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being undertaken on the marine phase of sea trout life cycles.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Research has been undertaken by the Scottish Marine Biological Association on the movements and feeding behaviour of sea trout in sea lochs in Argyll. This will be followed up by a coastal sampling programme in north-west Scotland to obtain additional information on seasonal diets, insights into the distribution of the sea trout and material for parasitological and microbiological examination.

The work will be undertaken by scientists from the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine and freshwater fisheries laboratories, in co-operation with local fishermen.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being undertaken on the relationship between marine temperatures and the growth of sea lice on fish.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The Fisheries Departments have commissioned a study on the biology of sea lice at the Institute of Aquaculture, university of Stirling. This study, which is still in progress, has shown that the life cycle of the louse—lepeophtheirus salmonis—is temperature dependent. The following information has been gained from the project so far.

Sea temperature	Time to complete cycle (weeks)
6-9°C (Scottish west coast winter temperature)	8-9
10-12°C	7-8
13-5-14°C (Scottish west coast summer temperature)	7

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what conveniently available figures he has for the costs of ship time in all weathers for the study of rare migratory fish, such as sea trout.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The daily cost of operating inshore launches to conduct research is between £200-£250. In the open sea the daily cost of the departmental research vessels is £2,450 for the smaller Clupea and £8,150 for the Scotia. These figures do not include the salaries and related costs of scientists on board ship.

Government Buildings (Security)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to award any further contracts to private security companies to provide security services in respect of Government buildings in Edinburgh in the years 1990 to 1993.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland will shortly invite tenders for security services at one of its scientific establishments. I have no other proposals under consideration, but I shall review the position when the existing contract for services at four offices expires in 1992.

Disabled People

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what will be the nature of the contractual obligations placed upon local enterprise companies which will ensure that training is made available to people who have disabilities;

(2) what safeguard over funding will be made to ensure that local enterprise companies are able to provide training opportunities for people who have disabilities;

(3) what plans he has to ensure that training for employment for people who have disabilities will continue under Scottish Enterprise at the same or enhanced level.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Local enterprise companies will be provided with appropriate levels of resources and obliged by the terms of their contract to meet performance targets relating specifically to provision for trainees with special needs. In the unlikely event of an individual local enterprise company failing to meet its contractual obligations in this or any other respect, Scottish Enterprise will take immediate remedial action, which can ultimately, if the issue is sufficiently serious, take the form of cancellation of the contract and direct delivery of services by Scottish Enterprise itself until an alternative local enterprise company is established.

The Government are determined that the creation of Scottish Enterprise and local enterprise companies should not result in a diminution of support for trainees with special needs of one sort or another.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives have been taken to ensure that adequate training for employment is available to meet the needs of people who have disabilities in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Youth training will ensure that adequate training is available to meet the needs of young people aged 16 to 18 years who have disabilities, by a strengthened guarantee of training to all young people under 18 offering a training opportunity suitable to the needs of every young person. Funding arrangements are set to ensure that available resources are concentrated on the most vulnerable groups of young people.

Employment training will provide training for people with disabilities by special measures which include an extension of the training period to up to two years for people with special training needs, communication services for the deaf, adaptation to premises and equipment, special aids to employment, such as tools and equipment, and a personal reader service for the blind. In addition, for people with disabilities, there is no numerical ceiling on entry applied, the normal eligibility criteria are waived and people with disabilities can enter employment training immediately provided they are unemployed.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the level and quality of training for people who have disabilities in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: I am satisfied that the new flexibilities introduced for youth training and employment training will make a significant contribution to improving the level and quality of training for people and unemployed people including those who have disabilities.

Sheltered Employment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people whose principal handicap is a result of mental illness are employed under the sheltered placement scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Of the 668 disabled people who were employed under the sheltered placement scheme in Scotland at 31 March 1990, a total of 32 had a mental illness as their principal disability.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sheltered employment services which are available to people who have mental health problems in Scotland, other than the sheltered placement scheme.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: In addition to the sheltered placement scheme, sheltered employment opportunities for people with mental health problems are provided in Scotland in Remploy factories and sheltered workshops run by local authorities and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many additional sheltered placement scheme places will be made available to sponsors in the coming year in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: There will be no additional sheltered placement scheme places made available in Scotland this year. At current placement turnover rates, approximately 70 places will become available during the year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to improve the sheltered employment services available to people who have mental health problems in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Sheltered employment for people with severe disabilities, including those with mental health problems, is among the matters being considered in a review of employment and training for people with disabilities which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has been undertaking. It is expected that a consultative document will be published shortly.

Women's Refuges

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of refuges for battered women; and how many places they provide in each local authority in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Information is not available centrally on the total number of refuges or the number of places provided.

Fife Social Services Department

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress made by Sheriff Kearney in reporting on the Fife regional social work department; and when he expects to receive the sheriff's report.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: I understand that the chairman has sought evidence from the social work department of Fife regional council on matters of concern which he has identified. Once the department has prepared its list of witnesses, he hopes to be able to predict a timetable for completing the inquiry and submitting his report.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Boats

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give further consideration to introducing a decommissioning scheme for the British fishing industry along the lines operated by other European Economic Community states.

Mr. Curry: No.

Shellfish

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what compensation he is offering to (a) fishermen and (b) processors affected by the ban on landings of shellfish and crustaceans.

Mr. Curry: None.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations were held with (a) the catching industry, (b) the processing industry and (c) the EC Commission to help prohibition of shellfish and crustaceans of the coast of northern England.

Mr. Curry: The warning to consumers of shellfish from the north-east coast issued by the Department of Health on 26 May was first brought to the attention of representatives of the industry on that day.

The EC Commission was also notified of this action at an early stage in accordance with agreed EC procedures for circulating information about food hazards.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research he has available on the effects of red algae bloom on (a) mussels, (b) shellfish and (c) crustaceans; and what regard the Commission has for imposing his prohibited code.

Mr. Curry: Scientists at the directorate of fisheries research routinely monitor molluscan shellfish, principally mussels, for the toxin which they can accumulate from certain algae. Monitoring of crustacea began this year in response to the very high levels of toxins observed in mussels, and associated research is under way to establish more precisely the consequences of algal blooms to crustacea, principally crabs.

The European Commission's proposal for a Council regulation on shellfish hygiene (COM (89) 648 Final) includes a provision that molluscs should not contain more than 80 microgrammes of paralytic shellfish poisoning toxin per hundred grammes of flesh. This is the same criterion as that currently employed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement in respect of the emergency alert issued on 26 May by the Department of Health warning the public not to eat shellfish caught between the Humber and Montrose, north of Dundee, due to contamination by poisonous algae; how far he assesses this situation to have been brought about or aggravated by sewage pollution, farming and chemical waste; and what steps he proposes to deal with this situation.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 8 June 1990]: Paralytic shellfish poisoning (PSP) is a naturally occurring and naturally variable algal problem believed to be dependent mainly on weather and sea conditions. The period of greatest risk is in the months of May and June, when large increases in populations of the algae concerned can occur. Since 1968 this Department has monitored weekly toxin levels in mussels from this area during the period from March to August. Results of toxin assays are passed to local environmental health authorities and the Department of Health.

On 25 May very high toxin levels were recorded and, in addition to the warning which was sent to the environmental health authorities later that day, the Department of Health issued a public warning notice on the morning of 26 May advising against the consumption of any shellfish taken from the east coast between the Humber and Montrose. In the light of the results of further testing of shellfish samples the Department of Health was on 1 June able to lift its warning in respect of crustacean shellfish other than crabs and on 7 June was able to lift the warning in relation to crabs. We are continuing to monitor the situation closely and will lift the warning on molluscan shellfish as soon as it is safe to do so.

There is no correlation between pollution and the occurrence of this algae off our north-east coast. This phenomenon occurs in many other parts of the world where the appropriate natural conditions occur such as in France, Spain, Japan and the east and west coasts of Canada. It should also be noted that, between 1814 and 1968, 40 major outbreaks of this algal bloom were recorded off the north-east coast, resulting in 146 cases of illness and about 14 deaths; 78 persons were ill as a consequence of the last major outbreak, in 1968.

Functional Foods

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what labelling requirements apply to the sale of functional foods;

(2) whether he intends to impose restrictions on the sale of functional foods.

Mr. Maclean: Food legislation already addresses the safety of all foodstuffs, their labelling and description and claims that can be made about them. We have no plans at present to make any specific rules about foods which are being described as "functional" but we shall, as is normal, watch developments and will act if the consumer requirement suggests such a need.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) of 17 May, Official Report, column 554, if he will list those interested parties to which he refers.

Mr. Curry: We shall be consulting more than 300 organisations representing trade, consumer, health and enforcement interests for their views on our proposals for legislation in this area. A full list will be placed in the Library of the House.

Eggs

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the number and (b) the value of eggs imported into the United Kingdom in each month since January 1989 to the latest date available.

Mr. Maclean: The number and value of eggs imported into the United Kingdom monthly during 1989 and up to April 1990 (inclusive) is set out in the table:

	'000 Eggs	Value £
January	14,371	454,818
February	7,553	254,033
March	7,956	275,402
April	40,073	1,387,578
May	28,172	895,365
June	25,961	861,535
July	22,794	729,146
August	35,120	1,308,199
September	58,044	2,532,210
October	38,285	1,513,155
November	74,354	3,401,470
December	53,882	2,643,422
Total	406,565	16,256,333
1990
January	37,755	1,670,107
February	34,982	1,520,792
March	66,290	3,226,961
April	54,212	2,187,086
Total	193,239	8,604,946

Exports of Live Animals

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what legal provisions the United Kingdom Government have banned the export of live animals for slaughter to Spain.

Mr. Maclean: Licences are issued under the Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981 only for exports to those countries which have properly implemented EC directives on welfare during international transport and on pre-slaughter stunning. We await assurances from the Commission that these requirements are fully in force in Spain.

Chernobyl

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county for England and Wales (a) how many sheep and (b) how many farms still have restrictions in force because of the Chernobyl explosion.

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is as follows (estimated maximum post-lambing figures):

	Holdings	Sheep
Cumbria	150	170,000
Clwyd	4	2,500
Gwynedd	407	282,500
Powys	5	15,000

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to progress a decision on the United Kingdom application to extend the less-favoured areas which was lodged with the European Community in July 1989.

Mr. Curry: We have been pursuing this point with the European Commission and we expect to be able to announce the outcome shortly.

Wylfa Power Station

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received any results from the assessment of the effects of the radioactive discharges from the nuclear power station at Wylfa in Anglesey.

Mr. Curry: The effects of radioactive discharges from the nuclear power station at Wylfa are continually being assessed by this Department's scientists on behalf of the Secretary of State for Wales. The results of environmental monitoring, together with the assessments made of doses to members of the public via both terrestrial and marine pathways, are published in reports produced by this Department, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. The doses received by the most exposed members of the public continue to be well within the internationally recommended limits.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to act on the recommendations from the Tyrrell report with regard to holding a formal study of the health of species fed offal, including pigs and poultry, and of animals such as hounds fed fallen livestock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Studies are being conducted at the central veterinary laboratory involving the parenteral and oral exposure of pigs and poultry to brain material from cattle confirmed as having BSE. An examination of hounds' brains is being planned.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the infective agent responsible for bovine spongiform encephalopathy cannot be transmitted through milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Milk has never been shown to transmit any of the spongiform encephalopathies, and studies into scrapie have not found the agent in milk. Nevertheless, studies are taking place, using milk from BSE cattle, to confirm these findings. In addition, as a precautionary measure, milk from animals suspected of having BSE is banned from human and animal consumption.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive a copy of the longer report from Dr. Tyrrell referred to in the Official Report on 21 May, column 85.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Minister has asked the Tyrrell committee to provide the report as soon as possible.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals for the payment of compensation for losses incurred by United Kingdom farmers and dealers incurred as a result of bans on imports by European Community Governments in the light of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy outbreak; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 8 June 1990]: No sir. Community market support continued throughout the period covered by the French, German and Italian import bans. It would not be possible to isolate the market impact of these bans.

Of course individuals would be able to obtain legal advice as to whether they could seek damages in the country concerned for specific effects of the disruption.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what circumstances histopathological examination is undertaken of bovines born since August 1988; and how many such examinations have been carried out.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 8 June 1990]: The brains of all animals suspected of being affected by BSE are examined by histopathology. To date, four such examinations have been conducted on bovines born since August 1988; all were negative for BSE.

Animal Feedstuffs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to end the practice of feeding chicken manure and litter to beef cattle.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so. Anyone who ensiles poultry manure or litter for use as animal feed is subject to the requirements of the Processed Animal Protein Order 1989 which inter alia requires registration with the Department and microbiological testing. Regular checks on the ensiling process are carried out by representatives of the state veterinary service.

ENERGY

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 409, (a) who estimated that 5·5 TWh of electricity could be saved, (b) whether this estimate has been published, (c) which insulation measures were included and (d) what other estimates made during the last two years on potential savings from better insulation are known to his Department.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The estimate was derived from a publication by the Building Research Establishment (BRE) entitled "Energy Use in Buildings and Carbon Dioxide Emissions"—BR 170 HMSO ISBN 085125 4365, £25. It is estimated in table 11 at page 36 that cost-effective insulation measures applied to houses in the United Kingdom would save 23·3 PJ of electricity corresponding to 6·5 TWh. The figure has been scaled down to 5·5 TWh to cover England and Wales only.

The recommended cost-effective insulation measures covered all existing houses and assumed that:

(i) 80 per cent. of all houses with cavity walls would be insulated.
(ii) Lofts with less or equal to 25mm insulation would be insulated up to 150mm.
(iii) All houses would be draughtproofed.
(iv) All hot water tanks with less than 50mm insulation would be insulated up to 80mm.
(v) All windows would be double-glazed when the existing window frames need to be replaced.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be writing to the hon. Member and will supply a list of publications, produced over the past two years, covering the potential for energy saving through better insulation of the housing stock.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of community insulation projects and the number of participant workers and trainees at end-year in 1987, 1988 and 1989 and at the latest available date for each region, Wales, Scotland and Great Britain as a whole.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The figures requested in respect of 1987 and 1989 are as follows:

Number of draughtproofing jobs completed

	1987	1989
East Midlands	10,236	10,245
London	7,839	1,353
North East	13,867	9,983
North West	16,125	22,230
Scotland	30,349	37,154
South East	6,728	4,942
South West	9,489	4,368
Wales	15,017	13,371
West Midlands	11,957	12,051
Yorkshire and Humberside	17,100	15,186
Total	138,707	130,883

Neighbourhood Energy Action advises that equivalent information in respect of 1988 is not available, and that reliable information in respect of early months of 1990 for comparison with the same periods in previous years is not yet available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of draughtproofing jobs completed so far in the current year and completed in the equivalent periods of 1987, 1988 and 1989 for each region, Wales, Scotland and Great Britain as a whole; and what were the full-year figures for 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Available information in respect of the last three complete years is as follows:

Number of operating projects at period end

	1987	1988	1989
East Midlands	36	25	28
London	34	8	14
North East	25	17	18
North West	48	41	45
Scotland	66	30	77
South East	47	21	23
South West	34	15	16
Wales	47	27	36
West Midlands	50	22	26
Yorkshire and Humberside	34	22	24
Total	421	228	307

Number of participating workers/trainees at period end

	1987	1989
East Midlands	505	271
London	617	31
North East	493	253
North West	1,051	672
Scotland	978	780
South East	566	116
South West	534	190
Wales	1,047	335
West Midlands	775	314
Yorkshire and Humberside	679	353
Total	7,245	3,315

Neighbourhood Energy Action advises that information on numbers of participating workers/trainees at end 1988 is not available, and that reliable information in respect of the early months of 1990 for comparison with the same period in previous years is not yet available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the spending on the community insulation programme in each year from 1983-84 and including estimated spending in 1989-90 for (a) the London borough of Camden and (b) the London borough of Islington;

(2) what was the number of community insulation projects and the number of participant workers and trainees at end-year 1987, 1988 and 1989 and at the latest available date for (a) the London borough of Camden and (b) the London borough of Islington.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are no community insulation projects currently operating in the London boroughs of Camden and Islington. Detailed information on projects under the community programme which served those areas prior to 1988 is not available.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the radioactive inventory, in terms of alpha and gamma/beta components, together with a listing of the principal fission products and acticides and the properties thereof, contained within a single vitrified high-level waste container for liquid wastes arising from the reprocessing of magnesium oxide uranium alloy irradiated fuel at 4 to 5 GWeday/tonne uranium burn-up for irradiated oxide fuel of advanced gas-cooled reactor 18 and 24 GWeday/tonne uranium burn-up and light water reactor fuel at 33 GWeday/tonne uranium burn-up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The detailed radioactive inventory for vitrified high-level waste containers is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. This inventory has to be taken into account in preparing the safety case for the on-site storage of these canisters, which has to be agreed by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate before the plant can be operated.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements he is now making to allow independent scientists to scrutinise "An Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them".

Mr. Peter Morrison: This document referred to was widely available within the intergovernmental panel on climate change, which is an open forum, from November 1989, and was published as energy paper 58 in January 1990. It was, and remains, open to any scrutiny.

DEFENCE

Iraq (Missiles)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a table of the missiles Iraq is known to possess, together with their ranges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The armed forces of Iraq deploy the following ballistic missiles:

Scud B—300 km range
Al Hussein—650 km range

Iraq also possesses a variety of anti-tank guided weapons—ranges between 0·5 km and 4 km; air-to-surface missiles—ranges between 10 km and 400 km; surface-to-air missiles—ranges between 3 km and 50 km; and air-to-air missiles—ranges between 3 km and 30 km.

HMS Warspite

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 94, if he will make a statement on what details he may release on the condition of HMS Warspite with respect to national security considerations, and if he will list (a) the date of entry into dock of HMS Warspite for refit, (b) the date, within the nearest four weeks, on which the Warspite was expected to finish her refit and (c) which British nuclear-powered submarines have so far been inspected following the report of defects in British nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Warspite's refit began in 1988 with a planned completion date towards the end of 1990. This date is currently under review. With regard to the nuclear submarine inspection programme I have nothing further to add to the reply given to the hon. Member on 22 May 1990 at column 94.

Devonshire Dock

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has ordered an inquiry into breaches of security by persons seeking access to the Devonshire dock, Barrow-in-Furness, on the advice of Messrs. Nicholas Labour Hire of Preston.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No such breaches of security at the Devonshire dock hall have been reported.

Low Flying

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what regulations are in force concerning the height to be maintained by military aircraft crossing the coast at low level in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: Pilots of military aircraft are advised to cross coastlines, as a general rule, at a minimum height of 500 ft above ground or sea level in order to reduce the risk of birdstrike.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the fitting of ground proximity warning systems to RAF aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence is sponsoring a trials programme to develop a ground proximity warning system. No decision about whether the equipment will be fitted to RAF aircraft will be made until the results of the trials are available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what height the specified weather minima for military aircraft operating in the United Kingdom low-flying system require pilots to remain vertically clear of cloud during low-level flight.

Mr. Neubert: When operating in the United Kingdom low-flying system, military pilots are required to remain a minimum of 500 ft vertically clear of cloud at indicated airspeeds in excess of 140 knots.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what actions have been taken to change or re-emphasise aspects of RAF aircrew training by syllabuses for low flying in the light of the findings of the board of inquiry into the accident to a Jaguar at St. Abb's Head on 13 April 1989.

Mr. Neubert: None. As no deficiencies in the RAF's present low-level training syllabuses were revealed during the board of inquiry's investigation into this accident, no further action was considered necessary.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if a survey has been conducted of the extent to which reheat is used by aircraft operating in the United Kingdom low-flying system; and what plans he has to carry out such a survey in future.

Mr. Neubert: Aircraft are instructed to use reheat as little as possible when flying overland at low level and use would be unusual unless required for flight safety reasons. This is confirmed by RAF police surveys which give no indication that reheat is regularly used in the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the changes made since 1984 in his Department's policy on exposure to aircraft noise levels in excess of 125 dB (A); and if he will list all Ministry of Defence commissioned research on the health effects of aircraft noise carried out since 1983 (a) within his Department, (b) by other Government Departments and (c) by non-governmental scientists upon which such changes in policy were based.

Mr. Neubert: There have been no changes since 1984 in MOD policy on exposure to aircraft noise levels in excess of 125 dB (A).

No Ministry of Defence commissioned research into the health effects of aircraft noise has been carried out since 1983 within the Department or by another Government Department but, as I announced on 17 May at columns 517-18, a study to review available information is in progress.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review his policy of not indicating which of Her Majesty's ships are carrying nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the invariable practice of successive British Governments neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons in any particular ship at any particular time. There are no plans to change this policy.

RAF Recruitment

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he anticipates any reduction in the annual officer recruitment targets for the RAF following the recent improvements in east-west relations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is too early to say whether there will be a reduction in RAF officer recruitment, but the changing international situation gives us hope that we shall be able to maintain our security and sustain our responsibilities overseas with lower force levels and less cost.

RAF Biggin Hill

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current estimates for the building of the additional accommodation required at RAF Cranwell following the closure of the officer and aircrew selection centre at RAF Biggin Hill.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated cost of the new facilities required at RAF Cranwell amounts to some £7·5 million at current prices. This figure now allows for VAT and current levels of inflation in the construction industry.

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current estimates for the likely level of capital receipts from the disposal of the site at present occupied by RAF Biggin Hill.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Estimates of expected receipts are commercially confidential, but we expect income from disposals at Biggin Hill to more than cover the cost of reproviding facilities for the officer and aircrew selection centre at RAF Cranwell.

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the anticipated demand for officers' married quarters in the Greater London area over the next five years; and whether accommodation is to be provided at RAF Biggin Hill to meet this demand.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Present plans envisage that the requirement for officers' married quarters in the Greater London area will, over the medium to long term, be reduced. It is our intention to dispose of all the officers' married quarters at RAF Biggin Hill when the station closes. Present plans anticipate that the various elements of the Biggin Hill site will become available for disposal towards the end of 1992, excluding the memorial chapel enclave which will be retained.

Salerno Incident, 1943

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received in the last 12 months concerning the incident at Salerno on 20 September 1943 which resulted in the court martial of 91 soldiers of the 51 Highland Division and 50 Northumbrian Division; and if he proposes to take the steps necessary to obtain a free pardon for them.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. and learned Member.

Radar

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on developments in the detection by radar of missile attacks.

Mr. Alan Clark: Steady progress has been made in developing the ability of radar to detect missile attacks. Work continues on a number of fronts.

Service Accommodation

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current backlog of unavoidable repairs to service accommodation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The backlog of maintenance for essential and unavoidable repairs to service accommodation at 1 April 1990 was estimated at £36 million.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the influence of the quality of rented service accommodation on the rate of premature voluntary release.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No single factor influences personnel to leave the services prematurely and the results of attitude surveys conducted among service personnel indicate that the quality of service accommodation is not a major factor in the decision to leave.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received from service personnel regarding the quality of service accommodation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No records are kept centrally of representations on behalf of service personnel regarding the quality of service accommodation, but we are aware of a small number of such representations over the last 12 months.

Military Training

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what examination there has been of the options for changing the current requirements for military training in (a) the British Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy;

(2) what plans there are to make adjustments to training programmes for the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future requirements and organisation for training are kept under review.

Nuclear Accident, Greenwich

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans or studies have been made or commissioned by his Department to assess the measures that would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 8 June, Official Report, column 724.

Standing Military Forces

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to alter the readiness and availability of British standing military forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The last ministerial session of the defence planning committee on 22 and 23 May decided to take steps to lower the readiness and availability of some of the alliance's standing forces. A copy of the communiqué is in the Library of the House. Work is in hand on the implications for British forces.

Retraining

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what retraining opportunities are offered to those personnel of his Department whose services are no longer required.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pre-release training to help in the preparation for civilian life is available to eligible personnel who are about to leave the services. Eligibility for this training is determined primarily by length of service and the circumstances of discharge. All civilian staff are given the opportunity of pre-retirement training, but no specific retraining is provided by the Department.

NATO Military Review

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are for British participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation review of military strategy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom will participate fully in the review of the alliance's military strategy to which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State agreed at last month's ministerial meeting of the defence planning committee. Ministers also agreed that this review would be based on the continuing validity of the principles of alliance security set out in the comprehensive concept of arms control and disarmament.

Defence Review

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications he has had with the defence industry regarding the economic and industrial consequences of the options for change study.

Mr. Alan Clark: The work on options for change is addressing policy issues in the light of changing international circumstances. As such, it has yet to identify the full consequences of possible changes for the equipment programme.

Conventional Forces in Europe

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that no relevant equipment be moved out of the area of application of the proposed treaty on conventional forces in Europe before such a treaty comes into effect in order to (a) deploy the equipment elsewhere or (b) sell the equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom attaches great importance to the NATO proposal that reductions of equipment holdings during the implementation of the conventional forces in Europe treaty should be by means of destruction. Before the treaty comes into effect, there will obviously be no legal bar to the transfer or sale of equipment outside the area of application. However, any large-scale activity of this sort would be contrary to the spirit in which we entered into the negotiations, and the United Kingdom would avoid such activities itself and discourage them on the part of others.

HEALTH

Chiropractic Treatment

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce state recognition of registered members of the chiropractic profession and the availability of chiropractic treatment under the national health service in the light of the recent report of the Medical Research Council of the British Medical Association.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statutory regulation of the chiropractic profession is a matter for the profession itself to pursue. All medical treatment provided under the national health service must, by law, be given or presented by a registered medical practitioner. There are no plans to change that long-established principle.

Mortality Rates

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of (a) perinatal mortality and (b) neonatal mortality in each regional health authority area for England in each of the years 1986 to 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is shown in the tables.

Dentists

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing for each of the last three years the gross annual earnings of national health service dentists in brackets of £10,000 up to £200,000 and over £200,000; and what was the highest gross earnings figure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table shows the gross annual earnings of dentists in England who are in contract with a family practitioner committee. Similar information for dentists working in the hospital and community health service is not available.

NHS Trusts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which national health service hospitals or other units have submitted draft business plans and draft applications for national health service trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Draft applications have been submitted in confidence to the Department but no draft business plans have been received to date. Until Parliament approves the necessary legislation, formal applications from those units wishing to pursue trust status cannot be submitted. When the legislation has been passed, applications will be made available by the regions concerned to interested parties locally during the period of public consultation.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish all advice of his Department to any national health service hospital or other unit which has expressed an interest in self-governing status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to publish a compendium of guidance on national health service trusts in the autumn, which will update and bring together advice on the establishment and operation of NHS trusts which has been provided by the Department.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish all draft business plans and draft applications for national health service trust status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All applications for NHS trust status will be publicly available documents. However, the supporting financial statements to be submitted by applicants for NHS trust status will include detailed information on their financial plans which it would not be appropriate to make publicly available.

Hospitals (Resource Management)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the criterion for selecting hospitals for inclusion in the resource management scheme;

(2) whether the Normanton and Castleford district hospital in the Pontefract district health authority area can be included in the resource management scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish the rules and regulations governing hospitals being included in a resource management scheme.

Mr. Dorrell: The criteria for including a hospital in the resource management extension programme are set out in the Government's White Paper "Working for Patients".

Since March 1989 a total of 14 of the larger acute hospitals in the Yorkshire regional health authority have been selected to join the programme. The Normanton and Castleford district hospital is not a large acute hospital and therefore does not meet the criteria for selection.

District Health Authorities

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals there are to pay members to sit on district health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval, the National Health Service and Community Care Bill makes provision for non-officer members of district health authorities to receive remuneration as determined by the Secretary of State with the approval of the Treasury.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals there are for the future membership composition of district health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, it is proposed that the new style district health authorities shall comprise of a chairman, appointed by the Secretary of State, five non-officer members, appointed by the relevant regional health authority, and up to five officer members who must include the chief officer and the chief finance officer. "Teaching DHAs" will have to include a non-officer member from a university with a medical or dental school.

Complaints Procedures

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to monitor and assess the operational procedure of district health authorities' complaints systems and publish their findings.

Mr. Dorrell: Directions on hospital complaints procedures made under section 17 of the National Health Service Act 1977 and issued to health authorities in June 1988, included a requirement for health authorities to monitor the arrangements made for dealing with complaints in the hospitals for which they are responsible. The directions also require quarterly reports to be made for use by the health authority to monitor progress on the procedure for dealing with complaints, for considering trends in complaints and for taking remedial action on complaints as appropriate. There are no plans to amend these arrangements.

Food Safety

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements the Government intend to introduce to strengthen microbiological surveillance of food as recommended in part I of the report of the committee on the microbiological safety of food.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have decided to establish a national microbiological food surveillance and assessment system. This will be based on a new, independent advisory committee on the microbiological safety of food and a new steering group on the microbiological safety of food. These arrangements will complement those which already exist for labelling, composition and chemical safety of food, which are within the remit of the present food advisory committee and steering group on food surveillance.

The new steering group will manage surveillance and research and will present policy conclusions to Ministers. It will consist both of officials and of experts from outside Government. The advisory committee will bring outside expertise to bear on the interpretation of the results of surveillance and on the policy formation process. The committee will have an entirely independent membership and chairman, who will be chosen for their expertise and invited from relevant backgrounds, including consumer interests.

These arrangements will give effect to the recommendation of the present committee on the microbiological safety of food that the Government should set up a system of microbiological surveillance and assessment. This committee, under the chairmanship of Sir Mark Richmond, has been invited to complete its work by the end of July. The Government plan to establish the new advisory committee in the autumn. The new steering group will be established as soon as possible before then as it can usefully begin preparatory work before the advisory committee first meets.

The membership of the new advisory committee and steering group, and their formal terms of reference, will be announced as soon as possible. The food advisory committee and the steering group on food surveillance will continue to fulfil their present functions but some updating of their terms of reference also is envisaged, to underline the complementary roles of this committee and the new advisory committee.

Mental Illness

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to strengthen support within the community for sufferers of severe anxiety-related conditions, and in particular phobias and obsessional or compulsive disorders.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have set out their proposals to strengthen support within the community for all sufferers of mental illness, including severe anxiety-related conditions, in the White Paper "Caring for People". Key elements will be the introduction of the care programme approach, and the specific grant to help increase the social care available for people with a mental illness, which we hope to introduce from April 1991. We are currently consulting with interested bodies on both these developments.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much is currently being spent to fund community-based initiatives offering support and education to families and sufferers of phobias and obsessional or compulsive disorders in the United Kingdom as a whole and by regional health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures he has as to how many people in the United Kingdom currently suffer from severe phobias and obsessional or compulsive disorders, by sex, age, regional health authority and ethnic origin; and what is his estimate of the cost to the national health service.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally. Most national health service provision for the treatment of these disorders is provided by general practitioners and out-patient clinics for which figures are not collected centrally.

The latest available information on admissions to national health service mental illness hospitals in England during 1986 for treatment of these conditions is set out in the table. Information on admissions to mental illness hospitals in each regional health authority in England for treatment of some broad diagnosis groups is given in table A6 of "Mental Health Statistics for England 1986: Booklet 7", a copy of which is in the Library. Severe phobias and obsessional or compulsive disorders are part of the neurotic disorders group, which accounted for around 8 per cent. of all admissions. No information is available on the hospital cost of treating the conditions.

NHS Salaries

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he estimates would be added to the national health service wage bill if all national health service employees were paid at least two thirds of the national average wage in 1990-91.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available.

Cook-chill Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which regional health authorities have adopted or intend to adopt a regional catering policy based on cook-chill.

Mr. Dorrell: None. It is a matter for health authorities to use the catering system that they consider meets their requirements of quality and resources available, but we would expect health authorities to consider cook-chill as one of the alternatives.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list drugs for cancer treatment which have been through trials and been passed but which are not available on national health service prescriptions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: All drugs licensed for use in the treatment of cancer are available for prescription under the NHS. However, some hospitals have drawn up formularies of preferred treatments for many conditions which the doctors involved would usually prescribe.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the drug ondansetron to be available on a national health service prescription.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ondansetron has been launched on to the market by its manufacturer. The drug is now therefore available for prescription by doctors throughout the national health service for the treatment of nausea and vomiting in patients undergoing chemotherapy and/or radiotherapy for cancer.

Diabetes and Glaucoma

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people he estimates were suffering from diabetes and glaucoma in (a) England, (b) each county in England during 1988-89 and 1989-90, respectively.

Mr. Dorrell: Precise information is not collected centrally. However, it has been estimated that there are about 1 million diabetics in the United Kingdom of whom about 200,000 inject insulin. The International Glaucoma Association estimates that glaucoma of some type is found in about 2 per cent. of the population over age 40.

NHS Pay Bargaining

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the changes in his responsibilities in relation to national or local pay bargaining arising from the changes in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill;

(2) what responsibilities he has with regard to decisions made by the head of personnel in the national health service in relation to the pay bargaining structure within the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Bill provides for NHS trusts to have freedom to determine the pay and conditions of their staff. No other decisions have been taken about pay determination machinery.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has made any assessment of the pound sterling's subsequent movement in the bands had the pound sterling entered the exchange rate mechanism at the exchange rate prevailing on 1 January 1988, 1 January 1989 and 1 January 1990.

Mr. Major: No.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in tabular form the main areas of Government spending, expressed as a percentage.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The most recent detailed summary information about Government expenditure was published in chapter 21 of the 1990 public expenditure White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans, 1990-91 to 1992-93". Table 21.2.12 of this publication gives a percentage distribution of general Government expenditure on services by function.

Inflation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the inflation rate average in the calendar years 1978 and 1980.

Mr. Ryder: The average rate of increase in the retail prices index, compared with 12 months earlier, was 8·3 per cent. for 1978 and 7·8 per cent. for 1989.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of radioactive material, during the last five years, that has been checked by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise that has been (a) imported and (b) exported through the ports of (i) Barrow, (ii) Dover, (iii) Felixstowe, (iv) Harwich, (v) Hull, Immingham, (vi) Liverpool, (vii) Portsmouth, (viii) Southampton and (ix) Workington.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that the information is not readily available and could be answered only at the cost of a disproportionate amount of time and effort.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those items of sporting equipment which are exempt from value added tax.

Mr. Ryder: All sporting equipment bears VAT at the standard rate. However sporting apparel falling within the description "designed as clothing or footwear for young children and not suitable for older persons" may be zero-rated.

Aggregate Taxable Income

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish his latest estimates of the aggregate taxable income for each (a) county, (b) former metropolitan county, (c) the Greater London area, (d) metropolitan district and (e) London borough area.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 5 June 1990]: I regret that estimates below regional level are not presently available. As explained in "Inland Revenue Statistics, 1989" estimates for counties have been discontinued owing to the emergence of problems in attributing addresses containing a shire county name which properly fall within a metropolitan county. Further investigation, which is continuing, has cast further doubt on the reliability of information at this level of detail. The problems also affect the reliability of the information given to the hon. Member on 4 April 1989, Official Report, columns 9-10. Regional estimates for 1987-88, the latest available year, are as follows.

Region	Taxable income £ million
Northern	6,490
Yorkshire and Humberside	11,500
North West	15,000
East Midlands	8,880
West Midlands	12,600
East Anglia	5,460
South Eastern	60,000
South Western	11,900
Wales	5,350
Scotland	11,800
Northern Ireland	2,800

Community Charge

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the rates of personal income tax could need to be increased if (a) the whole of the community charge were transferred to income tax and (b) the whole of the community charge less expenditure on social services and housing were transferred to income tax.

Mr. Major [holding answer 6 June 1990]: Local authorities in Great Britain are forecast to raise £11·2 billion in community charge income. If the whole of this were to be raised from income tax, this would be equivalent to an increase of around 7½p in the basic rate of income tax.

Local authorities' expenditure on social services and housing, excluding the housing revenue account, is budgeted to be around £5·3 billion. If the whole of the community charge income less this expenditure were to be raised from income tax, this would be equivalent to an increase of around 4p in the basic rate.

Women

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimated figures for the number of women in Britain, who have no regular income of their own from employment, investment or state benefits, excluding child benefit.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Estimates of total numbers of such women are not available. However, results of the 1988 family expenditure survey indicate that less than 10 per cent. of women (aged over 16 and not in full-time education) who live in private households in Great Britain had no regular income.

THE ARTS

Natural History Museum

85. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the implications for scientific research of the proposed cuts in services and staff at the natural history museum.

86. Miss Hoey: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the implications for scientific research of the proposed cuts in services and staff at the natural history museum.

Mr. Luce: I have received many representations about the natural history museum's restructuring proposals, including some 40 letters from hon. Members. I understand that the museum's director has invited leading scientists and researchers to a special seminar on 15 June, to present the museum's plans to them in detail and to give an opportunity for discussion.

TRANSPORT

Road Accidents

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new information he has on regional road accident statistics.

Mr. Atkins: I have today published a report "Road Accident Statistics English Regions". I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

This information will be of particular value to local authorities in setting their own casualty reduction targets and in developing local road safety plans. It will also enable them to assess their own local performance against that of other areas.

Concessionary Fares, London

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of concessionary fare schemes in London.

Mr. Freeman: The cost of concessionary travel in London is borne by the London boroughs. It must be for them to decide what form of concessionary travel scheme they want. However, if the boroughs cannot agree amongst themselves the terms of such a scheme, the statutory reserve free travel scheme in sections 51 and 52 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984 applies.

Roads, Essex

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to increase the grants available to Essex county council for the building of new roads and bypasses in the next five financial years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Transport supplementary grant of more than £6·6 million will be paid to Essex county council in the current financial year towards expenditure on new roads and bypasses. Grant support will continue to be provided in future years to enable major projects currently under construction to be completed. All local highway authorities have been invited to bid for grant for 1991-92 and beyond for new schemes. We shall be studying the relative merits of all the bids and announcing our decisions later in the year.

Oil Tankers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the review of tanker traffic in the deep water route west of the Hebrides and in the Minch; and if he intends to make a statement on this subject in the near future.

Mr. McLoughlin: I shall make a statement and put a copy of the review report in the Library as soon as our detailed consideration of the findings is complete.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those oil pollution incidents reported to his officials by HM coastguard since 1 January 1989, giving in each case details of what follow-up investigations were made, whether a prosecution resulted and what the results of any prosecution were.

Mr. McLoughlin: Between 1 January 1989 and 1 June 1990, a total of 214 reports of possible oil pollution were passed on by HM coastguard to the marine pollution control unit.

Only 79 of those reports named a ship which might or might not have been the possible source of the pollution. After port state inspections in the United Kingdom or elsewhere, five cases were referred to the flag states of the vessels concerned to investigate further a possible illegal operational discharge of oil; one of these has resulted in a prosecution and a fine of £675 by the Government of the Republic of Cyprus.

Of the other 74 cases, three are still being investigated by the MPCU. Follow-up action in the remaining 71 has now been discontinued because either (a) after port state inspection where appropriate, there was insufficient evidence of a possible illegal discharge to justify further action; or (b) the pollution was not an illegal discharge, for example, it resulted from the sinking of a vessel or from damage to a ship or its equipment.

Coaches

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the European Commission proposals to limit the speed of passenger coaches and the policy of Her Majesty's Government in respect of such proposals.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 June 1990]: The Government have for many years attached high importance to securing safe coach travel. The Commission's proposed uniform technical standard for speed limiters, which we support, draws heavily on the British standard operative since 1987. All new coaches used in Britain have to be fitted with speed limiters and I am glad to say that the Bus and Coach Council is urging its members to retrofit older vehicles well before the deadline we have set of next April.

Exhaust Emissions

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers are available to the police and local authorities to curb excessive exhaust emissions from buses, lorries and cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 June 1990]: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 20 December last year to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) at column 279.

Since then, we have further tightened up emission controls through the regulations laid before the House on 5 June. These require vehicle users to keep the engine in tune and any emission control equipment, such as a catalyst, in good working order. Properly tuned engines not only benefit the community at large by cutting emissions but save fuel and thus cut running costs.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail British aid to Sri Lanka in the current financial year, and for each of the following three years, giving dates of announcement of projects; if he will place copies of all associated press releases in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: British aid disbursements to Sri Lanka in the current financial year are expected to amount to around £12 million on a number of on-going activities. These include reconstruction aid, following the civil disturbances, for roads, schools and the Jaffna hospital as well as support for community development projects, the power, natural resources and education sectors.

It is not possible at this stage to indicate in detail what further projects will be supported from the aid programme in the next three years or when they will be announced. A number of possibilities are currently being appraised for possible eventual agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Sri Lanka. These include forestry and road rehabilitation.

Copies of all press releases from the ODA are placed in the House of Commons Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Employment

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a list of sponsors of the action for community employment scheme run by the new Training and Employment Agency for Northern Ireland with their addresses, number of ACE trainees allocated and areas of work covered.

Mr. Needham: In view of the large amount of material to be collated, I will write to the hon. Member and place copies of the information in the Library.

Belfast Action Teams

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a list of the names and addresses of groups which have received funding from the Belfast action teams since they were first set up and the corresponding amount given to each such group.

Mr. Needham: In view of the large amount of material to be collated, I will write to the hon. Member and place copies of the information in the Library.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advisory and consultative machinery will be established to represent public and consumer interests on the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: It is intended, subject to the necessary legislation being made, that there should be four area councils, or health and social services councils as it is proposed they be known, one relating to each health and social services board. Councils will be able to set up sub-committees which may include co-opted members. Each council will appoint its own chairman and will operate within a budget set annually by the Department of Health and Social Services.

The duties of a council will include keeping under review the operation of health and social services in its area, making recommendations for improving the services of the relevant board, and commenting on the board's plan, particularly in relation to substantial developments or variations in the provision of services.

The council which relates to the Eastern board will have 30 members, while those relating to the other three boards will have 24. Forty per cent. of the membership of each council will be reserved for district councillors. Each district council will have the right to nominate one member. Membership will also include individuals appointed by the Department of Health and Social Services after consultation with voluntary and community organisations and other interested bodies.

I am confident that the new arrangements will give the public and consumers a strong voice in the provision and development of the health and personal social services.

ENVIRONMENT

Lakes (Acidity)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many lakes in England suffer from acidity problems; if he will list them and give some measure of how acidic they are; and if he will make a statement on what the Government are doing about the problem.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government will continue to sponsor research totalling over £3 million over the next three years identifying susceptible lakes and ecosystems. Comprehensive monitoring networks are in place measuring acid deposition and lake chemistry, acidity and ecology in the most sensitive lakes and streams. However, natural lake acidity varies greatly with catchment geology and ecology in addition to the undoubted effect of acid rain. Consequently, the collection of data on the scale requested is not currently feasible.

Data on the effects of acid rain are published in Department of the Environment scientific review group and other reports, "Acidity in United Kingdom Fresh Waters"—United Kingdom acid waters review group second report, "Acid Deposition in the United Kingdom" —United Kingdom review group on acid rain second report and "Lake Acidification in the United Kingdom" —paleoecology research unit, University college London. Monitoring data have also been published in the first report of the United Kingdom acid waters monitoring network. Copies of all these publications are in the Library of the House.

The United Kingdom has agreed directives with our European partners which will reduce acid emissions significantly. Using 1980 as a baseline, the United Kingdom is committed to reducing emissions of SO_2 by 60 per cent. by 1993 and NOx by 30 per cent. by 1998 from existing large combustion plants. A directive requiring the fitting of catelytic convertors to most new cars before 1993 will reduce emissions of NO_2 by up to 90 per cent., and the United Kingdom is pressing for the strictest possible emission standards to be applied to diesel engines.

Red Squirrels

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environent what action his Department is taking to protect Britain's remaining red squirrels; what studies his Department is currently funding in this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The red squirrel is fully protected through its listing on schedule 5 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. I am advised that the NCC is considering mounting local surveys of red squirrels. The Forestry Commission carries out an annual survey of its own land holdings on a national basis for the presence of red and grey squirrels.

Common Land

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 27 March, Official Report, column 116, to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), and 11 May, Official Report, column 244, whether he will now announce the Government's intentions on common land legislation; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for delay in making this announcement.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that my right hon. Friend has not yet been able to make the announcement referred to in the answers given on 27 March and 11 May. This has been due to the complexity of the issues involved and the need to consider the implications of the legal judgment given last month in the Hazeley heath case, and further representations received.

Environmental Protection

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made during the Republic of Ireland presidency of the European Community with regard to the European draft directive on the protection of habitats, flora and fauna; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: At the Environment Council on 7 June, I expressed regret at the lack of progress in negotiating a worthwhile European Community directive on the protection of habitats and flora and fauna, but acknowledged that the Irish presidency was absolved of blame for this. On funding for assisting member states to implement the directive, some progress has been made with the publication of a draft regulation on action by the Community relating to nature conservation (ACNAT).

Otters, East Anglia

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of otters in East Anglia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that there is no definitive record of numbers of otters in East Anglia. Since 1986, reports of sightings suggest an improving population in the west of the region while in the east of the region releases of captive-bred otters have strengthened the population.

Air Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the relative effectiveness of large and small carbon canisters in reducing air pollution from volatile organic compounds from motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The means of controlling petrol evaporation from cars and its effects are studied within the Department's air pollution research programme. The "smaller" carbon canisters, which control emissions from cars in use, offer further reduction of secondary air pollutants like ozone beyond the major improvement expected from agreed new EC exhaust emission controls. The effectiveness of "larger" canisters, which additionally absorb emissions during refuelling, is still being evaluated in relation to the overall evaporative emissions that occur between production and delivery. Results from the research programme have been made available to the Commission of the European Communities' expert groups and we are awaiting their proposals.

Waste Paper

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the factors underlying the drop in price for used newspapers; whether he has any plans to assist local authority and charity waste paper collection systems to be maintained during the present difficulties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The main factor causing the drop in price of certain grades of waste paper appears to have been a simple matter of supply and demand: collection of waste paper by volunteers and the trade has increased more quickly than production capacity capable of using waste paper as a feedstock. There is no evidence of any substantial level of imports of waste paper. Government intervention to maintain the price of waste paper through subsidising collection costs or other means could be ineffective or damaging since paper is an internationally traded commodity and users could switch to imported supplies and there are therefore no plans to intervene. The priority must be to encourage the market for all types of recycled paper and expand industrial capacity to process waste paper. In that context I am delighted to note that Kimberley-Clarke recently announced the construction of a £37 million plant for the manufacture of tissues in Flint. My Department and the Department of Trade and Industry are specifically examining the waste paper market to assess the economic and environmental benefits of waste paper recycling, the means of collecting waste paper, what new uses for waste paper might be promoted and how demand for recycled paper might be stimulated. Government Departments are also considering their own use of paper with a view to increasing the use of recycled products wherever feasible and economic.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take urgent steps to amend the arrangements relating to the standard community charge in cases where this charge is such as to equal or to approach either the value of the property itself or the value of the period of occupancy or ownership involved.

Mr. Chope: Charging authorities may set a standard charge of 0, ¼, 1, 1¼ or 2 times the personal community charge for their area. In addition to the classes of property which we have prescribed and in respect of which no charge or a lower charge than the maximum is payable, authorities may specify their own classes by reference to one of the factors set out in the legislation. These factors include the use to which properties are put or are intended to be put; the period for which they have been unoccupied; or the personal circumstances but not the financial circumstances of the individual who is subject to the standard charge. They do not, however, allow for authorities to vary the amount of the standard charge by making reference to the value of a property, which would mean the return of rating or the creation of a capital value system.

One World Week

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department made any contribution to the BBC television's One World week of specialist programmes on the environment.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Department co-operated with briefing and offered participation, but the offers were not taken up.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money he estimates to have been saved by compulsory competitive tendering in areas for which his Department has responsibility in each of the last five years.

Mr. Chris Patten: Savings from competitive tendering in my Department, including the Property Services Agency, over the past five years were:

	£ million
1985-86	14·00
1986-87	27·25
1987-88	30·72
1988-89	23·41
1989-90	32·23

Radioactive Sediment

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce precautions to reduce the harmful effects of radioactive sediment deposited on the shores of the British coastline.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food carry out an extensive programme of monitoring of the marine and coastal environment, including the collection of samples of sediment. The results, which are published annually, show that doses to members of the public resulting from the discharge of liquid radioactive waste are well within accepted limits. There is no need for any special precautions to be taken.

Environment Council

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 7 and 8 June.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that the EEC habitats directive is discussed at the Environment Council on 7 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

The Council agreed a directive amending the 1975 framework directive—75/442—on waste. The new directive calls on member states to encourage clean technologies, waste minimisation and recovery methods. It also strengthens existing requirements concerning the licensing of waste disposal installations and the production of waste management plans. I particularly welcomed a new requirement for all member states to establish adequate networks of waste disposal installations so as to reduce the currently unacceptable level of transfrontier movements of waste.

The Council agreed a directive on batteries and accumulators containing certain dangerous substances—mercury, cadmium and lead. The directive will encourage the recycling or controlled disposal of spent batteries. It will also require batteries, and in some cases the appliances into which they are built, to be labelled to indicate recyclability and heavy metal content, and to facilitate their separate collection. Certain batteries containing more than a specified amount of mercury will be banned from sale from 1 January 1993.

Agreement was also reached on a directive to limit inputs of four dangerous substances to the aquatic environment. The directive sets limit values and quality objectives for significant discharges of trichlorobenzene 1, 2-dichloroethane, trichloroethylene and perchloroethylene. Small discharges of these substances will be controlled through national programmes. These measures will apply from 1 January 1993.

The Council agreed the final negotiating position of the Community for the second meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, to be held in London later this month. The Community, and the United Kingdom, will press for early and substantial reductions in CFCs, and their elimination before the year 2000, along with strong controls on halons, carbon tetrachloride and methyl chloroform. The Council also confirmed that assistance to developing countries, to meet their incremental costs in complying with a strengthened protocol, should be covered by additional funding. We are confident that with this position the Community will be able to play a key role in the finalisation at the London meeting of a strengthened protocol which many more countries will be able to join.

There was a short, but wide-ranging discussion of climate change. The European Commission was urged to bring forward its work on specific measures which might be taken at Community level to control greenhouse gas emissions, so that the issue could be considered again at the October meeting of the Council, before the second world climate conference. The United Kingdom urged other member states to draw up their own strategies for the control of greenhouse gas emissions in good time for that conference, so that they would be in a position to commit themselves to sensible precautionary steps aimed at ensuring that climate change problems do not get any worse in the period between now and 2005, by when many of the remaining scientific uncertainties should have been resolved.

Ministers endorsed the urgent need for a directive setting stringent new standards for motor vehicle emissions and regretted the fact that the absence of the European Parliament's opinion on the current proposal prevented immediate agreement. The Council instructed the presidency to write to the Parliament seeking its opinion as a matter of urgency so that the measure might be agreed at the next Council meeting. The United Kingdom also stressed the need for urgent action to limit emissions from diesel engines in heavy vehicles, and regretted that the new Commission proposals in this area fell short of the stringent "US 1994" standard.

The Council also held brief discussions on proposals for establishing a regulatory committee to review existing directives on water protection, and on the scope of the proposed directive on the protection of water from pollution by nitrate.

The Commission gave progress reports on the preparation of a Community environmental labelling scheme, on discussions on a recent proposal concerning the treatment of municipal waste water, and on the proposed directive on the protection of natural and semi-natural habitats. On the latter the United Kingdom expressed concern at the lack of recent progress and pledged our assistance in helping to resolve outstanding issues.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the matters discussed at the meeting of Environment Ministers of the European Community on 7 June.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack).

Specialist Inspectors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on (a) the availability, (b) the qualifications required and (c) the cost of arrangements which he is making for an expanded corps of specialist inspectors to enforce new controls on gene release and related matters, envisaged in the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Discussions are being held with the Health and Safety Executive on an agency agreement whereby its inspectors would enforce the provisions in part VI of the Environmental Protection Bill. If such an agency agreement is reached, then inspectors with appropriate qualifications and experience will be recruited and given training by the executive and guidance by my Department. The newly appointed inspectors would form a team with existing Health and Safety Executive inspectors responsible for the enforcement of human health and safety controls over genetically manipulated organisms. There would thus be a unified system of enforcement.

The costs of such an agency agreement cannot be determined accurately at present but are likely to be of the order of £100,000 per annum at current prices.

Westminster Abbey

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants have been given to Westminster abbey to improve security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Security at Westminster abbey is not a matter for my right hon. Friend.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of family credit claimants in the south-west by each Department of Social Security area for the latest period, and the percentage change from the respective figure of 12 months ago.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table:

Social Security local offices in the South West.

	Number of families[1]	Percentage change[2]
Barnstaple	762	+3·8
Bath	598	−8·7

[1] Number of families in receipt of family credit on 1 June 1990 who at the time their award was made were living in the areas covered by each office.

[2] Percentage change compared with 3 April 1989 (the nearest comparable date in 1989 for which figures are available).

Medical Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals are made each year to medical appeal tribunals; what is the average length of time taken for a case to reach a tribunal and what is the number of successful appeals expressed as a percentage of those made.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The details quoted in the table relate to appeals to medical appeal tribunals in respect of mobility allowance and industrial injuries disablement benefit for the years from 1985 to 1988, the last full year for which details are held. I regret that figures for appeals to medical appeal tribunals in respect of severe disablement allowance are not available for this period. However, the Department has started collecting these figures from 1 July 1989.

Appeals heard	17,661	15,568	13,190	12,054
Claimant successful	7,395	6,193	4,946	4,408

Percentage successful	42	40	37	37

The Department has also recently begun compiling more detailed statistics relating to medical appeal tribunals, including information on the clearance time for such appeals. The latest statistics, for the three-monthly period ending 30 September 1989, show that the national average clearance time for appeals to medical appeal tribunals, from date of lodgement to hearing, is 17 weeks.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents of disabled children in receipt of attendance allowance had benefit deducted from their allowance due to them or their child staying in (a) respite care, (b) hospital and (c) any other form of scheduled accommodation for more than 28 days for the benefit year 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to change the regulations governing the receipt of attendance allowance where the child stays in hospital for a period of more than 28 days.

Mr. Scott: There are no current plans to change the conditions for the receipt of attendance allowance when a child has been in hospital for more than 28 days.

Disability Benefit

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would cost at 1990-91 prices to extend disability benefit to all persons with a disability assessed at 40 per cent. or more.

Mr. Scott: There is a range of benefits available to disabled people of which only war pensions and industrial injuries disablement benefits are assessed according to a percentage of disability. Qualification for severe disablement allowance at age 20 or over depends on both incapacity for work and assessment as 80 per cent. disabled. As part of our review of disability benefits we considered whether a comprehensive disability income based on the level of a person's disability could replace the present structure of benefits. We concluded that the same principles could more effectively be implemented by changes which establish a more coherent system of financial help by building on the existing benefits, as set out in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" (Cmd. 917).

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for how many weeks a person who claims income support on becoming unemployed after a trial period of employment, and whose income support entitlement before that period included 100 per cent. of his or her mortgage interest, has to wait before again having the mortgage interest met in full.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A person who claims income support on becoming unemployed after a period of employment which satisfies the conditions for employment on trial for unemployment benefit purposes, and whose income support before that period included 100 per cent. of mortgage interest, will have mortgage interest met in full from the outset of the claim.

Pensioners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the average increase in incomes, excluding the state earnings-related pension, since 1979 for those pensioners who receive all of their income from state benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is not available in the form requested.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much it would cost to uprate the severe disablement allowance to the full basic invalidity rate at 1990-91 prices.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that the gross cost of increasing the basic rate of severe disablement allowance to the basic rate of invalidity pension would be about £250 million a year; the net cost would be about £110 million a year.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much he estimates has been saved by compulsory competitive tendering in areas for which his Department has responsibility in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No separate records are kept of savings resulting from competitive tendering. In the financial year 1989-90 total purchasing savings (for the Departments of Health and Social Security combined) amounted to £79 million (9·7 per cent. of spend). This figure includes on-going savings from years prior to 1989-90. New savings in 1989-90 amounted to £30 million (3·7 per cent). These were achieved through a variety of methods including competitive tendering, post tender negotiation and changing suppliers.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the role and responsibilities of the benefits agency which will be coming into being next April; how its establishment will affect current functions and staff of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The social security benefits agency, to be established in April 1991, will provide for the cost-effective administration of social security benefits, and other services including the handling of claims reviews and appeals, and arranging payment.

The agency will bring together under a single line management structure the (currently separately organised) central offices and regional organisation. In addition a number of support functions currently carried out within headquarters will pass to the agency.

The principal aim of introducing agencies within the Department is to improve services to all customers of the Department. Part of this aim will be to streamline management structures to improve efficiency and effectiveness.

Benefits

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people he estimates are currently eligible for family credit and/or income support in each county in England; and what is the percentage take-up in each case.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information is not available.

Information about the total number of families eligible for family credit or income support can be obtained only for Great Britain, and only retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of unemployed claiming income support but not unemployment benefit whose claims were (i) disallowed, (ii) allowed and (iii) awaiting adjudication by his Department's adjudication officers following doubts about (a) actively seeking work, (b) restricted availability and (c) refusal of employment for each month since October 1989; and what was the number that corresponded and the number that did not correspond to the opinion given by Department of Employment adjudication officers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is not available.

Fishermen, North-east England

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has made arrangements to assist onshore fishermen in the north-east of England unable to work because of the current restrictions on the sale of shellfish.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Under normal arrangements, share fishermen who pay a special rate of class 2 (self-employed) contributions are entitled to claim unemployment benefit when they are unable to work and can demonstrate that it is impossible for catches to be sold.

Retirement Pensions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensions were awarded to women aged 60 and men aged 65 years, including married women's pensions on their husbands' insurance, in each month of the latest year for which information is available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 23 May 1990]: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

The latest figures are for 1988-89. These show that in the six-month period ending September 1988 retirement pensions were awarded to 102,970 men aged 65 and 68,010 women aged 60. The awards to women included 20,960 married women's pensions based partially or wholly on their husbands' contributions and 420 retirement pension awards to widows based on their late husbands' contributions.

In the following six-month period, ending March 1989, 96,680 awards were made to men aged 65 and 66,020 to women aged 60. These included 20,320 married women's pensions and 520 retirement pensions awarded to widows based on their late husbands' contributions.

Departmental Savings

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what mechanisms exist in his Department for identifying and tracking value-for-money savings in its operations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The Department of Social Security uses a number of mechanisms to assist in the identification of value-for-money savings. These include a management services operation, internal audit and a directorate of purchasing and supply. The Department undertakes a number of efficiency scrutinies of discrete parts of its operations each year and also has an active staff suggestions scheme. Monitoring of progress in securing the identified savings is undertaken by a central unit.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the value-for-money savings in his Department's operations identified by internal audit and internal efficiency arrangements and by external audit and by management consultants retained by his Department between 1983-84 and 1988-89; and what is the amount of those savings fulfilled to date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The savings resulting from specific value-for-money activities are estimated to total £181 million over the period for the Departments of Health and of Social Security, but it is not possible to apportion identified savings between them. In addition, all managers are required to make a contribution to the Department's efficiency saving target of a minimum of 1·5 per cent. per annum from running costs as set by Her Majesty's Treasury and to contribute to other departmental value-for-money initiatives. As not all the results of other value-for-money activities are collected centrally this savings figure represents only a proportion of the total value-for-money savings achieved.

Disallowed Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide figures updating those contained in his answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden) of 4 April, Official Report, column 684, on disallowed unemployment benefit for the period 1 January 1990 to date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 6 June 1990]: The information for the quarter ending 31 March 1990, the latest available, is in the table:

Decisions of adjudication officers on doubtful claims for unemployment benefit, period 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1990

	Fresh or renewal claims disallowed	Reviewed claims revised adversely to claimant

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the five education authorities in England which spent the most per secondary pupil in 1988, together with their position in the examination league table.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Data on examination results are not yet available for 1988-89. Nor are some significant data on spending. In 1987-88, the five authorities spending the most per secondary pupil, and their position in an examination ranking based on school leavers with five or more good GCSEs over the past three years, were as follows:

	in the exam ranking
ILEA	88th
Waltham Forest	95th
Brent	75th
Newham	93rd
Croydon	57th

Teacher Vacancies

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his most recent estimate of the number of unfilled teacher vacancies in London; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his most recent estimate of the number of unfilled teacher vacancies in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his most recent estimate of the number of unfilled teacher vacancies in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the earlier reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway).

In January 1989 there were 2,124 full-time teacher vacancies in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in Greater London, equivalent to about 4·3 per cent. of teachers in post. Of these, 1,305 were in nursery or primary schools and 819 in secondary schools.

Higher Education

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications there have been for undergraduate degree courses beginning in September 1990 and September 1991; and how many there were in the same period last year for degree courses beginning September 1989 and September 1990.

17. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many young people have applied for places on undergraduate degree courses at higher education institutions in the United Kingdom beginning in September 1990 and September 1991.

Mr. Jackson: By March 1990, the Universities Central Council on Admissions had received 851,693 applications from United Kingdom domiciled students for admission to United Kingdom universities at undergraduate level in autumn 1990. Applications for 1989 entry on 31 March 1989 numbered 774,469. By the same dates, the Polytechnics Central Admissions System had received 539,622 applications for 1990 admission to undergraduate degree courses at polytechnics and colleges in England and Wales compared with 480,568 for 1989 entry. Information on 1991 applications is not yet available.

16. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of quality assurance in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: Quality assurance is of increasing importance as higher education develops. The HE institutions, the validating bodies, and both the higher education funding councils are very conscious of their responsibilities in this regard. In addition, my right hon. Friend is seeking comments on the recommendations in the recently published review of the Council for National Academic Awards.

31. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the participation of 16 to 19-year-olds in full-time education.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the participation of 16 to 19-year-olds in full-time education.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have achieved a very substantial increase in full-time participation in post-compulsory education. For 16-year-olds, it has increased by 25 per cent., from 40 per cent. to 50 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1988-89. And for 16 to 17-year-olds taken together, it has increased from 34 per cent. to 42 per cent. These figures do not include YTS trainees who attend college full-time. Our examination reforms and the Education Reform Act will raise standards in schools, giving more young people the qualifications and motivation to stay on.

74. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for qualifications for post-16-year-olds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is determined to ensure that A-level and AS courses and vocational courses together provide young people beyond 16 with a coherent spectrum of opportunities and a chance to develop their potential. He has asked the School Examinations and Assessment Council to advise him by July on the practicability of building core skills into A and AS syllabuses and on the credit transfer possibilities between A/AS and vocational qualifications. Once he has this advice he will be able to consider what further steps are needed in improving the nature and structure of the qualifications available.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much he estimates it costs to provide education for 16 to 18-year-olds at current prices; and how many individuals aged between 16 and 18 years are in (a) full-time and (b) part-time education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The education component of the 1990-91 grant settlement allows for education authorities in England to spend over £1,600 million on providing for 16 to 18-year-olds in secondary schools and further education colleges. This is net of further education tuition fees, and allows for the higher costs of 16 to 18-year-olds relative to other pupils in the secondary sector. The projected student numbers for the academic year 1990-91 consistent with that total assume 543,000 16 to 18-year-olds in full-time secondary or further education, and 295,000 in part-time further education.

AS-Levels

18. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment has been made of the success of AS-levels.

Mrs. Rumbold: There were 37,000 AS examination entries in summer 1989, the first year of the new examination. A total of 61 per cent. gained grades A to E. The School Examinations and Assessment Council has been asked to provide guidance to schools on A/AS combinations and to lay down principles governing A/AS syllabuses. Both measures should help to raise achievement in AS examinations.

Local Management of Schools

19. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations from teachers regarding local management of schools.

64. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations from teachers regarding local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend continues to receive representations from individual teachers and from teacher associations. Many of these support the principles of delegated budget management and welcome the opportunities which this will give them.

36. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of local management of schools.

75. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress being made by local education authorities in implementing local management of schools.

80. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of local management of schools.

82. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) and the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) on 8 May 1990, Official Report, column 8.

39. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to take action against those local authorities that hold back too high a proportion of a school's budget under the new system of local management.

Mrs. Rumbold: All those schemes for the local management of schools which were approved by my right hon. Friend for introduction in April 1990, were approved with the requirement that certain discretionary exceptions totalled less than 10 per cent. of the general schools budget. As with all aspects of LMS, we will be monitoring and reviewing the policy in the light of experience and in the light of LEAs' budget statements made under section 42 of the Education Reform Act.

43. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his plans to introduce greater flexibility into the local management of schools.

79. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his plans to introduce greater flexibility into the local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 8 May 1990, Official Report, column 11.

52. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet school governors regarding the local management of schools.

76. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet school governors regarding the local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

57. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of support is being given to Cumbria education authority for local management of schools in the present financial year.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the £41·1 million of expenditure supported under the education support grant programme for the implementation of local management of schools, including governor training, and the £10·9 million supported through the LEA training grants programme, Cumbria education authority's share is £650,000.

69. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what level of grant is being given to Wirral education authority for local management of schools in the current financial year.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the £41·1 million of expenditure supported in 1990-91 under the education support grant programme for the implementation of local management of schools, including governor training, and the £10·9 million supported through the LEA training grants programme, Wirral education authority's share is £356,400.

83. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the total amount of funding being held back by each local authority in England and Wales under the new system of local management.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Mr. Norris) on 5 February 1990, Official Report, column 451.

General Teaching Council

20. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to establish a general teaching council.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The establishment of a general teaching council was one of the recommendations made by the Education, Science and Arts Committee in its report on teacher supply. My right hon. Friend is currently considering the report and will respond as soon as possible.

School Buildings

21. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his most recent information regarding the condition of school buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department published the survey of school buildings in November 1987. Information is also received annually from local education authorities in their capital expenditure plans, from Her Majesty's inspectorate, and from representations by the local education authorities made from time to time. The maintenance of the buildings is a matter for the local education authorities and governors.

24. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities regarding the repair of school buildings.

55. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities regarding the repair of school buildings.

61. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from local education authorities regarding the repair of school buildings.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor).

28. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been allocated for the current financial year to each education authority for the specific purpose of repairing school buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Current funding for the repair of school buildings is not separately identified in the Government's revenue support grant allocations to individual authorities. Provision for such spending is included within the total grant settlement, which in 1990-91 allows for local authorities in England to spend nearly £15 billion on education. But it is for each local authority to decide how much to spend on repairing school buildings from the current resources available to it. Annual capital guidelines for local education authorities for 1990-91 were announced on 20 December 1989, Official Report, columns 254-58; again, it is for each local authority to decide its priorities for capital spending in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Education Expenditure, London

22. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for education spending in inner London after 1992.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government will continue to provide a financial framework within which the 13 inner London local education authorities can provide an effective education service.

77. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations he has had with London borough councils concerning the adequacy of his assessment of necessary expenditure on education in the current financial year.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have meetings from time to time with London borough councils, both individually and in representative groups. These cover a range of financial and other issues. These issues are also the subject of correspondence with Ministers.

History Teaching

23. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to announce details of the national curriculum on history.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend published the final report of the history working group on 3 April. That document is currently the subject of consultation which ends on 15 June. After this and in the light of the responses received my right hon. Friend will make his proposals. These will then be published by the National Curriculum Council and subject to consultation in England required by the Education Reform Act.

School-business Links

25. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have links with local businesses.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not collected for all schools in England. However, a recent DES survey of 500 secondary and 500 primary schools, the findings of which will shortly be published in a DES statistical bulletin, found that 90 per cent. of secondary and over 50 per cent. of primary schools had links with local businesses.

National Curriculum, Northumberland

26. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the operation of the national curriculum in Northumberland.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for the Northumberland education authority in the first instance to monitor the operation of the national curriculum in the schools it maintains. Evidence from Her Majesty's inspectorate shows that in general schools across the country are making satisfactory progress in introducing the new requirements.

Higher Education (Capital Investment)

27. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the capital investment needs of higher educational institutions.

47. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the capital investment needs of higher educational institutions.

Mr. Jackson: Responsibility for identifying such needs lies with the funding councils concerned in discussion with institutions. The Government's current expenditure plans provide for an increase in higher education capital funding of £90 million over three years from 1990-91.

EC Scholarships

29. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate discussions with his European Community counterparts on the development of a fully Community-wide scholarships system for further education applicants.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no plans to initiate any such discussions, but further education students already benefit from a number of existing EC programmes.

Nursery Education

30. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage of three and four-year-old children in state-run nursery schools in the United Kingdom; and what are the equivalent figures for West Germany, Sweden and Denmark.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information is as follows:

Percentage of 3 to 4 age group in education and day-care, 1987

Country	Education		Day-care
	Public	Private	Public	Private
United Kingdom	42	3	38	3
West Germany	40	[1]16	n/a	n/a
Sweden	[2]40	n/a	[2]21	n/a
Denmark	—	—	n/a	n/a

[1] 1982; private sector provision subsidised by public funds.
[2] 1988, includes private sector.
— = nil or negligible.
n/a = not available.

Teacher Recruitment

32. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to improve teacher recruitment and retention in London and in the south-east.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 11 April my right hon. Friend announced a 7 per cent. increase by 1993 in the number of places available for initial training courses in England and Wales. Within that increase, he has asked the funding councils to take account of the recruitment difficulties faced by primary schools in the south-east of England and to increase the number of places available in that area.

My right hon. Friend has accepted the recommendations of the interim advisory committee which will allow substantial pay increases for teachers, an 8·8 per cent. increase in the London weighting allowance with a discretionary supplement of £750 for inner London and give LEAs and governing bodies greater flexibility on pay. He is providing funds through education support grant and the local education authority training grants scheme to encourage local education authorities, as the employers of teachers, to introduce flexible and innovative recruitment and retention packages.

We have already announced an increase in the bursary paid to students on initial training courses in shortage subjects; in March we provided £182,000 for a London recruitment campaign and we recently launched a national advertising campaign. We will continue to support and extend the measures we have taken since 1986 to combat teacher shortage.

48. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received since the launch of the "Teaching Brings Out the Best in People" campaign; and if he will make a statement.

49. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made since the launch of the "Teaching Brings Out the Best in People" campaign.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what impact so far has been made by the "Teaching Brings Out the Best in People" campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since the teacher recruitment advertising campaign was launched on 16 May, over 13,000 requests have been received from people seeking information about teaching as a career in response to the advertisements.

66. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to recruit more graduates into the teaching profession.

71. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to recruit more graduates into the teaching profession.

Mrs. Rumbold: On 12 March my right hon. Friend announced an extension of the bursary scheme for students on initial teacher training courses in shortage subjects to modern foreign languages; the bursary will be increased to £1,500 for students on courses in maths, CDT and technology, chemistry and modern foreign languages and to £2,000 for students on physics courses. The changes apply from September 1990.

In addition, my right hon. Friend is matching generous industrial sponsorship with £40,000 funding to support a paid work experience scheme for undergraduates run by the teaching as a career unit.

It is proposed that the first of the graduates taking part in the pilot for the articled teacher route into teaching will begin training in September.

We shall continue to support teacher taster courses for mature people, including graduates, who wish to switch careers.

City Technology Colleges

33. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the city technology college programme.

61. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of the city technology college programme.

Mrs. Rumbold: The city technology college programme continues to make excellent progress. Three colleges are up and running and a further nine are due to open in September 1990 and 1991.

63. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last visited a city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend visited the Djanogly CTC (Nottingham) on 29 September 1989, when he attended the official opening, performed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Opting Out

34. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the geographical spread of schools in England and Wales that have applied to opt out of local authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the 54 proposals for grant-maintained status that have so far reached my right hon. Friend for decision, he has approved 41 and is minded to approve a further school subject to agreement with the governing body about minor technical adjustments to the proposals.

The 42 schools which he has approved or is minded to approve for grant-maintained status are drawn from 31 LEAs. The geographical breakdown is as follows:

Geographical breakdown for each school approved for GM status

Region and School	LEA
Northern
Castle Hall GM School	Kirklees
Heckmondwike Grammar School	Kirklees
North West
Audenshaw High School	Tameside

[1] Denotes minded to approve subject to agreement with the governing body about minor technical adjustments to the proposals.

42. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications he has received from schools wishing to opt out of local authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of 64 proposals for grant-maintained status have been published following parental ballots. Of these, 54 have so far reached my right hon. Friend for decision: he has approved 41, is minded to approve one and has rejected 12.

46. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from parents about the conduct of local authorities towards schools that wish to opt out of local authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Concern has been expressed from time to time by governors and parents about the actions of some local authorities towards schools seeking grant-maintained status. My right hon. Friend has said repeatedly that it is important that parents, governors and staff at such schools should have an informed debate about the options available to them; and that LEAs should not obstruct that debate in any way.

56. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the consequences for schools of opting out of local authority control; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Grant-maintained schools have many advantages: they are run by local people who know the schools; their governing bodies have considerable autonomy, including the freedom to choose how to spend most effectively their share of LEA expenditure on central services; and they are proving popular with parents; and attracting teachers to work in them.

Teachers' Pay and Conditions

35. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of teacher salaries.

65. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of teacher salaries.

68. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the level of teacher salaries.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 5 April that he had decided to accept the recommendations contained in the third report of the Interim Advisory Committee on School Teachers' Pay and Conditions, subject to some minor modifications. They will be implemented in full by 1 January 1991.

84. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what meetings he is having with the teaching unions over the new pay machinery proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has recently completed a series of meetings with the teacher unions to discuss his proposals for new permanent pay negotiating machinery.

Grant-maintained Schools

37. Mr. Robert. B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the level of funding available for grant-maintained schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's policy is that each grant-maintained school should be funded at the level its former local education authority would have spent on it. This includes provision for services previously provided centrally, which amounted on average to about 15 per cent. of the direct costs of the schools in 1989-90.

70. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had from teachers at grant-maintained schools about the new system of grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has not received any such formal representations. Grant-maintained status has been welcomed by teachers as well as by governors and parents. For example, in a recent report to the governing body the head teacher of Bankfield school in Widnes said the new freedom of action as a grant-maintained school had helped raise morale among the school community. He said:

"Morale amongst staff is exceptionally high—and this has had a beneficial effect on our pupils. The school is totally united, staff, pupils, parents as never before".

72. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils attend grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have recent information on the numbers of pupils in 41 of the 42 schools which my right hon. Friend has so far approved or is minded to approve for grant-maintained status. In January 1990 there were 29,200 pupils in those schools.

81. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is planning to take to make it easier for schools to achieve grant-maintained status.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is open to all LEA-maintained secondary schools, and LEA-maintained primary schools with 300 or more pupils, to consider the option of seeking grant-maintained status. It is for parents and governors to decide whether to put a proposal for grant-maintained status to my right hon. Friend. The statutory procedure requires that each proposal for grant-maintained status together with any statutory objections is considered carefully by my right hon. Friend.

Modern Languages

38. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his response to the report of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities on modern language learning and teacher supply.

Mrs. Rumbold: The report of the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities on European schools and language learning in United Kingdom schools was published on 15 May. My right hon. Friend will be studying the report carefully before responding. In doing so, he will wish to take account of the forthcoming final report of the national curriculum working group on modern foreign languages, which is expected to be completed by the end of July and will be published later in the summer.

Local Government Finance

41. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of the effect of the poll tax caps on the education service in the former Inner London education authority boroughs proposed for capping.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is considering appeals from the relevant inner London boroughs about the level of their caps, including representations made by the boroughs about likely service implications.

50. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will meet representatives of those local education authorities which have been charge-capped to discuss the implications for education.

78. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will meet representatives of those local education authorities which have been charge-capped to discuss the implications for education.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

Student Loans

44. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the administration of the student loans scheme.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall).

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much he estimates will be raised in total from student loans in the first full year of their operation.

Mr. Jackson: If 80 per cent. of students take up their maximum entitlement to loans, £178 million will be made available in the academic year 1990-91. Borrowers will not be liable to repay their loans until the April after they leave their course. The first graduates are therefore not expected to start repaying until April 1992. Estimates of the long-term cost and savings were announced on 18 December 1989, Official Report, columns 36-40.

School Discipline

45. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received following the announcement of his intention to implement a number of the recommendations contained in the Elton report on school discipline.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Since my right hon. Friend made his announcement on 13 March 1989, a total of 25 representations have been received about the report.

Computers

51. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many computers there are in schools currently.

Mr. Alan Howarth: There is an average of three microcomputers per maintained primary school and 30 per maintained secondary school being used for educational purposes.

Eastern Europe

53. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he is having with education authorities to allow young people from central and eastern Europe to visit and study at schools in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department is not directly involved in developing school visits and exchange programmes. It does however fund the Central Bureau for Educational Visits and Exchanges to undertake activities of this kind. Additional resources have been made available to the bureau in the 1990-91 financial year to expand its programme of educational visits and exchanges, including those with eastern Europe.

Humberside College

54. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make an announcement as to whether Humberside college of higher education is to be granted polytechnic status.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is awaiting further advice from the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council after the council meeting today. He hopes to respond to that advice shortly after it is received.

University Studies

58. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage the participation of United Kingdom institutions in the trans-European mobility scheme for university studies.

Mr. Jackson: I wrote on 14 May to the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, the Committee of Directors of Polytechnics and the Standing Conference of Principals inviting their members to participate fully in the TEMPUS programme.

Teacher Supply

59. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to respond to the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee report on teacher supply; and if he will make a statement.

67. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to respond to the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee report on teacher supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to respond to the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee report on teacher supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the report of the Education, Science and Arts Committee on teacher supply. He will respond as soon as possible.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the system of capital allocations for (a) grant-maintained schools and (b) local authority-maintained schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Each year grant-maintained schools are invited to submit bids for capital allocations for the next financial year. My right hon. Friend assesses these across the sector as a whole taking account of each school's needs relative to other GM schools. For further details I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce) on 26 January 1990, Official Report, columns 899-902.

Within the LEA-maintained sector, my right hon. Friend sets an annual capital guideline for each local education authority and makes capital allocations for governors' expenditure at voluntary aided and special agreement schools following his assessment of local education authority capital expenditure plans. For further details I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 20 December 1989, Official Report, columns 254-58.

Cathedral Choirs

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will visit the choir schools at Salisbury and York to discuss proposals to establish girls' choirs in English cathedrals.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Deaf Students

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether deaf students will be counted as disabled students for the purpose of loan repayments.

Mr. Jackson: Subject to Parliament's approval, the Education (Student Loans) Regulations provide that, in determining a borrower's income for the purpose of deferment, no account shall be taken of specific disability-related benefits. While there is no separate provision for deaf borrowers, those who do receive these disability-related benefits will have them disregarded in the assessment of their income. Eligible deaf students will benefit while they are studying from the new disabled students' allowance announced on 19 March.

Under-fives

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the committee on policies for the under-fives will report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The committee of inquiry set up by my right hon. Friend's predecessor under my chairmanship is considering the quality of the educational experience of three and four-year-olds across various institutional settings. I expect to submit its report to my right hon. Friend during the summer.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money he estimates to have been saved by compulsory competitive tendering in education in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Rumbold: No such estimates have been made for education, since the money saved by compulsory competitive tendering, and the scope for further savings, will vary between local education authorities depending on their circumstances.

Haberdashers' Aske's Schools, Deptford

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will take steps to ensure that during periods when the schools are in session, any visits by his officials or other persons instructed by his Department to the Haberdashers' Aske's schools in Deptford, for purposes of conducting surveys or other works in connection with the establishment of a city technology college, will take place only at times expressly agreed by the head teacher of each school;

(2) what were the dates and purposes of the visits by his officials, or other persons instructed by his Department, to the Haberdashers' Aske's schools in Deptford; and whether they were conducted at times agreed with the local education authority and head teacher of each school.

Mrs. Rumbold: This Department has agreed to provide advice to the Haberdashers' Company in relation to the establishment of the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college. It is for the project director employed by the Haberdashers' Company to make the appropriate arrangements, in consultation with the local education authority and the head teachers of both schools, for any necessary visits to the schools. The most recent visits made by officials, on 18 and 24 May, were arranged in this way.

Lorne Felgate

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received the appeal in respect of Lorne Felgate of Gunners road, Shoeburyness, Essex in relation to the educational provision for his dyslexic condition; when he hopes to come to a decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend received the appeal on 22 May 1989. He hopes to be in a position to make a decision shortly.

Assisted Places

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to improve publicity for the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Schools participating in the scheme take the lead in publicising its benefits and the availability of places locally, but my right hon. Friend's recent announcement of an expansion of the scheme, in areas of lower provision, has heightened considerably public awareness of assistance available.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make regulations under section 13 of the Education Act 1981 relating to the approval of independent schools to admit pupils with statements of special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has today issued for consultation draft regulations and a related circular which would lay down requirements in this respect. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Teacher Vetting

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many outstanding applications there are for vetting teachers; and how many there were six months ago;

(2) what is the total number of teacher vetting requests his Department has received since the inception of the scheme;

(3) what is the longest period a local education authority has waited for the results of a teacher vetting application.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department does not handle vetting requests on behalf of local education authorities. The checks are made by local authorities directly with their local police force.

Departmental Savings

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what mechanisms exist in his Department for identifying and tracking value-for-money savings in its operations;

(2) what were the value-for-money savings in his Department's operations identified by internal audit and internal efficiency arrangements and by external audit and by management consultants retained by his Department between 1983-84 and 1988-89; and what is the amount of those savings fulfilled to date.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The Department constantly monitors expenditure on its administration to ensure that value for money is achieved. To this end, the Department makes use of a range of formal and informal mechanisms including surveys, policy reviews, organisation and methods studies, staffing reviews and other monitoring arrangements. The improvements resulting from all such inquiries and studies are taken into account in the setting of annual budgets and internal targets. Audit arrangements are concerned principally with securing adequate financial controls, but wherever audit work has shown opportunities for securing value-for-money savings the relevant recommendations have been implemented. The results are not collected centrally within the Department.

Meningitis

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what public resources were committed through the Medical Research Council for research into meningitis in 1988-89; and what is the figure for 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Expenditure on research into meningitis during the 1988-89 financial year was £161,000. The Medical Research Council is always prepared to consider soundly based proposals for research and the figure for 1990-91 will depend on the number of successful applications submitted.

THE ARTS

Departmental Achievements

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the major achievements of his Department in the last four years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The Government's achievements in the arts in the last four years have been numerous and varied. Among the most important I would list the following:

The maintenance of central Government support for arts activities, and the introduction of measures to encourage greater self-reliance among arts institutions—the arts budget for this financial year stands at £494 million, and will rise by 22 per cent. by 1992-93.

The establishment of a three-year programme of funding for the arts, to give arts bodies a firmer base from which to plan their activities.

The introduction of corporate planning for the national museums and galleries and other non-departmental bodies, linked to the three-year funding programme.

The major expansion schemes at some national museums and galleries, including the Clore gallery at the Tate, the new Tate gallery in Liverpool, the redevelopment of the imperial war museum, and the opening of the Victoria and Albert museum's theatre museum at Covent Garden. The building and maintenance grants to the national museums and galleries have increased by 15 per cent. in real terms over the past four years, and in December 1989 an incentive funding initiative was launched to help these institutions get their fabric into prime condition by the year 2000.

The participation of over 2,000 museums in the Museums Year celebrations in 1989, with visitor numbers reaching over 100 million in that year.

The Government's support for the development strategies designed to give the regions a larger share of arts spending facilities and to increase access to the arts.

New initiatives to encourage arts bodies to market themselves more professionally and to improve the quality of their management.

The significant and continuing upsurge in business sponsorship of the arts, encouraged by the business sponsorship incentive scheme through which nearly £33 million of new money for the arts has been raised.

The development of incentive funding schemes for the performing arts and for public libraries, designed to encourage subsidised bodies to become more self-reliant in their development and growth.

The maintaining of the public lending right scheme introduced in 1981, by which authors are paid for the borrowing of their books from public libraries. This year, the PLR provision is £3·5 million, and it will rise to £4·5 million in 1991-92.

The very substantial progress that has been made with the British Library's St. Pancras project, the first phase of which is on schedule for completion in 1993, still within its budget of £300 million. This will bring together most of the Library's London-based collections and reading rooms on a single site, and provide much-improved storage conditions.

The publication of the consultative paper "Financing the Public Library Service: Four subjects for debate" prompting possibly the widest debate on the service this century, and resulting in the protection of the core of the free public library service, through the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

The continuing commitment to preserving the nation's heritage. Over £105 million of public money has gone into the national heritage memorial fund since it was established in 1980.

The growth in the use of the acceptance in lieu of tax provisions. In 1989-90, a record level of tax was satisfied in this way, with over £11·5 million satisfied by 14 offers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Major: The ECOFIN Council met in Luxembourg on 11 June. The Paymaster General and I represented the United Kingdom. Future progress towards economic and monetary union was discussed and oral reports were heard from the chairmen of the central bank governors, monetary and economic policy committees and from President Delors. The Council agreed that it was important to ensure that stage 1 was successful and that more work was needed in how the Community might progress beyond that stage. It was agreed that Finance Ministers should be involved in the forthcoming intergovernmental conference on EMU. The presidency will submit a progress report to the European Council before its meeting on 25 to 26 June.

Political agreement was reached on a package of three corporate tax measures to encourage cross-border co-operation. When finally implemented, these measures will end the double taxation of subsidiaries which transfer dividends to a parent company in another member state and will remove the tax disincentive to cross border mergers. This is a very welcome step forward and will be of real benefit to British industry.

The Council also welcomed a report from the Commission on the main features of its new proposals for a system of VAT control and for the collection of intra-EC trade statistics after 1992. The raising of travellers' allowance was also discussed. It was agreed that the Court of Auditors report on export refunds should be submitted to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for urgent further consideration. The investment services directive was also discussed, and it was concluded that the Council should aim to reach a common position on the directive by 31 December 1990.

TRANSPORT

Protected Countryside

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy concerning the avoidance of motorway and major road construction through designated protected countryside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: There has been no change in the Government's longstanding policy, which is to keep roads away from protected areas like areas of outstanding natural beauty and sites of special scientific interest wherever possible. Special attention is also paid to the effects of new roads on inalienable land owned by the National Trust. In national parks, the Government are committed to ensuring that no new trunk route will be constructed or an existing road upgraded unless there is a compelling need which cannot be met by any reasonable alternative means.

Carbon Canisters

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the relative cost implications to the motor industry of fitting large or small carbon canisters to motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Carbon canisters are used to control evaporative emissions from motor vehicles. The component cost is likely to range between £15 and £40. The cost of installation is difficult to estimate, but is likely to be higher for the larger canisters that are designed to capture refuelling emissions, because they are more sophisticated and require electronic controls.

Tachographs

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has of tachograph discs in heavy goods vehicles being discarded when used up and being replaced with new ones so as to allow a further nine hours' driving time; what steps he intends taking to prevent this from happening; and if he has any plans to introduce a system of serialised tachograph discs.

Mr. Atkins: The Department carries out checks on tachographs of heavy goods vehicles both at the roadside and at operators' premises. These can detect the person who drives for a period and then inserts a new chart. There is no evidence that this practice is common. I will write to the hon. Member shortly about the serialisation of tachograph discs.

Pedestrian Crossings

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many pedestrians were (a) killed and (b) injured, while using zebra or pelican crossings in 1989.

Mr. Atkins: Provisional estimates are that 109 persons were killed and a further 4,978 persons injured while crossing the road using pedestrian crossings during 1989.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for failure to stop for pedestrians at a zebra crossing, since the introduction in the current year of the spot fine.

Mr. John Patten: The information collected centrally does not separately identify fixed penalty notices issued for the offence of failing to give precedence to pedestrians at a zebra crossing.

Motor Vehicles (Roadworthiness)

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in the last five years vehicle examiners from the Department of Transport have carried out checks on the roadworthiness of motor cars on garage forecourts in accordance with the Road Traffic Acts; and how many prosecutions have been successfully instituted.

Mr. Atkins: The vehicle inspectorate has not hitherto maintained separate statistics of such inspections, but is now starting to do so. Any subsequent prosecutions would normally be pursued by local authority trading standards officers.

Jet Engines (Exhaust Fumes)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made an assessment of the potential damage being caused to the ozone layer as a result of exhaust fumes from jet engines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: For the most part, aircraft operate in the troposphere. Increasingly, however, they are reaching into the lower stratosphere and the Warren Spring laboratory has been asked to consider what contribution they might make to stratospheric ozone depletion. This is an issue that is also the subject of an extensive three-year programme of research by NASA in connection with possible future supersonic transport development programmes. These are important studies, and the results could have a bearing on future policy decisions with regard to aircraft engine emission standards.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the inspector in the M11 link road public inquiry has submitted his report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The report has been received and is under consideration together with all the objections and representations made. The Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport will announce their decisions as soon as possible.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has received from Messrs. Eurotunnel details of the inspection procedures which will be made on cars and other vehicles before they enter the channel tunnel; and if, in particular, any progress has been made in providing X-ray machines for vehicles as referred to in the debate on 3 February 1987, Official Report, column 943;

(2) if the intergovernmental commission and safety authority has reported to him on the safety arrangements for inspecting vehicles going into the proposed channel tunnel; and if it has indicated whether it is satisfied with the arrangements.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on 11

June at column 62. Eurotunnel's designs and operating procedures in relation to safety and security are being considered in accordance with the arrangements specified in the treaty and concession agreement. Further work remains to be done before final approval can be given.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimate he has received of the number of vehicles which are likely to go through the proposed channel tunnel each day.

Mr. Freeman: A joint working group, representing the Department of Transport, Kent county council and Eurotunnel, has forecast that an average of 10,000 vehicles per day will use the tunnel in 1993, rising to 14,000 in 2008.

Motorways

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the number of miles of new motorways completed since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1979, 285 miles of new motorway have been completed, and 30 miles of existing motorway widened.

Danbury Bypass

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to build a bypass around Danbury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 June 1990]: This is a matter for Essex county council as local highway authority.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Alexander Bora

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now allow Mr. Alexander Bora, a United States citizen, to enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Bora was refused leave to enter the United Kingdom by an immigration officer at Gatwick airport on 12 March 1987.

So far as I am aware, Mr. Bora has not sought admission since that date. Should he do so, his case would be given full consideration in the normal way.

Obscene Telephone Calls

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total number of prosecutions under section 43 of the Telecommunications Act 1984.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible from the information held centrally to identify offences under section 43 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 from others under the aforesaid Act.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on nationally recommended minimum standards to maintain civil defence cover.

Mr. John Patten: There are no nationally recommended minimum standards for civil defence.

Arson (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the National Association of Probation Officers concerning his Meibion Glyndwr police investigations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a letter from the National Association of Probation Officers calling for an independent inquiry into recent arrests by north Wales police. He replied on 11 May confirming that the chief constable had decided that the circumstances of the arrests should be investigated by a senior officer from another force under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the terms of reference of the investigation being conducted by Lancashire police into the way in which North Wales police have undertaken action relating to the arson campaign in Wales; whether the investigation is into the entire sequence of police action since the arson campaign first started; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The investigation relates only to certain arrests, the circumstances of which were referred to the Police Complaints Authority by the chief constable of North Wales under section 88 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. The authority approved the appointment of an investigating officer from the Lancashire constabulary and is supervising the investigation. I understand that the terms of reference are:

To enquire into the circumstances leading to and surrounding the arrest of Bryn Fon, Anna Wynne-Williams, Henryd Myrddin Jones and Dyfed Wyn Thomas, to determine whether or not the police action was proper and reasonable.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which groups concerned with reforming the law on Sunday trading he has met; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1986 my ministerial colleagues and I have met individuals and groups with widely differing views on the subject. In the past year these have included representatives of OPEN (previously, the Community Shops Group), the British Hardware Federation, Keep Sunday Special Campaign, the Association of District Councils, the British Videogram Association, the Retail Consortium and the Shopping Hours Reform Council. No proposal to reform the law has yet been put forward which seems likely to command sufficient support to provide the basis for legislation.

Chinese Refugees

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning the refusal to grant asylum to Chinese refugees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Representations have been received in respect of one Chinese national who was refused asylum here but was granted exceptional leave to remain. We have also received some 20 representations about the decision not to consider the asylum applications from 33 Chinese nationals who came here from Panama. This group has failed to comply with their terms of temporary admission and their cases will be further considered when they are traced.

Police Buildings

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what approval he has given for the acquisition or building of new police headquarters and at what cost in England and Wales since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information for force headquarters buildings is as follows:

1982
Avon and Somerset force headquarters—purchase of site and preparatory works	0·974
1983
Metropolitan police—Bessborough street and Vauxhall Bridge road adaptations work (lease rental £1·175 million per annum)	1·28
Metropolitan police—Drummond gate adaptations work (lease rental £1·795 million per annum)	1·64
1984
Leicestershire force headquarters—phase 1	3·655
Dyfed Powys force headquarters	5·9
1989
Thames Valley force headquarters—acquisition of site	1·1
Avon and Somerset force headquarters—phase 1	4·772
Avon and Somerset force headquarters—phase 1A	1·5

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to value the police estate in England and Wales, and for the more effective management of police buildings, within the 43 Home Office inspected forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The ownership of the police estate is vested in police authorities, or, in the case of the Metropolitan police, the Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District.

Home Office circular No. 32/1987, issued in May 1987, asked the authorities to review their management of the police estate with a view to identifying accommodation and sites which are surplus to requirements, either for disposal or, where appropriate, to meet emerging new needs for accommodation. The procedures for reviewing the estate are matters for the police authorities themselves, but Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary has generally expressed its satisfaction with the arrangements which have been made.

A proposal to carry out a valuation of the Metropolitan police estate on commercially accepted principles and updating the information on a continuing basis is being considered.

Trafalgar Square (Incident)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on those detained, following the 31 March incident in Trafalgar square, as to those (a) released without charge, and (b) charged, by offence, and by age, sex and place of residence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that by 8 June 471 people have been arrested in connection with the disorder which occurred during and following the demonstration against the community charge which took place in London on 31 March. Of these, 58 were subsequently released without charge.

The information readily available about the charges preferred and the age and sex of those charged with these offences is set out in table 1:

Animal Experiments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to review the effectiveness of the current provisions to prevent undue pain and suffering in experimentation on live animals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the annual number of lethal dose toxicity tests permitted over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Lethal dose toxicity tests have been separately identified in the statistics since 1987. The numbers of such tests carried out in 1987 and 1988 are published in table 14—columns 8 and 9—of the annual "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain" for 1987 and 1988, Cm. 515 and 743. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has made to the pharmaceutical and other commercial companies undertaking tests on live animals to move towards alternative methods of testing;

(2) what further steps he proposes to encourage provision for alternative methods for use in basic research in toxicity testing and drug development to replace experimentation on live animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is a fundamental principal of the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 that animals are used in scientific procedures, for whatever purposes, only where there are no alternatives to their use. All applicants for a project licence issued under the Act must satisfy the Home Office that they have given thorough consideration to the scope for using alternative methods not involving animals.

While the use of animals for research and safety testing will remain necessary for the foreseeable future, those involved in animal procedures are well aware of the need to move towards non-animal techniques whenever possible. Work involving living animals is not permitted where alternatives exist.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report those organisations which have received grants from Her Majesty's Government for research into replacement alternatives to experimentation on live animals indicating the amount of the grant in each case.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1984 financial assistance was provided to two organisations concerned with animals in research. Some £185,000 was given to the fund for the replacement of animals in medical experiments (FRAME) to help with three projects: a feasibility study of validation of in vitro techniques which might replace animal experiments; work on a possible database of tissue culture techniques; and on examination of the use of human tissue cultures instead of animals in medical research and toxicity testing. Some £30,000 was given to the universities federation for animal welfare (UFAW) to support an evaluation of the effects of various cage sizes and social groupings on the well-being of laboratory rats.

With the passing of the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, the Home Office established a scheme which is administered by a sub-committee of the Animal Procedures Committee to grant aid research to reduce, refine or replace the use of living animals in scientific procedures. The Home Office also funds research concerned with the welfare of laboratory animals. In 1988-89, the first year of the operation of the scheme, it was decided to fund the following four projects:

(i) Dr. P. A. Botham and Dr. G. J. A. Oliver, ICI Central Toxicology Laboratory. "Validation of an enucleated eye model" (£26,700 over two years)

(ii) Dr. A. F. Bristow and Dr. S. Poole, National Institute for Biological Standards and Control. "Assay of Pyrogens measuring lymphokine production in vitro". (£72,700 over three years)

(iii) Dr. A. Robinson, Public Health Laboratory Service "Alternative potency tests for cellular pertenssis". (£9,800 over three years)

(iv) Dr. R. M. Stagg, Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland "Fish cell culture for toxicity assessment". (£25,700 over two years)

In 1989-90 it was decided to fund the following projects:

(i) Dr. M. E. G. Boursell, AFRC Institute for Animal Health. "Recombinant vaccine against infectious burial disease virus". (£77,700 over three years)

(ii) Dr. M. Ferguson, National Institute for Biological Standards and Control. "The use of in vitro assays for the potency of rabies vaccines". (£10,000 over two years)

(iii) Mr. A. Knight, Wellcome Research Laboratories. "A replacement for the clostridium chauvoei vaccine potency test". (£67,000 over three years).

(iv) Professor D. B. Morton, University of Birmingham. "Evaluation of welfare in the husbandry of laboratory rabbits". (£59,900 over three years).

In addition, on the advice of the Animal Procedures Committee research sub-committee, the Home Office commissioned a report of an investigation into antibody production. The Home Office has also supported, and part-funded, international work on acute toxicity testing aimed at further reducing the need for formal LD50 tests.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the number of experiments on live animals carried out in each year since the 1986 provisions took effect, showing how many animals were used for scientific testing in each year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is published in table 18 of "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1988", Cm. 743, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his consideration of the representations made on behalf of Mr. Colin Wallace concerning his conviction, referred to in a letter of 4 June from Mr. J. H. Miller, Private Secretary to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, to Mr. Wallace.

Mr. John Patten: We hope to be able to reply shortly to the latest representations made on Mr. Wallace's behalf regarding the safety of his conviction.

Plutonium Contamination

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on plans or studies that assess the measures that would have to be taken by the police or civil defence authorities in the event of widespread contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to a question from the hon. Member and the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 8 June, at column 724.

War Crimes

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to investigate the allegations made by Arthur Lane of alleged war crimes committed by Kiyoaki Tanara and Shigeyuki Hashimoto; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 22 May.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mortgage Repossession

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the number of private mortgage possession orders granted in each English region, for the years (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988 and (d) 1989.

The Attorney-General: The number of private mortgage possession orders made in county courts in England for the years 1986 to 1989 are as follows. The numbers of such orders made in the six circuits within England are also given.

Private mortgage possession orders granted in England 1986-89

Circuit	1986	1987	1988	1989
Midland and Oxford	9,382	9,304	8,405	8,756
North Eastern	6,548	7,727	7,221	5,847
Northern	6,323	7,342	8,167	7,984
South Eastern	11,300	11,738	11,844	18,832
Wales and Chester	714	811	564	647
Western	4,784	4,861	4,160	5,027
England total	39,051	41,513	40,361	47,093

The figures given for Wales and Chester circuit exclude private mortgage possession orders granted in Wales.

Divorce

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on progress towards a fair and equitable system for all parties in divorce with particular regard to maintenance of, and access to, the children involved.

The Attorney-General: The Children Act 1989 represents a major reform of the law relating to children including access to them. It is, however, only a first step in a programme to review family law and its administration which includes consideration of the Law Commission's expected report on divorce later this year, conciliation arrangements and the Government's current consideration of the assessment, collection and enforcement of maintenance.

In considering and implementing policy on all these matters, the Government recognise the need for fairness and equity, but regard the interests of the child as their first priority.

Mr. Kevin Taylor

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on developments since the Director of Public Prosecutions was in touch with Greater Manchester police about the outcome of the trial of Kevin Taylor.

The Attorney-General: The question of any action subsequent to the DPP's letter of 19 January 1990 to the chief constable of Greater Manchester is one for the chief constable alone.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to grant specific relief or exemption from part of the community charge for those couples who are both blind.

Mr. Chope: Disabled people, including those who are registered as blind, can already receive higher levels of community charge benefit, which may reduce bills by up to 80 per cent, because of their disability. The income level at which they are entitled to maximum community charge benefit, and where the sliding scale of reductions begins, is higher than for other people. A disabled person who is not a former ratepayer or the partner of a former ratepayer may also be entitled to extra transitional relief.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the inquiries or audits undertaken by the Audit Commission on the finances of individual local authorities in 1990.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 June 1990]: As for every financial year, auditors appointed by the Audit Commission will undertake audits of the accounts of all local authorities for 1990-91. Information on public interest reports made by auditors to local authorities under section 15 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982 is held by the Audit Commission.

Beaches

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that hoteliers and business are compensated against loss of earnings as a result of drops in the tourist trade due to dirty beaches.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Water Charges

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what alternative methods of charging for water supply and sewerage disposal for domestic customers have been discussed between him and chairmen of water companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. Subject to the general supervision exercised by the Director General of Water Services, it is a matter for each water company to decide what methods of charging to adopt for its services before charging by rateable value is prohibited in the year 2000.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimated costs of installing meters in all properties now charged on rateable values.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No estimates have been prepared. The cost of installing meters depends on a variety of factors and in some cases installation may not prove practical without excessive cost. I understand that information on the costs of installing meters will be contained in the second interim report on the national metering trials which the water industry intends to publish early in July. The decision whether to install meters on a wide scale will be taken by each water company, in the light of all the circumstances in its area and under the general supervision of the Director General of Water Services.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's contribution to the water meter trials by area; and what is the total cost of each water meter trial.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest estimated cost of each metering trial and the Government's contribution to each trial is shown in the following table:

	Total cost £	Government contribution £
Isle of Wight (Southern Water)	16,133,000	7,394,000
Chandlers Ford (Southern Water)	124,700	62,350
Chorleywood (Rickmansworth Water Company)	220,000	nil
Briston-Hotwells (Bristol Waterworks Company)	331,300	165,650
Haling Park (Thames Water)	548,400	274,200
Bromsgrove (East Worcestershire Waterworks Company)	382,500	191,250
Brookmans Park (Lee Valley Water Company)	694,200	347,100
Turlin Moor (Wessex Water)	197,500	98,750
Broadstone (Wessex Water)	307,000	153,500
Camberley (Mid Southern Water Company)	319,600	159,800
Hutton Rudby (Northumbrian Water)	331,200	165,600
South Normanton (Yorkshire Water)	375,800	187,900

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with the Director General of Water Services to ensure that competition is assured in the provision of water services in Yorkshire and value for money is obtained by consumers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. The Water Act requires the director general, in carrying out his regulatory functions, to protect the interests of customers in respect of charges and other terms on which services are provided, to promote economy and efficiency on the part of appointed companies and to facilitate effective competition, subject to the primary duties to ensure that water and sewerage functions are properly carried out and that appointed undertakers can finance the proper carrying out of those functions.

In setting the initial charges limits for the companies the Secretary of State was subject to the same duties. He took account of the comparative efficiency of each company and incorporated target efficiency savings in the cost projections on which the charge limits were based.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider making adjustments to the payment of the uniform business rates to help with the loss of the former business rates paid to the town and parish councils; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from town and parish councils over the introduction of the community charge and the uniform business rate and their effects on financing local government; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he intends to take action to assist in the retention of town and parish councils where the reform of the business rate is having some effect on their future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has received many representations from town and parish councils about the introduction of the community charge and the uniform business rate, and about the effects on financing local government. District councils have powers to assist town and parish councils in meeting their costs. The new system means that all councils are now accountable to their charge payers for their decisions.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what evidence he has of evasion by hotels, guest houses and tourist accommodation of their obligations to pay the uniform business rate;

(2) if he has any plans to investigate the use of the fire certificate threshold of six letting bed spaces as a suitable starting point for imposition of the uniform business rate.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 June 1990]: I have no evidence of such evasion. I have received representations from home owners providing bed-and-breakfast accommodation for a more generous exemption than the 99-day maximum which currently operates: but others, particularly the hotel trade, believe that any exemption in this area could lead to unfair competition. The tourist authorities have represented that the existing exemption could lead to a shortening of the season in which some accommodation is available. We are considering these arguments and others that have been put to us.

River Quality

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the criteria used to determine river quality are identical throughout the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Member states each use different systems for monitoring and assessing river quality. A review of the various European systems prepared for the Department in 1987 included a comparison of the quality of European rivers according to the classification system in use in England and Wales. This showed that 95 per cent. of river length in the United Kingdom was of good or fair quality compared with 75 per cent. in the European Community as a whole. The review showed that no other member state bettered our position.

Disabled People (Employment)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the respective percentage of registered disabled persons who are employed by each urban development corporation.

Mr. Moynihan: At 1 April 1990, the percentage of registered disabled people employed by London Docklands development corporation was 0·7 per cent. and by Trafford Park development corporation 2·3 per cent. The other corporations currently employ no registered disabled people.

Sewage Discharges

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent of his programme to monitor the presence of viruses in sewage discharges; and what research is being undertaken to establish any possible health implications resulting from the presence of viruses in sewage discharges.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The monitoring of sewage discharges is a matter for the National Rivers Authority. The Department has commissioned research into the health effects of bathing in sea water, and the results are expected to be available soon.

Housing Action Trusts, Lambeth

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department intends to proceed with proposals for housing action trusts for the Angell and Loughborough estates in Lambeth.

Mr. Chope: No.

Shopping Facilities

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest guidance given to local planning authorities regarding the design of new shopping facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: Planning policy guidance note 6 sets out the Government's general planning policies for major retail development. My right hon. Friend's statement of 6 March, about standards of design for major new buildings, made it clear that considerations such as the density and bulk of a development, and its compatibility with its surroundings, may be relevant planning issues. Only exceptionally should planning authorities seek to control design details, if the sensitive character of the area or the particular building justifies it.

Sea Birds (Poisoning)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken to establish any possible adverse environmental impact resulting from the discharge into the sea from the north Norfolk coast of glycol; what permissions exist in respect of such discharges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The National Rivers Authority and the former Anglian water authority have undertaken extensive monitoring of discharges of glycol and a survey of the receiving waters off the north Norfolk coast over the past two years. The results have shown that the discharges are having no detectable impact on the North sea.

Details of discharge consents and information from routine monitoring of the discharges are held on the public registers maintained by the Anglian region of the National Rivers Authority, under the terms of the Water Act 1989.

Local Government (Legislation)

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Acts of Parliament made in each year from 1969 to 1989 which relate to (a) local government and (b) local government finance.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Public general Acts of Parliament between January 1969 and June 1979 which affect local authorities in England include

Local Government Grants (Social Need) Act 1969*
Mines and Quarries (Tips) 1969
Nuclear Installations Act 1969

Acts relating (at least in part) to local government finance are marked with an asterisk (*).

For Acts after June 1979 I refer the hon. Member to the answer of my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities to the hon. Member for Copeland on 4 May at columns 676-78.

Bathing Water Directives

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what beaches in Europe outside the United Kingdom are subject to legal proceedings for failing to meet the bathing water directives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that the Commission is pursuing legal proceedings against all member states except Portugal in respect of directive 76/160/EEC.

The Commission has powers under the EC treaty to take proceedings against individual member states which it considers are not complying with their obligations under the treaty. It is for the Commission to decide when to commence such legal proceedings.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor the effects of the community charge on grant aid to local voluntary organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government monitor the main categories of expenditure of local authorities, which this year will be affected by the introduction of the community charge and the level of charges, but the grant aid which local authorities provide to voluntary organisations is a matter for them to decide, not the Government.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the effects on grant aid to local voluntary organisations of local authorities not recovering the level of community charge anticipated when preparing their budget.

Mr. Chope: If authorities collect charges efficiently, there is no reason why the cash volume of arrears should be greater than under the rating system. There is no reason why local authorities, or those voluntary organisations which receive grant aid from local authorities, need be in any way disadvantaged in the way the right hon. Member implies.

Urban Programme

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all groups and organisations within the Sunderland borough council area that have received urban programme support in (a) 1989-90 and (b) 1990-91; and if he will identify the level of grant received in each case and any conditions attached.

Mr. Moynihan: I regret that the detailed information is not readily available to the Department. However, Sunderland borough council, as managers of the urban programme, should be able to provide the information requested direct to the hon. Member.

Builders and Decorators

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans for, or anticipates direction from the European Commission on plans for, a standard registration for all builders and decorators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no such proposals, nor does he anticipate any from the European Commission.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the protection available to individuals who receive unsatisfactory service from people purporting to be builders and decorators; and how this is likely to change after 1992.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982, in contracts for the supply of services, which would include building and decorating, the service must be carried out with reasonable care and skill. Any materials used must be of "merchantable quality", and fit for the job in hand. If the builder or decorator fails in these obligations, the law treats the matter as a breach of contract and the consumer may then look to him for redress through the courts. A number of trade associations operate insurance-backed guarantee schemes, offering protection for the individual against the "cowboy" builder. The Office of Fair Trading is also working with the industry to devise a model fair deal contract for small home improvement works and is examining how an industry-led body could carry out the assessment and approval of insurance-backed guarantee schemes.

The position would be unaffected by current proposals for the completion of the single European market.

Homelessness (Sunderland)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) families and (b) single people accepted as homeless within the borough of Sunderland area are at present in (i) bed-and-breakfast accommodation, (ii) other forms of temporary accommodation and (iii) of no fixed abode, and are in receipt of state benefits.

Mr. Chope: The latest available figures for the number of homeless households in bed-and-breakfast and other forms of temporary accommodation are for the end of December 1989. These appear in table 7 of "Local authorities" action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England; Results for the fourth quarter of 1989; Supplementary Tables", which is the Library.

The number of single people among the households accepted as homeless is not reported to the Department by local authorities and we have no estimates.

Statistics on the numbers of homeless people in temporary accommodation or of no fixed abode and in receipt of state benefits are not available centrally in the form requested.

Bottled Water

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responsibility his Department has for bottled drinking waters.

Mr. Trippier: Responsibility for regulating the quality of the two main categories of bottled waters—natural mineral water and artificially carbonated mineral or spring water—lies with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Responsibility for any other bottled water has hitherto fallen to the Secretary of State for the Environment, because my right hon. Friend has overall responsibility for EC directive 80/778 on the quality of water intended for human consumption.

The existence of separate legal and administrative regimes for different types of bottled water has inevitably caused confusion to producers, local authorities and the public. The current Food Safety Bill will make it possible to establish a single regime under the Food Acts and the food hygiene regulations for all types of bottled water. The Prime Minister has therefore agreed that the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in conjunction with the Agriculture Ministers in Wales and Scotland, and the Minister for Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland, should in future have ministerial responsibility for all types of bottled water.

Home Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of dwellings in each district in England are insulated to the standard recommended by his Department.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 6 June 1990]: Information at district level is not available. Nationally, we estimate that 90 per cent. of dwellings with accessible lofts have insulation and 15 per cent. of all dwellings have cavity wall insulation. The proportion which meet the higher standards of thermal insulation required by new building regulations, introduced in April this year, is not known.

Household Statistics

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total number of households in England and the numbers and percentages of those households which are (a) single-pensioner households, (b) other single-adult households, (c) two-adult households and (d) three or more adult households;

(2) what are the numbers and percentages of total households, broken down by sex and racial composition, of people living in (a) single-pensioner households, (b) other single-adult households, (c) two-adult households and (d) three or more adult households in England.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 13 June 1990]: The available estimates from the 1988 labour force survey are as follows:

Households by number of adults and sex and ethnic group of head of household: 1988 England

(a) Number of households (thousand)

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jonathan Moyle

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the death of Mr. Jonathan Moyle in Chile; whether any official of Her Majesty's Government has made a statement as to cause and nature of his death; and what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from Mr. Moyle's family.

The Prime Minister: The tragic death of Mr. Jonathan Moyle is under investigation by the Chilean authorities. Her Majesty's coroner for Exeter and East Devon has also opened an inquest. It would not therefore be appropriate for me to make a statement at this time. No official statement has been made by any Government Department or agency in London or by the British embassy in Santiago as to the cause of Mr. Moyle's death. Consular officials in London are in regular contact with Mr. Moyle's family.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria have been used since October 1989 when separating papers relating to Mr. Wallace's case between 10 Downing street, the Ministry of Defence, the Home Office and the Northern Ireland Office.

The Prime Minister: Departments are given copies of relevant papers.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the numbers of employees in each public organisation by the Fair Employment Agency's definition of Protestant and Roman Catholics in (a) the Omagh council area and (b) with a postcode BT79 for those companies or organisations on the fair employment register.

Mr. Needham: Of the 101 public authorities specified in the Fair Employment (Specification of Public Authorities) Order (NI) 1989, only two—Omagh district council and the Western education and library board—have registered addresses in Omagh. The number of employees in the former is 293 and in the latter 3,514.

The only public authorities with registered addresses with a postcode of BT79 are Omagh district council and the Western education and library board.

The Fair Employment Commission is not releasing information on community composition from individual monitoring returns at present.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish the Planning Appeals Commission's report on the public inquiry into the SIBEC (Scotland) Ltd., proposals for a shopping centre, food court and leisure facilities at Bloomfield road, Bangor; and if he will treat the matter as an issue of urgency.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Planning decisions on the applications submitted by SIBEC (Scotland) Ltd. were issued on 5 June 1990 and the report of the Planning Appeals Commission on the public inquiry is now available for public inspection or purchase. A copy of the report was sent to the hon. Gentleman for his information on 7 June.

Labour Statistics

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present level of unemployment in Londonderry city; and what were the corresponding figures in 1969, 1972, 1979 and 1985.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

	Numbers
April 1990 (latest available)	7,588
April 1985	9,070

Similar information is not available prior to 1984.

"Making Belfast Work"

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a list of the names and addresses of groups which have received money under the "Making Belfast Work" initiative since it was set up and the corresponding amount given to each group in the relevant financial years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 12 June 1990]: In view of the large amount of material to be collated, I will write to the hon. Member and place copies of the information in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Romania and Bulgaria

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he has to visit Romania; and what steps are being taken to promote trading opportunities there;

(2) what plans he has to visit Bulgaria; and what steps are being taken to promote trading opportunities there.

Mr. Redwood: At present, my right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Romania or Bulgaria. My Department promotes United Kingdom trade with both countries by providing companies with information about economic conditions and about specific business opportunities; by using joint commissions and other official contacts to find out as much as we can about local economic policies and priorities; and to support British companies pursuing significant business. I myself led a delegation to Romania in February 1990, and senior officials have recently visited Bulgaria.

Additionally, in Bulgaria, we are supporting trade promotion events such as the Plovdiv autumn fair; and we would support similar events in Romania.

Waste Minimisation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department has taken on waste minimisation in industry; how many staff are employed in this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Waste minimisation in industry is a key focus of my Department's environmental programme. In November 1989, the Department published a business guide to waste minimisation called "Cutting Your Losses". Some 29,000 copies of the booklet have been taken up so far. The Department and the Confederation of British Industry are currently running a series of regional seminars to inform businesses of the requirements of new legislation on waste and to promote waste minimisation.

The Department's environmental inquiry point at Warren Spring laboratory gives general advice to business on a range of environmental issues including waste minimisation; and smaller firms needing more detailed advice from consultants can receive assistance under the Department's consultancy initiatives. My Department is also assisting the development of new environmental technologies through a growing range of initiatives.

Separate figures for the amount of staff time devoted specifically to waste minimisation are not available, but the topic involves many members of the Department's environment task force and they also call upon assistance and advice, for example from the Department's research establishments and regional offices, as well as from external organisations.

Single Market

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give consideration to amending the terms of reference of the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of Britain's forthcoming membership of the single European market.

Mr. Redwood: The achievement of the single European market does not require changes in the statutory duties of the Director General of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The Fair Trading Act provisions allow the director and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to take account of competition from outside the United Kingdom—whether from in the Community or elsewhere—in looking at whether a merger would damage competition in the United Kingdom. Mergers with a Community dimension as defined by the EC merger control regulation will, from 21 September this year, be subject to examination by the European Commission. Under the regulation, mergers leading to or strengthening a dominant position and significantly impeding competition in the Common Market will be prohibited by the Commission. The director and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will retain their important competition responsibilities within the United Kingdom, including responsibility for mergers outside the scope of the regulation.

Harrods Bank

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to hear from the Bank of England regarding Harrods bank.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend hopes to hear from the bank before long.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on discussions between his Department and the Bank of England concerning the control of Harrods Bank Ltd.; and whether the Bank has been sent any recommendations for action since receiving the official investigation report in August 1988.

Mr. Redwood: My Department sent the report to the Bank of England in view of the Bank's regulatory responsibilities under the Banking Act.

It is for the bank alone to determine whether any action by it is required under that Act.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the members of the Financial Reporting Council, together with other relevant information as to their experience, directorships and partnerships.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his question on 5 June at column 435.

City Regulation

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's latest assessment of the effectiveness of City regulation.

Mr. Redwood: Regulation of investment business is for the most part the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board, which is the designated agency under the Financial Services Act 1986. Other aspects of City activity are regulated under other arrangements, such as the Insurance Companies Act 1982 and the Banking Act 1987. I am generally satisfied with this regulatory structure.

Overseas Trade

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to increase the profitability of overseas trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: It is for individual companies to consider how best to increase their profitability.

Packaging

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to encourage industry to reduce the amount of packaging used for products.

Mr. Forth: The promotion of waste minimisation in general is a key focus of my Department's environmental programme. The need to minimise packaging and, where essential packaging is concerned, to use materials which lend themselves to recycling, is being promoted through my Department's participation in relevant seminars and conferences and through meetings with representatives from the packaging industry.

In March, my Department was co-organiser with the Institute of Metals of an international conference which discussed all aspects of the design of products so as to avoid harm to the environment, including the minimisation of packaging. An example of a product designed with reduced packaging in mind is included in the booklet "Design for the Environment", which my Department has produced with assistance from the Design Council.

Caravans

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that all caravans meet fire safety standards.

Mr. Forth: The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations came into force, with respect to caravans, on 1 March 1990. Their enforcement is a matter for the trading standards departments of the local authorities, which have the necessary powers to inspect businesses selling caravans.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the cost to the caravan industry of complying with fire safety legislation in March 1990 instead of 1991.

Mr. Forth: The Department's cost compliance assessment of improving the fire safety in caravans by the introduction of the 1988 regulations estimated the cost to the industry to be between £3 million and £4 million per annum.

Public Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department takes to ensure that correspondence with firms and trade associations relating to public safety is received and acknowledged.

Mr. Forth: Every effort is made to send prompt replies to all letters asking questions, seeking information or raising issues about product safety. The views of a wide range of trade associations, consumer bodies and representative organisations are sought by the Department on matters relating to product safety. These views are always taken into account but not all such correspondence requires an individual response. If the hon. Member is concerned about a specific case, perhaps he would let me have the details so that I can investigate the matter.

Bank Accounts

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made on the implementation of the European Community's bank accounts directive.

Mr. Redwood: My Department intends to issue a consultative document before the recess inviting comments on draft regulations to implement the EC bank accounts directive. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The directive establishes common rules in relation to the content, valuation methods, audit and publication of the individual and consolidated accounts of banks and other financial institutions.

The consultative document will report on the responses to the consultative document issued on 31 July 1989, and will explain the decisions which have been taken on the scope of application of the directive and on the way in which the member state options it contains should be exercised. It will also explain that, in the light of the arguments presented in the responses to the consultative document issued last year, and the significant progress which has been made recently in the development of statements of recommended accounting practice (SORPs) and of an international accounting standard aimed at providing fuller disclosure in the accounts of banks and similar financial institutions, the Government have decided not to include disclosure requirements in the regulations which go beyond those in the directive but to leave the banking industry to develop its own response to the need for fuller disclosure. However, the consultative document will make it clear that, if there is undue delay in the preparation of appropriate SORPs, the option of legislating to impose such requirements will be reconsidered.

Iraq (Trade Losses)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the cost to public funds of payments made during the last three years to compensate creditors for losses in respect of trade to Iraq; and when the last such payment was actually made.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 8 June 1990]: I am replying to this question, since I believe that it relates to ECGD's operation.

It has been the policy of successive Governments not to publish details on individual countries arising from the operation of ECGD cover, not least since this could prejudice the position of the commercial parties involved.

Live Horses (Export)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy insofar as his Department's responsibilities are concerned not to allow the export of live horses to Europe for slaughter to start again.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is not responsible for the live export of horses to Europe, which is a matter for the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Hunterprint

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the company Hunterprint had, or has outstanding, any printing contracts for work associated with privatisations by his Department since 1983.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 11 June 1990]: Hunterprint has not been engaged as primary contractors for printing but may have been used as a subcontractor on DTI privatisations. However, this information is not available within the Department and to obtain it would be at disproportionate cost.

Trade in Services

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the proposed GATT framework agreement on trade in services; when he expects the European Community to reach a common position on this matter; and whether the Commission is insisting on the inclusion of financial services in the agreement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The Government attach a high priority to achieving, as part of the GATT Uruguay round, an agreement which will extend GATT rules and discipline to trade in services. The United Kingdom and the European Community are aiming for a comprehensive agreement, covering all service sectors, including financial services.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eastern Europe

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects supported by the eastern Europe know-how fund to date.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 14 March at column 236. The additional activities approved since then under the know-how fund are as follows:

Poland

- Consultancy assistance in advising on inward investment applications to the Foreign Investment Agency—£100,000.
- Four privatisation consultancies for the Privatisation Foundation—£1,600,000.
- Secondment of an accountant and secretary to the Privatisation Foundation—£112,000.
- Secondment of three expatriates to the Export Development Bank—£600,000.
- Audit studies of nine commercial banks—£200,000.
- Company doctor training for official and private sector participants—£350,000.
- Advanced corporate finance training for commercial bank staff—£15,000.
- Assistance with auditing standards and establishment of a professional body—£250,000.
- Advice on accountancy standards to the Accountancy Association of Poland—£15,000.
- Provision of accountancy books to university libraries and management training institutions—£275,000.
- Four workshops for accountants with particular reference to joint ventures—£137,000.
- Short-term industrial attachments with British companies in cooperation with the Confederation of British Industry—£270,000.
- Secondment of an adviser on financial markets to the Ministry of Finance—£100,000.
- Assistance to the Ministries of Industry and Finance for industrial restructuring—£300,000.
- Four consultancies in the energy sector looking at the economic restructuring of the hard coal, oil and gas, lignite and electricity sectors, and a study on gas pricing —£1,600,000.
- Management training for Polish railways—£150,000.

Hungary

- Secondment of two staff to the State Property Agency—£350,000.
- Management training course for the National Savings Bank—£55,000.
- Small enterprise development project managed by B'nai B'rith—£150,000.
- Short-term attachments by all 14 State Secretaries—£35,000.

Czechoslovakia

- Follow-up visit by Czechoslovak employment officials—£8,000.
- Seminar attended by Czechoslovak environmental officials —£13,000.
- Health workshops for Civil Forum and the Ministry of Health—£13,000.
- Study tour of Czechoslovak social security officials—£4,000.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answers of 6 June to the questions by the hon. Member for Sunderland, South on income support, what information is maintained at (a) national and (b) sub-national level on the numbers of, and expenditure on, people on income support living in private residential care.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on all income support claimants is collected by way of quarterly and annual 1 per cent. samples of live cases in each local office. This method means that, for the small population of claimants in homes, reliable information is limited to numbers of claimants and expenditure at national level. Reliable data on claimant numbers at regional level can be obtained from averages of a number of quarterly surveys.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answers of 6 June to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South on severe disablement allowance, what information is maintained at (a) national and (b) sub-national level on numbers in receipt of the severe disablement allowance.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on severe disablement allowance is maintained as follows:

A return is made every calendar month by each local office producing a figure comprising the number of claimants to the benefit and including those cases where final action is still outstanding although benefit has ceased. These figures are collated regionally and nationally.

Additional statistics based on a 1 per cent. sample of cases, are produced once a year for Great Britain and for standard statistical regions. Reliable figures cannot be produced for any smaller geographical area.

For completeness, pursuant to my reply on 6 June, I would add that information on recipients of the income support severe disability premium is maintained at a national and regional level.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 6 June to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South on attendance allowance, what information is maintained at (a) national and (b) sub-national level on the numbers in receipt of attendance allowance and payments from the independent living fund.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No information is maintained at (a) national and (b) sub-national level on numbers in receipt of both attendance allowance and payments from the independent living fund.

Pensions

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be able to make a statement in the light of the outcome of the Barber case on pension ages, in the European Court.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 21 May at column 10.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many nuclear test veterans have made claims for pensions; how many have been awarded; how many have been rejected; and how many are still under consideration.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Records show that 248 claims for war pension have been made by ex-service men, or the widows or dependants of ex-service men who participated in the United Kingdom nuclear weapons test programme. Most, but not all, of these were for disablement or death resulting from alleged exposure to ionising radiation. Fourteen claims are still under consideration. The war pensions scheme provides for pensions where there is reliable evidence which raises a reasonable doubt that a condition is caused or aggravated by service or that death was due to or substantially hastened by service. It is accepted that the evidence raises such a doubt in the case of participants who have contracted leukaemia (excluding chronic lymphatic leukaemia) or multiple myeloma. Two war disablement pensions and eight war widows' pensions have been awarded as a result.

Child Benefit

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be (a) the gross and (b) the net cost of raising child benefit in a full financial year in line with the rise in tax thresholds in between 1989-90 to 1990-91 uprated according to the statutory formula.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The costs would be about £345 million gross and £260 million net.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on present policy towards compensation for repetitive strain injury; and what changes are being considered.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Two forms of upper limb disorder caused by repetitive movements are included in the list of prescribed diseases allowing entitlement to industrial injuries benefits:

Cramp of the hand or forearm due to repetitive movements—in any occupation involving prolonged periods of handwriting, typing or other repetitive movements of the fingers, hand or arm.

Traumatic inflammation of the tendons of the hand or forearm, or the associated tendon sheaths—in any occupation involving manual labour, or frequent or repeated movements of the hand or wrist.

The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, who advise the Secretary of State on matters relating to the industrial injuries scheme, announced on 5 June a study to review all new evidence which has become available since 1986 on the occupational causation of upper limb disorders.

Family Benefits

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving family credit or income support in (a) Wales as a whole, (b) each county in Wales and (c) each district council area in Wales.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 18 May at column 568. Income support information is only available by social security region, or for Wales as a whole. At November 1989, some 253,000 claimants in Wales were in receipt of income support.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Research and Development

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out the procedures and criteria for deciding priorities when allocating funds for scientific and technological research and development in Europe.

Mr. Jackson: Funds from the science budget are not specifically allocated for the support of European scientific research. From the resources made available to them annually, however, research councils and other agencies expend substantial sums on collaborative research within Europe. Decisions on priorities will generally reflect the scientific judgments of those involved. In reaching decisions in individual cases account is likely to be taken of a range of factors including the added value likely to be achievable from particular collaborative arrangements; their complementarity to domestic research priorities; their scope for improving the quality of European science; the likelihood of technology transfer; the pursuit of research goals requiring study of trans-border issues; and the extent to which the costs and risks of large-scale investment may be shared.

Retirement (Ill Health)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many ill health retirements took place in maintained further and higher education for each academic year from September 1979 to August 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Teachers (Further Education)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many full-time teachers aged (a) less than 30 years, (b) 30 to 39 years, (c) 40 to 49 years, (d) 50 to 59 years and (e) 60 years and above were employed in maintained further and higher education for each academic year from September 1979 to August 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Jackson: The numbers and age distribution of full-time teachers in establishments of further and higher education maintained by local education authorities in England and Wales are given in the table.

January	Total number	Percentage aged
		Under 30	30 to 39	40 to 49	50 to 59	60 and over
1980	77,941	7·1	30·6	33·4	24·7	4·2
1981	77,465	6·1	30·9	33·0	25·4	4·6
1982	77,378	5·6	31·4	32·7	25·7	4·6
1983	79,036	5·4	31·6	32·8	25·6	4·6
1984	79,852	5·2	31·1	33·4	25·7	4·6
1985	80,408	5·0	30·4	34·4	25·6	4·6
1986	80,288	4·9	30·2	34·9	25·7	4·3
1987	80,776	4·5	28·5	36·8	25·9	4·3
1988	82,167	[1]	[1]	[1]	[1]	[1]
1989	81,538	[1]	[1]	[1]	[1]	[1]

[1] Not yet available.

Note: All figures include lecturers in establishments now funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council.

Building Programmes

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much public money has been spent in real terms on major building programmes in maintained further and higher education for each academic year from September 1979 to August 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Jackson: The information (by financial rather than academic year) is as follows:

Capital expenditure on maintained further and higher education (1979-80 prices)

	£ million
1979-80	82·2
1980-81	108·2
1981-82	76·4
1982-83	88·7
1983-84	84·4
1984-85	87·4
1985-86	88·5
1986-87	94·1
1987-88	73·5
1988-89	76·8

The figures refer to gross capital expenditure in England, and include expenditure from the urban programme.

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mrs. Rumbold: The studies conducted during the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 were as follows:

1986-87
Arthur Young—Financial Management
Deloitte, Haskins and Sells—Audit Management

1987-88
CCTA—Education Information Study
Coopers and Lybrand—Financial Delegation to schools
Peat Marwick McClintock—Review of Inspection reports
Research Services—Undergraduate income and expenditure survey
Deloitte, Haskins and Sells—Financial Management advice and assistance to the UGC
Spicer and Pegler—Review of accounting procedures at one of the grant aided bodies

1988-89
Ernst Whinney—Management of HMI travelling and subsistence
Peat Marwick McClintock—Resource Management
ITS Ltd—Training review
Coopers Lybrand—Management framework
Deloitte, Haskins and Sells—Financial Management of UGC

1989-90
Peat Marwick McClintock—Financial management survey of SERC
Peat Marwick McClintock—Student loans
Price Waterhouse—Student loans
PAS Limited—Parent awareness survey

It is not possible to state the amount paid in respect of each consultancy without breach of commercial confidentiality. The total cost was £23,200 in 1986-87; £255,413 in 1987-88; £153,939 in 1988-89 and £332,502 in 1989-90. The results of these studies where appropriate have been implemented. Details of studies undertaken in previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Scientific Research

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he intends to implement the recommendation of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils that higher education institutes should receive an extra £259 million for additional equipment to support current scientific research and an extra £200 million for equipment to initiate new scientific research;

(2) what are his latest estimates of the cost of additional equipment necessary for higher education institutes to (a) support current levels of scientific research and (b) initiate new scientific research.

Mr. Jackson: The "Survey of Academic Research Equipment in the United Kingdom" commissioned by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils and published in November 1989 identified the equipment needs of universities and polytechnics. The advice which the ABRC offered my right hon. Friend last year on the Government's expenditure plans for the science budget took into account these needs.

The increases to the science budget announced on 15 November included substantial provision for expenditure on equipment in higher education institutions via the science budget, the UFC and the PCFC.

The funding requirements for the science base, including equipment needs, will of course be reviewed again in this year's survey in the usual way.

Governing Bodies

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to repeat the survey on the composition of governing bodies; and how many business men or women without connections with the education world are members of governing bodies.

Mrs. Rumbold: The third in a series of surveys, currently being conducted by the National Foundation for Educational Research, will provide further information about the composition of school governing bodies. The results will be available in the autumn. The second survey in the series, conducted last year, showed that over 40 per cent. of working governors, other than heads and elected teacher representatives, came from business or the professions.

John Ball School

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of Regina v. London Borough of Greenwich ex parte the governors of John Ball school.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from local authorities following the judgment in the case to which my hon. Friend refers. These have been carefully considered.

Mr. Evenett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the Education Act 1980 in the light of the judgment in Regina v. London Borough of Greenwich ex parte the governors of John Ball school.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is not at present contemplating a change in the law following the judgment in the case to which my hon. Friend refers.

Licensed and Articled Teachers

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the local education authorities participating in (a) the licensed teacher schemes and (b) the articled teacher schemes, with the number of trainees in every case, and the estimated cost per place, together with an estimate of the cost of training, by postgraduate, of certificate of education and bachelor of education route.

Mrs. Rumbold: Licensed teachers are appointed by local education authorities and schools to specific posts, and the nature and the cost of the training to be provided will depend on the needs of the individual teachers appointed.

The training costs of licensed teachers are eligible for support under the local education authorities training grants scheme. Table A lists the local education authorities which are to receive support for licensed teacher training and associated costs in the financial year 1990-91. The amount of eligible expenditure to be supported, the number of licensed teachers expected to be supported and the average training costs implied by this for the financial year are also shown in each case. However, local education authorities and schools may appoint licensed teachers beyond these.

Consortia of local education authorities and initial teacher training institutions were invited to submit bids to run articled teacher pilot schemes in June 1989. The number of places allocated to successful consortia is listed in table B, together with the participating local education authorities and the estimated costs per student.

The annual cost of PGCE and BEd places varies considerably from institution to institution. For the 1991-92 academic year the guide price for initial teacher training places applied by the UFC is £3,500, which includes the tuition fee but excludes any research costs. Institutions in the PCFC sector have been advised that, as an upper reference point, the mean unit of funding in 1990-91 is £1,950 and that they should assume that they will receive through the tuition fee £2,500 for a band 2 student (which includes PGCE students and some BEd students) and £1,675 for a band 1 student. Both the UFC and the PCFC sector figures exclude provision for student maintenance.

1. Costs are incurred for two academic years.
2. Figures exclude institutional funding from the UFC and PCFC which will be based on 0·5 of a full-time equivalent place each year.
3. 65 per cent. of the costs will be met from the LEA Training Grants Scheme; the other 35 per cent. will come from LEAs.
4. The cost of the bursary per student, over the two year training period is £13,000 in London and £11,000 elsewhere.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teachers in which local education authority areas have been declared redundant as a consequence of the introduction of local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available. Where there have been reports of possible teacher redundancies, it is by no means clear that these would be solely a consequence of the introduction of local management of schools rather than a reflection of the constant process of adjustment that has always been necessary as the circumstances of individual schools change over time.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what data are collected by his Department about the consequences of local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is collecting budget information for 1990-91 from statements prepared by each LEA under section 42 of the Education Reform Act. Information on actual expenditure in 1990-91 will also be collected from outturn statements, prepared under the same section. We are monitoring and reviewing all aspects of the effects of local management with the help of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools.

Higher Education Expenditure

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was (a) recurrent and (b) capital spending by the Government on (a) universities, (b) polytechnics and (c) colleges of further education for each year since 1978-79 in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms, indexed so that 1978-79 = 100.

Mr. Jackson [holding reply 11 June 1990]: The information for universities covered by the University Grants Committee and, from April 1989, by the Universtities Funding Council, is as follows (real terms figures are derived using the GDP deflator):

Financial year	Recurrent		Capital
	Cash £'000s	Real terms	Cash £'000s	Real terms
1978-79	612,599	—	79,304	—
1979-80	741,190	634,622	101,370	86,795
1980-81	956,464	691,997	110,598	80,017
1981-82	982,335	647,316	116,308	76,642
1982-83	1,193,333	733,413	118,926	73,091
1983-84	1,240,179	728,217	117,616	69,063
1984-85	1,272,416	707,007	119,195	66,230
1985-86	1,302,752	691,686	132,688	70,450
1986-87	1,341,817	689,021	145,465	74,696
1987-88	1,490,175	726,267	144,106	70,233
1988-89	1,608,497	731,818	157,457	71,638
1989-90	1,711,604	726,968	179,247	76,131

It is not possible to disaggregate from other local education authority expenditure that element which represents recurrent or capital expenditure on colleges of further education or polytechnics which were or are funded by local authorities.

WALES

Beef

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the need for direct governmental assistance towards additional promotion of the sale of beef; and what has been his Department's response.

Mr. David Hunt: This issue was discussed at a recent meeting between the Farmers Union of Wales and my Department.

Promotion of the sale of beef is a matter for the Meat and Livestock Commission, whose promotional activities are supported by the industry itself.

Housing Improvement Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he sent to local authorities in Wales draft application forms for housing improvement grants under the new legislation which comes into force on 1 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Application forms for the new renovation grant regime are included in the Application for Grant (Prescribed Forms and Particulars) Regulations 1990, which will be laid before the House shortly. Copies will be placed in the Library and will be sent to all housing authorities.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received concerning the poll tax since its introduction in April; and how many of these have been (a) in support of and (b) opposed to the new system.

Mr. David Hunt: Between 1 April and 8 June 339 letters have been received from members of the public and 239 letters from hon. Members on behalf of constituents. These have covered a wide range of issues concerning the community charge. Many have sought information or explanation about particular aspects of the new arrangements as they affect individuals. No meaningful analysis along the lines requested by the hon. Gentleman can be provided.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to advertise in the press in Wales the method of transitional relief operational in Wales for poll tax payers, and to counteract the incorrect impression given by advertisements placed in English newspapers, relating to the different transitional relief system operational only in England.

Mr. David Hunt: No Government advertisements have conveyed an incorrect impression of the Welsh transitional relief scheme. In Wales transitional relief does not have to be claimed. The appropriate reductions have been made by the local authorities concerned.

School Meals

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many and what percentage of children took school meals in 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the number and percentage of free school meals provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: In September 1988, the latest year for which information is available, the number and percentage of pupils provided with school meals in maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in Wales were as follows:

	Pupils
Number of pupils provided with free school meals	59,802
as a percentage of all pupils on roll	14·6
Total number of pupils taking school meals	213,341
as a percentage of all pupils on roll	52·0

Local education authorities are empowered to provide at their discretion refreshment and facilities for the consumption of refreshments in the middle of the day for pupils in schools maintained by them. The Social Security Act 1986 requires that pupils whose parents are or who themselves are in receipt of income support should receive such provision free of charge.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average price of a school meal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: The average price of school meals in primary schools in September 1989 was 68p. It is not possible to give a figure for secondary schools as most operate a cash cafeteria system.

Coed Mawr Site, Bangor

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether proceeds from the sale of the Coed Mawr offices site at Bangor are included in the former financial plans of Gwynedd health authority.

Mr. Grist: No.

Arthritis

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of arthritis sufferers in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available centrally.

Rheumatologists

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many rheumatologists are employed by each of the health authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Grist: The information which relates to consultants with a main specialty of rheumatology is given in the table:

Numbers of consultants in post

Health Authority	Whole time equivalent
Clwyd	0·9
East Dyfed	0·1
Gwent	—
Gwynedd	—
Mid Glamorgan	2·0
Pembrokeshire	—
Powys	—
South Glamorgan	2·5
West Glamorgan	2·0
Wales	[1]7·5

[1]Provisional figures for September 1989.

The level of staff and resources for rheumatology services in Wales is an operational matter for the district health authorities to determine.

Job Creation, Fishguard

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what special measures he intends taking to create jobs in the Fishguard, Pembrokeshire area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: There already exists a range of measures which are helping to reduce unemployment and create jobs in the Fishguard area. The fact that unemployment in the Fishguard travel-to-work area fell by 122—two percentage points—in the year to April 1990 is evidence that this policy is working.

Bypasses

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many bypasses in Wales are currently under construction; how many further ones are planned before the year 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: Seven are under construction and 25 planned schemes are included in "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s". Bypass schemes identified as a result of route studies are likely to be added to the forward programme.

Beach Pollution

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that local authorities in Wales have the resources to maintain up-to-date information on pollution levels on beaches in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Provision is made for local government's environmental protection responsibilities in the annual local authority revenue settlements and is thus reflected in standard spending assessments for revenue support grant purposes.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to arrange the display of information on beaches in Wales to show accurately the level of pollution recorded for such beaches.

Mr. Grist: Although it is for local authorities to determine whether and how to display information on bathing waters, we shall be encouraging them to make the information more readily accessible.

Ophthalmic Clinics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many attendances at ophthalmic clinics were recorded in the last quarter of 1989 in each district health authority area in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The total ophthalmology out-patient attendances recorded in NHS hospitals is given in table:

Total attendances during quarter ended December 1989

Health authority	Number
Clwyd	7,565
East Dyfed	5,072
Gwent	6,111
Gwynedd	4,564
Mid Glamorgan	7,483
Pembrokeshire	1,685
Powys	690
South Glamorgan	7,710
West Glamorgan	6,556

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children aged under 16 years received free eye tests in Wales (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: The data requested were not collected centrally prior to 1 April 1989, since when they have been collected on a six-monthly basis.

The available information is given in the table.

Estimated[1] number of sight tests paid for by family practitioner committees

Six months ending:	Children aged under 16
30 September 1989	36,680
31 March 1990	41,950

[1] Estimates based upon a 2 per cent. sample of all such sight tests.

Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his parliamentary answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 454, regarding teacher wastage, if he will provide, in a form similar to table 1, information on wastage among teachers of Welsh.

Mr. Roberts: Information on teacher wastage by subject taught is not available.

Youth Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list those managing organisations of youth training schemes in Wales which submitted proposals for the future development of youth training in response to the request last year by the Training Agency in Wales.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has of the number of young people, under the youth training scheme, pursuing training in (a) engineering, (b) advanced motor vehicle maintenance and (c) science in 1989; and how many young people are expected to pursue such courses in the year following the issuing of new contracts for managing organisations in Wales.

Mr. Roberts [holding answer 8 June 1990]: The Training Agency's estimates are set out in the following table:

TEC area	Engineering		Motor vehicle trades		Science
	Filled places YTS at 30 March 1990	YT contract	Filled places YTS at 30 March 1990	YT contract	Filled places YTS at 30 March 1990	YT contract

North West Wales	192	116	159	179	11	55
Gwent	376	452	215	314	2	132

Notes:

1. Figure for Mid, South Glamorgan and West Wales are based on Training Occupational Classifications (TOCs) throughout.
2. Figures for Gwent, Powys, NE Wales and NW Wales based on TOCs for occupancy at 31 March 1990 and Standard Occupational Classifications (SOCs) for YT contracted places.
3. Specific information on Advance Motor Vehicle Maintenance is not held, but Training Agency Area Offices confirm that demand for training at this level can be met through the network of providers contracted for Youth Training.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate his Department has of (a) the expenditure on youth training in (i) 1988-89, (ii) 1989-90, (iii) 1990-91, (iv) 1991-92 and (v) 1992-93, (b) the number of school leavers aged 16 and 17 years entering the market, (c) the numbers joining YTS or YT and (d) the gross public cost in pounds per trainee week, in each of those years.

Mr. Roberts [holding answer 8 June 1990]: Expenditure on youth training in Wales for 1988-89 and 1989-90 in respect of those places contracted by YTS providers with local area offices was £52·610 million and £50·746 million respectively. Additionally, it is estimated that a further £10 million of expenditure per year is spent on youth training in Wales through the Training Agency's national providers unit which contracts with large companies with outlets throughout the United Kingdom. For 1990-91 planned expenditure in respect of those places contracted by YT providers with local area offices is £45·750 million. Figures are not available for future years.

The number of 16 and 17-year-olds leaving school in Wales in the school years 1988-89 and 1989-90 was 30,200 and 29,000 respectively. For future school years, the estimate is 28,000 in 1990-91, 26,900 in 1991-92 and 26,500 in 1992-93. These figures refer to all school leavers and not just those entering the labour market, for whom separate figures are not available.

The numbers joining YTS in the 1988-89 and 1989-90 financial years was 18,758 and 17,781 respectively. For 1990-91, the provisional estimate for those entering youth training is 17,300. No figures are available for future financial years.

Figures on the gross public cost in pounds per trainee week are not available for Wales. Figures for Great Britain for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90 were £49 and £50 respectively. For future years the Great Britain estimate is £42 for 1990-91, £37 for 1991-92 and £33 for 1992-93.

HEALTH

Blood Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the first known sero-conversion to HIV took place in a person with haemophilia as a result of using English factor concentrates.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally. The routine reporting of HIV infection in haemophiliacs to the public health laboratory service communicable diseases surveillance centre does not cover the country of origin of factor concentrate.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of factor VIII concentrates were imported into the United Kingdom from United States-based pharmaceutical companies each year between 1979 and 1985 and the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will list the pharmaceutical companies involved, along with their share of the market.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all known forms of disease and infection which his medical and scientific advisers consider may have some connection with toxic waste incineration, and in particular relating to all forms of dioxins which may be created by the incineration process.

Mr. Dorrell: Emissions of toxic compounds, including dioxins, from hazardous waste incinerators, are restricted to levels well below that which might be expected to cause harmful effects. Studies conducted in the United Kingdom have found no evidence of an unusual incidence of disease around such incinerators, nor is there evidence that human disease or infection has resulted from dioxins arising from the process of toxic waste incineration.

The independent expert Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products, and the Environment (COT) reviewed the extensive toxicity data on dioxins, and this review was published in "Dioxins in the Environment", (pollution paper No. 27 1989), a copy of which is available in the Library. The report describes a range of effects, such as chloracne, following massive accidental dioxins exposures, as well as those described in animal experiments using high exposures over a long period of time.

The COT noted that the available data on the toxic effects of dioxins in human health are, on the whole, reassuring. However, the COT recommended action to identify sources and control emissions of dioxins, in order to reduce human exposure. The Government have therefore extended rigorous controls, on combustion conditions and emissions, to all incinerators, which should reduce dioxin emissions from such sources by up to 90 per cent.

Distinction Awards

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply of 23 April, Official Report, column 28, what is the salary of the chairman of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards; and if he will give a breakdown of the committee members' expenses; what are the number of consultants who hold awards,, and the number of consultant obstetricians or paediatricians who have held awards in the North West Durham health authority since the advent of medical and management audit; and how often the chairman and vice-chairman of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards have met those consultants who do not hold awards.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I regret that the figure given for committee members' expenses was incorrect in my reply to the hon. Member on 23 April at column 28. The correct figure for the year ended 31 March 1989 is £15,552. This is broken down as follows:

Overnight subsistence, travel, miscellaneous expenses for the visits by the Chairman and Vice-Chairman to the 15 Regional Committees	4,102
Chairman's secretarial expenses	2,976
Travelling expenses of members of the Advisory Committee	164
Subsistence and travel of members of the 15 Regional C awards and higher awards Committees, and of the Dental Sub-Committee	8,310

The salary of the chairman of the Advisory Committee on Distinction Awards was £11,990 in 1988-89. Following a review of the responsibilities of the post, the salary was increased to £21,450 in 1989-90.

In England and Wales 5,698 consultants currently hold a distinction award. As previously stated, statistics on awards by district health authority are not maintained centrally.

About 11,000 consultants do not hold an award. It would not be practicable for the chairman and vice-chairman to meet non-award holders collectively or individually. However, it is open to any consultant to submit a case for an award to the chairman or relevant regional committee.

Clinical Standards Advisory Group

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from which quarters he will draw his appointments for members of the clinical standards advisory group.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Membership of the group will be from nominations made by medical, midwifery and nursing royal colleges.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the intended role of the clinical standards advisory group; and what is his Department's definition of the term clinical in this instance.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is described in the Government's amendment No. 198 to the National Health Service and Community Care Bill debated in another place on Tuesday 12 June at columns 245-46.

Medical Services, North-East Thames

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report from the North East Thames regional medical advisory committee about reductions in medical services caused by financial pressures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand that North East Thames regional health authority is working with the regional medical advisory committee to consider the current provision of medical services across the region.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate the number of (a) twin, (b) triplet, (c) quadruplet and (d) quintuplet pregnancies occurring through (i) IVF, (ii) GIFT and (iii) other forms of assisted reproduction during 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The figures requested are not available for 1989. Data relating to multiple pregnancies following IVF treatment and GIFT for earlier years are given in the annual reports of the Interim Licensing Authority (copies of which are available in the Library) which was set up jointly by the Medical Research Council and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists.

Serious Illness

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to investigate ways in which the families of individuals who are seriously ill can be given better financial security.

Mr. Dorrell: Life-threatening illnesses vary greatly in the speed with which they need to be treated in order to avert the threat. The National Health Service is founded on the principle that help should be given most rapidly to those patients whose condition requires the earliest clinical intervention. That will always be its objective.

Population Density

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current population density in thousands per square mile for each of the English district health authorities.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest available population estimates for district health authorities, relating to mid-1988, have been published in OPCS monitor PPI 89/1 (revised), a copy of which is available in the Library. Information about the area of each authority is not kept centrally.

Disability

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has had from the North Regional Association for the Blind; what reply he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received a letter from the association suggesting that ophthalmologists may no longer be eligible for a fee for examining blind and partially sighted people for the purposes of registration with the local authority. This suggestion is wholly unfounded. There has been no change in the terms and conditions for payment of this fee. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will respond to the association shortly.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations the Minister of State has received from Crossroads Care; what replies he is sending; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of letters about the future role of Crossroads care schemes in the light of community care proposals. We have a high regard for the work of the organisation, whose central administrative costs we fund at the level of £80,000 a year. We anticipate that Crossroads will continue to make an important contribution in the years ahead.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appreciation certificates were issued by South West Thames regional health authority in respect of the ambulance dispute; to whom were they issued; and how much they cost.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the South West Thames regional health authority. The hon. Member way wish to contact the chairman, Baroness Cumberlege, for the information he requires.

Social Workers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to improve social service workers' knowledge of social work law.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work receives funding from the Department for a programme of improvements in social work training. This currently includes a project aimed at improving the quality and effectiveness of the teaching and learning of relevant law. This includes the definition and assessment of legal competence in a social work practitioner, and the elaboration of the CCETSW's requirements in relation to the law for all social work courses, particularly the new diploma in social work programmes. In addition the CCETSW's routine approval and monitoring of qualifying courses pays particular attention to the teaching of law.

Leukaemia

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking in respect of its Leukaemia Research Fund's report entitled "Leukaemia and Lymphoma: an Atlas of Distribution in parts of England and Wales", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received from the independent Leukaemia Research Fund its report entitled "Leukaemia and Lymphoma: an Atlas of Distribution in parts of England and Wales", and we have given copies to members of the expert independent Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment for information. COMARE will no doubt wish to take account of this database, together with other relevant epidemiological studies, in pursuing the programme of work outlined by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 10 January at columns 662-63.

Milk

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the present retail market share of various infant milk formulations; and if he will distinguish separately those using products containing soya, giving their aluminium content.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Soya-based infant formulae have been analysed for aluminium content by my Department. The content was in the range of 0·64–1·34 mg/litre, with a mean of 0·98 mg/litre. These results, which have been published in the scientific literature, are similar to those reported by other research workers. It is not our policy to disclose information by brand name. The Department of Health's independent Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has considered this Department's results and has advised that no action is needed to reduce aluminium from infant formulae.

HIV

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in England, the number of persons infected with HIV; and if he will separately distinguish these numbers by age.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The number of reports of cases of HIV infection to 31 March 1990 is 11,638. The following table shows the totals reported by age and health authority to the Public Health Laboratory Service communicable diseases surveillance centre. In line with the procedure followed in reports under the AIDS (Control) Act, and to safeguard confidentiality, actual figures in the range of one to nine diagnosed in individual regional health authorities are not published. These are indicated by [1]—.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown by regional health authority area of the incidence of confirmed cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease for each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 12 June 1990]: Accurate information on numbers of cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease is not at present available. The study to be conducted by Dr. R. G. Will, with support from the Department of Health, will attempt to gather together this information from the recent past, as well as making arrangements to collect it in future.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Beith: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many prayers relating to statutory instruments which have been tabled during the current Session have not so far been debated either on the Floor of the House or in Committee and how many of these undebated prayers have been the subject of representations seeking that they should be debated, including representations by letter and by means of a business question.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Up to and including Tuesday 5 June 1990, 127 prayers relating to statutory instruments had been tabled this Session. (This total does not include motions to similar effect relating to S.I.s and other laid papers, eg motions for disapproval, withdrawal, revocation or that drafts be not made in the form submitted.) Fourteen instruments with prayers against them have been debated on the Floor of the House, and 11 have been debated in Standing Committee. Two revocation motions relating to previously prayed against instruments have been taken on the Floor of the House, one such instrument has been debated in Standing Committee and one stands referred to a Committee. (In addition, one instrument stands referred to a Standing Committee under a revocation motion and a business motion, although it had not previously been prayed against.)

It is not possible separately to identify how many undebated prayers have been the subject of representations without incurring disproportionate costs.

Vote Bundle

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what saving he estimates would be made to public funds if written and oral questions were not reprinted in the Vote bundle after appearing for the first time.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is estimated that savings to public funds of between £1 million and £2 million could arise. It is not possible to be more precise, since a radical change of this nature would require a fundamental review of how the relatively fixed costs of HMSO's parliamentary press are recovered in the pricing of various documents produced for the House.

ENERGY

Spent Magnox Fuel

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement on the safety assessment of the storage of Magnox spent fuel in ponds at Sellafield;

(2) what recent assessment he has made of the safety and appropriateness of storage in ponds of spent Magnox fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The safe storage of spent Magnox fuel, at nuclear licensed sites, is a matter for the site operators who must satisfy the licensing requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

The NII carries out regular inspections of the storage facilities. Arrangements to ensure their safety include the provision of safety assessment cases by the operator for review by the NII.

With regard to Sellafield, the NII reviewed and was satisfied with the safety assessment case prepared by British Nuclear Fuels plc for the Magnox storage facilities in the new fuel handling plant (B311) before it became operational in 1988. The most recent safety case for the older storage pond (B30) was received by the NII at the end of 1989 and is currently being assessed.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what publications, and in what numbers, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has produced for educational distribution on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in preparation for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty fourth review conference in August and September of the current year.

Mr. Baldry: I am not aware of any such publications.

Nuclear Materials

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has agreed the criteria adopted by the safeguards authorities of the International Atomic Energy Agency to define significant quantities of nuclear materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The definition of a significant quantity of a particular nuclear material is given in paragraph 107 of the IAEA safeguards glossary 1987 edition [Ref. IAEA/SG/INF/1 (Rev.1)], a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. This definition is accepted by the member states of the IAEA, including the United Kingdom.

Radioactive Waste Storage (Sellafield)

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what countries currently have contracts with British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. for the storage of radioactive waste at Sellafield.

Mr. Baldry: British Nuclear Fuels plc does not have contracts purely to store radioactive waste. BNFL has contracts to reprocess spent fuel from overseas utilities in Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland. Since 1976, BNFL's overseas reprocessing contracts have contained options for the return of wastes arising. The Government intend that such options should be exercised and that wastes should be returned.

Rural Electricity Supplies

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what grant or other aid is available for rural householders or farmers seeking to have a main electricity supply installed.

Mr. Baldry: I do not believe that arrangements for rural supplies require financial assistance by the Government.

Under the new arrangements for post privatisation those requesting a supply do have the right of appeal to the director general if they feel that connection costs quoted by a supply company are unreasonable.

Plutonium

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the isotopic composition of the Central Electricity Generating Board/South of Scotland Electricity Board origin plutonium sold, or currently leased, by Nuclear Electric or Scottish Nuclear to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for fast reactor research and development since 1969.

Mr. Baldry: The plutonium supplied to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority by the utilities for the fast reactor research and development programme is mostly plutonium 239 in a variety of concentrations up to 80 per cent.

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 409, if he will give the appropriate figures for the savings in (a) gas and (b) solid fuels (i) in absolute terms and (ii) as percentages of total consumption if the same range of insulation measures were applied.

Mr. Peter Morrison: If all cost-effective insulation measures (as listed in my answer to the hon. Member on 12 June) were applied to the United Kingdom housing stock, a saving of 272·1 PJ of gas and 64·8 PJ of solid fuel might be achieved. This represents approximately 14 per cent. of the gas and a similar proportion of the solid fuel consumed under boilers, kilns and furnaces and in other heating appliances in the United Kingdom.

As indicated in my response of 5 June, householders are likely to opt, at least in part, for greater warmth rather than simply saving energy.

Offshore Supplies Office

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will clarify the role of the offshore supplies office post-1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: After 1992, the Offshore Supplies Office will be responsible for ensuring fair opportunity for the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry in the home, European and overseas markets. It will continue to support the development of new technology on the United Kingdom continental shelf and promote United Kingdom exports to international oil and gasfield markets.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specific actions have been taken by the United Kingdom in pursuit of its obligations under article VI of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

We and our NATO allies fully support negotiations aimed at balanced and verifiable arms control agreements, which aim to enhance security at lower levels of forces. We are currently involved in negotiations aimed at reducing conventional forces in Europe, and welcome the prospect of a START agreement between the United States and Soviet Union.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1985 to reduce their stocks of nuclear weapons in accordance with the provisions of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since the United States and Soviet Union possess between them the majority of nuclear weapons, prime negotiating responsibility falls to them. We fully support their efforts to secure a START agreement and welcome the progress made at the recent Washington summit.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties at less than 250 ft have been authorised over the United Kingdom in each year since 1985.

Mr. Neubert: In 1989 the number of movements authorised for flying below 250 ft within tactical training areas was as follows:

Tactical training area	Operational low flying movements	Number of days on which operational low flying was authorised
Northern Scotland	817	129
Central Wales	89	105
Borders	1,788	157

Figures for sorties that have been flown below 250 ft are not available, but figures for movements for previous years have been given in the replies given by my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 30 October 1987 at column 487 and on 20 January 1988 at columns 764-65, and in the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 25 May 1989 at columns 732-33.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum permitted number of aircraft in a formation during low-flying training at less than 250 ft in each of the three tactical training areas.

Mr. Neubert: The number of aircraft in a tactical formation at low level is determined by aircraft role and the type of exercise being carried out. However, formations do not normally consist of more than eight aircraft.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the authorised low-flying movements below 250 ft over the United Kingdom in each of the years from 1985 to 1989 consisted of continuation training sorties to maintain aircrew currency in flying at less than 250 ft, as opposed to work-up training for specific Flag exercises in north America.

Mr. Neubert: I regret the information requested is not readily available and could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the forthcoming survey of noise levels from low-flying military aircraft to be conducted; and at what location the survey will be held.

Mr. Neubert: A trial is currently being conducted at the Royal Aerospace Establishment West Freugh range to obtain further information on noise levels generated by military aircraft at low level and, weather permitting, will be completed during this month. Following evaluation of the data, the results of the study are expected to be available early next year.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the lateral radius, expressed in nautical miles, of the avoidance areas around noise-sensitive sites in tactical training areas.

Mr. Neubert: Avoidance criteria adopted in any case will depend on the site concerned.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purposes RAF C-130 Hercules aircraft undertake low flying; and under what circumstances they receive clearance to fly between 100 and 250 feet.

Mr. Neubert: The tactical transport role of the RAF C-130 Hercules aircraft requires it to be capable of operating in a potentially hostile environment at low level. Aircraft may be cleared to fly at under 250 ft in the United Kingdom to undertake training in the three tactical training areas or to carry out free-drop training on designated drop zones in military danger areas.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many flights in the United Kingdom low-flying system were undertaken during the years 1987, 1988 and 1989 by (a) RAF C-130 Hercules, (b) USAF C-130 Hercules, (c) USAF C-141 Starlifter and (d) USAF C-5 Galaxy; and how many of these flights for each of those years were in areas 14, 14T, 14C, 16 and 20T of the low-flying system.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is not readily available and could not be provided without disproportionate cost and effort.

Air Force Exercises

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what Royal Air Force participation is planned in exercises (1) Green Flag 90-4 and (2) Red Flag 90-5; how many and what types of RAF aircraft will take part; and how many work-up training sorties will be conducted in the United Kingdom in preparation for these exercises;

(2) what joint work-up training between French air force and Royal Air Force Jaguar units took place in Britain prior to the French participation in exercise Red Flag 90-3.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the planned dates and locations of the main United Kingdom air activity for exercises (a) Central Enterprise, (b) Mallet Blow, (c) OSEX, (d) Salty Hammer and (e) Elder Joust, during 1990.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested is as follows:

Exercise	Dates	Locations
(a) Central Enterprise	18-22 June 1990	No significant activity in the United Kingdom
(b) Mallet Blow	26-30 March and 30 July—3 August 1990.	North England and Borders
(c) OSEX	9-13 July 1990	Mid and North Wales, North Lancashire and South Cumbria
(d) Salty Hammer	22 May 1990	North England and South Scotland
(e) Elder Joust	2-3 October 1990	East Scotland and North and East England

There are some minor variations against the planned dates given to the hon. Member on 3 April (columns 595-98.)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been made to the United States authorities (a) to relax the minimum height restrictions for sorties in the first two days of Red/Green Flag exercises in respect of Royal Air Force aircrew already qualified to fly at 100 ft and (b) to relax the regulation prohibiting offensive or defensive manoeuvring below 300 ft for Royal Air Force aircraft participating in Red or Green Flag exercises.

Mr. Neubert: None.

RAF Combat Training

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on future policy on realistic combat training for Royal Air Force strike/attack units following the recent NATO decision to abandon plans for a tactical fighter training centre.

Mr. Neubert: Following the decision by NATO Ministers not to pursue further the sites under consideration for a NATO tactical fighter centre, the EURO/NATO training group has been invited to consider alternative ways of meeting NATO training requirements in this area. Future United Kingdom training requirements will naturally need to take account of the outcome of our current examination of options for change.

Controlled Airspace (Unauthorised Penetrations)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the regulations concerning the requirements for aircrew to report incidences of unauthorised penetration of regulated or controlled airspace in the event of having to climb out of the United Kingdom low flying system unexpectedly; and how many such unauthorised penetrations were reported in each year since 1985.

Mr. Neubert: Aircrew are instructed to report any such unauthorised penetrations of regulated or controlled airspace, but very few occur and separate statistics for such incidents are not maintained.

Sea Harriers

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Royal Navy Sea Harrier pilots are currently qualified to fly overland at less than 250 ft; and what consideration has been given to requesting Sea Harrier participation in flag exercises in north America.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our policy to disclose the operational capabilities of Royal Navy pilots. I can say however that the Royal Navy does not participate in the flag exercises held in north America, as these are designed to train pilots in roles not normally assumed by the Royal Navy.

Aldermaston

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the construction of the Aldermaston A90 building.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) on 18 May 1990, at column 578.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there has ever been a joint United Kingdom-United States nuclear warhead test in (i) Nevada, (ii) the Pacific islands or (iii) Australia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All United Kingdom nuclear tests in Nevada have been joint United Kingdom-United States activities; the United Kingdom permitted the United States to use its Pacific (Christmas Island) test site for the Operation Dominic series of tests in 1962; all tests in Australia were United Kingdom national tests.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information in support of the United Kingdom nuclear weapons and warhead design and development has been made available by the United States under the 1958-59 as amended mutual defence agreement on atomic energy matters; and for what period this agreement will remain in force without requiring amendment.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive British Governments not to disclose information exchanged under the terms of the 1958 United Kingdom/United States defence agreement. The agreement will remain extant until 31 December 1994, when article III is due for renewal.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the financial savings made if the planned number of warheads for the Trident D5 programme were reduced by (i) 50 per cent. and (ii) 75 per cent.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal details of this nature, for security reasons.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) of 15 May, Official Report, column 729, what matters with regard to nuclear non-proliferation were discussed at the NATO nuclear planning group in Kananaskis, Canada on 9-10 May.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The alliance's long-held position with regard to the proliferation of nuclear weapons remains unchanged. However, given the profound political changes in the countries of central and eastern Europe over recent months, the meeting of the NATO nuclear planning group, which took place in Canada on 9 to 10 May, concentrated its discussions on the implications of these developments for the alliance's nuclear policy. A copy of the final communiqué issued on completion of the NPG meeting is available in the Library.

Management Strategy

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department has made towards introducing its new management strategy.

Mr. Neubert: Good progress has been made in preparing for the introduction of the new management strategy in April 1991.

SCOTLAND

Fisheries

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of any research commissioned or financed by him on square mesh panels as a means of conservation.

Mr. Lang: I refer to the reply given today to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), which sets out the various research work being carried out on square mesh panels throughout the UK, including the major contribution by the marine laboratory in Aberdeen.

Mental Health Programmes

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make more funds available to the Training Agency for people with mental health problems.

Mr. Rifkind: No. The Training Agency has sufficient resources to meet the demand for training places for young people and unemployed people with special needs including those with mental health problems.

HIV

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the first known sero-conversion to HIV took place in a person with haemophilia as a result of using Scottish factor concentrates.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available.

Bankruptcy

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce maximum hourly rates of remuneration for work carried out by trustees in terms of section 53(4) of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act 1985.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

An evaluation of the Scottish bankruptcy system is currently taking place and this will cover remuneration.

Water Supply

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of the progress of the programme of action required by the European Community water directive, to bring Scotland's water supply up to the European Community standard; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All Scottish water authorities have now given undertakings, which my right hon. and learned Friend has accepted, to carry out improvement programmes to meet the standards set in the Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990. The regulations incorporate the quality requirements of the European Community drinking water directive.

The programmes mainly concern improvements to meet the standards for aluminium and for iron derived from unlined cast-iron pipes. Improvements in respect of aluminium are mostly due for completion by 1996, while those in respect of iron will be completed over a longer period. Improvements to disinfection will also be made, especially to rural supplies, to ensure that microbiological standards are met at all times. Much of this work will be completed within the next two years.

Programmes for meeting the European Community standard for lead should be complete by the end of this year except in two small supplies and three where major improvement works are in progress.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the Government's estimates of toxic waste imports to Scotland in each of the next five years;

(2) if he will list the quantity of imported waste destined for Scotland in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Returns by district and islands councils indicate that the total amounts of waste imported into Scotland in 1987 and 1988 were as follows:

Year	Amount (tonnes)
1987	15
1988	453

Information is not available for earlier years; returns for 1989 are not yet complete.

Centrally, there are no estimates for the import of any wastes in future years.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department is currently taking to monitor and investigate the incidence of illness and death among humans and animals in areas where there are incinerators and landfill sites; and if he will make a statement on safeguards to the general public in such areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 district or islands councils as waste disposal authorities have powers to reject any application for the use of land, plant or equipment for the disposal of controlled waste which the council believes will cause a danger to public health. Health boards and environmental health departments are responsible for investigating particular incidents.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to strengthen current legislation to protect public health and the environment in the specific area of landfill sites and incineration.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes. The Environmental Protection Bill will tighten controls both on air pollution, from incinerators and other sources, and on waste disposal to landfill sites.

Lead Contamination

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money his Department has spent on publicising the effects of lead in water in Scotland annually between 1979 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1983, £76,000 was spent on a publicity campaign in Scotland to inform the public about the hazards of lead in the environment, including the effects of lead in water. A leaflet was sent to all households in Scotland and newspaper and radio advertisements were placed to publicise the distribution of the leaflet. There is now an adequate degree of public awareness of these hazards.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been allocated by his Department for the provision of lead replacement grants by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Capital allocations to local authorities in 1990-91 on the non-housing revenue account block total £124·635 million, of which £22·250 million is earmarked to clear the backlog of pre-1984 repairs grant applications in Edinburgh and Glasgow. Within these allocations resources are not earmarked centrally for particular programmes such as lead replacement. It is the responsibility of each local authority in the light of local circumstances to decide on the priority which should be attached to particular programmes such as lead replacement within the block allocation made available.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of Scottish Office spending plans in the area of water and sewerage over the next three years; how much of this allocation will be spent on dealing with the problem of lead in water; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For 1990-91, capital expenditure provision for authorities' water and sewerage programmes was set at £142 million. Provision for 1991-92 totals £170 million and for 1992-93, £190 million, a 50 per cent. increase over the comparable figure for 1989-90. Each regional and islands council determines priorities for expenditure within its capital allocation.

All but five of the 103 programmes of improvements required to meet the standard of lead set in the EC drinking water directive are due to be completed by the end of this year. It is estimated that remaining expenditure on treatment to meet the EC lead standard will amount to about £1·7 million in 1990-91 and about £1 million in 1991-92.

The Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 set tighter standards for lead. To meet the new standards authorities are currently assessing the expenditure required, and this will be taken into account in determining allocations in future years.

Health Authority Revenue

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the annual budgets over the last five years up to and including 31 March, and the percentage they have been over or under Scottish health authorities revenue equalisation parity in each of these years, for (a) Greater Glasgow, (b) Highland, (c) Tayside, (d) Central and (e) Borders and Dumfries and Galloway health boards.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On the assumption that the reference to Central health board should be to Forth Valley health board the information is as follows:

Board	1985-86		1986-87		1987-88		1988-89		1989-90

General Practitioners

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many budget-holding practice groups he envisages being in operation by April 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards are conducting discussions with the practices that have expressed an interest in the general practitioner funding scheme with a view to determining which of them are suitable for undertaking the necessary preparatory work. It is not possible to anticipate how many fund holders will be in place for April 1991.

Divorce

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications were made for legal aid in connection with actions for divorce in the latest year for which figures are available; in how many of these cases legal aid was granted; and what was the cost to the legal aid fund.

Mr. Rifkind: The information for 1988-89 is set out in the table:

Legal aid for actions of divorce: Scotland

	Number of applications made	Number of applications granted	Cost[1] £
Sheriff Court	11,182	8,610	5,330,902
Court of Session	217	143	2,223,971
TOTAL	11·399	8,753	7,554,873

[1] The cost shown represents expenditure in 1988-89, not expenditure on cases for which legal aid was granted in 1988-89.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were detained in Scotland under section 26 of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1989 the number of episodes of emergency detention under section 24 of the Act which were subsequently continued under section 26 was 1,211. This figure includes patients who were subject to these detention provisions on more than one occasion during the year.

Social Work

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was local authority expenditure on social work in Scotland for each of the last five years; and what is the expected figure for each of the next three years.

Mr. Rifkind: From information supplied by local authorities in Scotland net expenditure (cash) on social work was:

	£ million
1985-86	316·7
1986-87	334·8
1987-88	375·5
1988-89	421·6
1989-90	[1]473·4
1990-91	[2]552·1

[1] provisional outturn
[2] budget estimate
Notes: Figures up to 1989-90 are exclusive of central administration; those for 1990-91 are inclusive.

Expenditure in future years is a matter for local authorities to determine.

Fine Collection Officers

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fine collection officers are now in post in Scotland; and in what sheriff courts they are based.

Mr. Rifkind: There are 15 fines officer posts. The sheriff courts at which they are based and the number at each court are as follows:

	Numbers
Aberdeen	1
Airdrie	1
Dundee	1
Dunfermline	1
Dumbarton	1
Edinburgh	2
Falkirk	1
Glasgow	[1]3
Hamilton	2
Kilmarnock	1
Paisley	1

[1] Includes one post presently vacant and in the process of being filled.

Offenders' Hostels

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hostels there are in Scotland providing accommodation for offenders; how many bed places these contain; what the occupancy rate was in the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage was taken up by occupants on bail.

Mr. Rifkind: Offender accommodation grant-aided by the Scottish Office under section 27B of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 takes a variety of forms. The number of bed places fluctuates but is currently around 90. Detailed information on the level and nature of bed occupancy is not available centrally. A recording system is, however, in the process of being introduced, and a preliminary assessment of some of the accommodation has indicated an occupancy rate of 80 per cent.

Security Firms

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employees of his Department have been made redundant in the last five years in consequence of the employment of private security firms.

Mr. Rifkind: Three patrolmen at the marine laboratory, Aberdeen, were made redundant on 30 November 1986 as a result of security duties being taken over by a private security firm.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of legal expenses incurred by the Scottish Legal Aid Board in connection with their recent application to the Court of Session to countermand the order for the chairman of the Scottish Legal Aid Board to appear before a sheriff to explain matters arising from the handling of an application for civil legal aid.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The last such application by the Scottish Legal Aid Board was made over two years ago, and the information requested is not readily available.

Seals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many grey and common seals were shot in each of the past 10 years, under section 9 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, during (a) the close season and (b) the rest of the year and what steps he is taking to regulate this killing of seals under the terms of the Berne convention.

Mr. Lang: Information is not held centrally on the basis requested. No prior permit, or subsequent reporting of shooting of a seal, is required under the provisions of section 9 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970.

My right hon. and learned Friend's obligations under the Berne convention in respect of seals in Scottish waters are met by the provisions and operation of the Conservation of Seals Act.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences have been issued for the shooting of seals under section 10 of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970 in the years, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989 and so far in the current year.

Mr. Lang: The figures requested are as follows:

Year	Licences Issued
1983	[1]—
1984	4
1985	31
1986	34
1987	52
1988	34
1989	0
[2]1990	0

[1] No figures are available.
[2] to date.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current policy on the issuing of licences to shoot and kill grey and common seals for the prevention of damage to fisheries and fish stocks.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend is reviewing this matter in the light of a number of current applications for licences.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken in order to assess (a) the scale of damage inflicted upon the stocks of fish farms by birds and seals and (b) the number of birds and seals killed in order to prevent predation at fish farms.

Mr. Lang: There is no general requirement for fish farmers to report damage by predators to their stocks or equipment. Applicants for licences to shoot seals under the provisions of section 10(1)(c) of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, or to shoot protected birds under the provisions of section 16(1)(k) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 are required to indicate the damage which shooting under licence is expected to prevent and to report the numbers of seals or birds which are shot in accordance with a licence.

Information on numbers of seals and seabirds shot under provisions other than licences is not available centrally.

Gourock Ropeworks

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the present circumstances and future of the Gourock ropeworks in Port Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have received representations both for and against the retention of the Gourock Ropeworks building.

It is a category A listed building in private ownership for which I hope a suitable use can be found. Its demolition, alteration or extension would require listed building consent in terms of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972. I am not aware of any application for listed building consent to Inverclyde district council as planning authority.

Training

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he intends to ensure that there is adequate training for those with special needs in Scotland; and whether the Training Agency will fund the programme of the Scottish Association for Mental Health at the level of 1989's net cost, plus an appropriate allowance for inflation.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The Government offer the guarantee of suitable training through youth training to all young persons aged between 16 and 18 years who want a training placement and through employment training to all persons who have been unemployed for over six months and who seek training. To ensure sufficient suitable placements are available to meet the needs of all trainees including those with special needs, the Training Agency contracts for training places with a wide range of training providers throughout Scotland. These include voluntary organisations, such as the Scottish Association for Mental Health, with particular interests in providing for specific special needs. The number of contracted places to meet particular special needs is determined by the potential demand for them from people eligible to join either youth training or employment training. The Training Agency does not fund a Scottish Association for Mental Health programme: it contracts with that body through employment training for the provision of training places.

Syringes (Cumbrae)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will co-ordinate efforts to establish the source of used syringes washed up on the shores of the Isle of Cumbrae over a period of several weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 June 1990]: I am making inquiries locally and will write to the hon. Member.

Ardrossan-Saltcoats-Stevenston Bypass

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the timetabling of the proposed Ardrossan-Saltcoats-Stevenston bypass.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 June 1990]: All schemes in the trunk road programme are allocated scheme ready dates which indicate when the necessary preparatory work is expected to be completed. Thereafter, decisions on which schemes will proceed to construction in the following year are taken annually each March on the basis of the relative priorities of the schemes which are ready, and the financial resources available. Preparatory work for an Ardrossan-Saltcoats-Stevenston bypass is expected to be completed this year if outstanding objections to the scheme are satisfactorily resolved, but no decision has been taken on when a bypass might be constructed. Decisions on the priorities for funding in 1991-92 and beyond will be greatly assisted by the results of the major trunk and key principal road network review, which will by then be substantially complete.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the capital programme for Scottish Homes for the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 June 1990]: Final accounts for 1989-90 are not yet available: Scottish Homes' gross capital programme expenditure is, however, expected to be £299 million. The gross capital programme for 1990-91 is £311 million and assumes that Scottish Homes achieves projected capital receipts of £110 million.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the new build projects undertaken by Scottish Homes in the financial year 1989-90, and the projected new build programme for Scottish Homes for the current financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 June 1990]: When approving Scottish Homes' programme for any year my right hon. and learned Friend also agrees the amounts which Scottish Homes proposes should be spent on particular functions. The allocation of funds to individual projects is then a matter for Scottish Homes.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

El Salvador

20. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will undertake to visit El Salvador to examine the human rights situation there.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans at present to visit El Salvador. We receive regular reports on the human rights situation from our embassy in San Salvador and take appropriate opportunities to register our concerns with the Salvadorean authorities.

Middle East

21. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current initiatives to secure the release of United Kingdom hostages in Beirut.

40. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has been taking to gain the release of the British hostages currently held in Beirut; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The release of two American hostages in April shows that Iran and Syria can, if they wish, secure the release of hostages in Lebanon. We are persevering with our efforts to persuade them that the holding of hostages is in no one's interest.

39. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the measures he is taking to advance the peace process in the middle east and the release of British hostages held in the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: The recent visit of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the middle east has convinced us more than ever of the urgent need for direct dialogue between Palestinians and Israel. I can see no other starting point for a genuine peace process. We shall continue to work for this with our friends in the region and elsewhere. The grim alternative to dialogue is extremism and more killing.

The release of two American hostages in April shows that Iran and Syria can, if they wish, secure the release of hostages in Lebanon. We are persevering with our efforts to persuade them that the holding of hostages is in no one's interest.

41. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any further proposals for a peace settlement in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

49. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's contribution to finding a diplomatic and peaceful solution to the Palestinian-Israeli conflict acceptable to the international community.

Mr. Waldegrave: The recent visit of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to the middle east has convinced us more than ever of the urgent need for direct dialogue between Palestinians and Israel. I can see no other starting point for a genuine peace process. We shall continue to work for this with our friends in the region and elsewhere. The grim alternative to dialogue is extremism and more

44. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to visit Israel to discuss the middle east peace process.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs would hope to do so at some stage but has no firm plans at present. However, the Israeli Government are well aware of our views on the urgent need for direct dialogue with representative Palestinians.

45. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the occupation of the west bank and Gaza strip.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Israelis are well aware of our view that they should withdraw from territories occupied in 1967 in the context of a comprehensive settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute; and that pending withdrawal they should administer the occupied territories in accordance with their obligations under international law.

49. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the continuing murders in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Israeli Government are well aware of our deep concern about the continuing violence in the occupied territories and the numbers of Palestinians killed and wounded. We continue to take every opportunity to urge the Israeli authorities to administer the occupied territories in accordance with international law.

55. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Iraqi authorities regarding President Sadam Hussein's statement concerning Israel on 10 May at a meeting with Yasser Arafat.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are not aware of the statement to which the hon. Member refers. According to our information, President Saddam Hussein did not meet Mr. Arafat on 10 May.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he authorised British Airways officials on flight 657 from Tel Aviv to London on 23 May 1990 to detain the passport of Mr. John Richardson.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens have been excluded from Israel for each year since 1985, giving the figures since December 1987 by month.

Mr. Waldegrave: No records of this kind of information are available to us.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British embassy was involved in the exclusion of Mr. John Richardson from Tel Aviv airport on 23 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

South Africa

22. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the timetable for constitutional reform discussed at his most recent meeting with President de Klerk.

Mr. Waldegrave: During President de Klerk's recent visit, we encouraged him to maintain the momentum of constitutional reform in South Africa. We were impressed by his commitment to move forward as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amount of British money has been made available to black political groups in South Africa; what groups have received this money and what amounts have been paid to them; what are the conditions laid down by the Government for the money to be granted; what procedures have to be adopted to make an application for the money; and who administers it.

Mr. Waldegrave: A scheme was established in March 1990, separate from our aid programme, to help those organisations previously excluded from the political process in South Africa prepare to enter negotiations. This scheme provides practical support, on a non-discriminatory basis, to those making the transition to normal political activity.

Since the scheme's inception, we have made £75,000 available and have given assistance to the following organisations: African National Congress (c £10,500), PAC (Internal) (£2,784) and Inkatha (£4,681).

In each case, the money has been provided in the form of practical material support, designed to help the organisation concerned function as a political party and thus to help towards achieving a negotiated transition to a multi-party democracy.

Any organisations seeking help under this scheme may apply direct to the British embassy in Cape Town/Pretoria, or to any of the three other British diplomatic offices in South Africa. The scheme is administered by Her Majesty's ambassador in South Africa.

Colombia

23. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the implications of the outcome of the recent Colombian elections on the international war against the drug barons.

Mr. Sainsbury: We congratulate Sr. Gaviria on his victory in the Colombian presidential election and look forward to working with his Government in the fight against international drugs trafficking. President-elect Gaviria has made clear that he intends to continue President Barco's policies directed against the drugs trade.

Romania

24. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations the Government have made to the Government of Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: We made a number of representations before the recent elections urging the Romanian Government to ensure a free and fair campaign and poll. On 11 May we summoned the Romanian chargé d'affaires to register our concern on this point.

30. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Romania, following the elections which took place there on 20 May.

Mr. Waldegrave: We hope for warm and co-operative relations with Romania. This will depend in part on continued progress by the Romanian Government towards democracy.

Eastern Europe

25. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit eastern Europe to discuss political and economic co-operation.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs plans to visit Czechoslovakia in late July. We have regular discussions with east European leaders during high-level visits in either direction and in the margins of international gatherings. We are extending our co-operation with these countries ever more widely as they make progress in economic and political reform.

42. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that assistance to the countries of eastern Europe is conditional upon significant political and economic reform.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our policy remains that the type and degree of aid to the reforming eastern European countries should match the stage of political and economic reform they have each reached.

Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to lessen the cost of visa applications to managers in eastern Europe who wish to visit the United Kingdom to acquire management skills.

Mr. Sainsbury: Managers from eastern Europe visiting the United Kingdom through the know-how funds are issued visas gratis. Those coming under other auspices are eligible to apply for two-year multiple-entry visas, which are cheaper, pro rata, than single-entry visas.

German Unification

26. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy on German unification.

35. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy on German unification.

50. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current policy on German unification.

Mr. Waldegrave: We warmly welcome the prospect of German unification. We are working with the Foreign Ministers of the United States, France, Soviet Union, the two Germanies and others concerned, to settle the external aspects of German unification as soon as possible.

51. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effects of the reunification of Germany on the United Kingdom's position within the European Community.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 22 May. We welcome German unification as a positive factor for Europe and the Community.

EC Inter-institutional Conference

27. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the main conclusions of the European Community inter-institutional conference, held in Strasbourg on 17 May.

Mr. Maude: There were no formal conclusions.

Council of Ministers

28. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the last meeting of the European Community Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 24 May.

36. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects will be discussed at the next meeting of the European Community Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

43. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he intends to raise at the next European Community Council of Ministers meeting.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he will be raising at the next meeting of the European Community Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The issues are likely to include preparations for the Dublin European Council, relations with EFTA, the GATT Uruguay round, and other EC external policies.

Libya

29. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will expect to visit Libya and discuss United Kingdom-Libyan relations.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to do so.

Short-range Nuclear Weapons

31. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to meet the United States Secretary of State to discuss short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Mr. Baker and other NATO colleagues at the North Atlantic Council meeting held at Turnberry on 7 and 8 June. NATO agreed at that meeting that negotiations on United States and Soviet short-range nuclear weapons systems in Europe should begin shortly after a CFE agreement is concluded.

We shall continue to be in close touch with the United States on this subject in preparation for the NATO summit in London from 4 to 6 July.

EC Policies

32. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further proposals he intends to place before his European Community partners for the development of Community policies.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 9 May. We shall continue to play a constructive role in Community discussions.

CSCE Conference, Copenhagen

33. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of Her Majesty's Government's aims at the current CSCE conference on the human dimension in Copenhagen.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said when he addressed the conference on 5 June, we want the Copenhagen CDH meeting to extend CSCE human rights undertakings, specifically on free and fair elections, the rule of law, and freedom of expression, of association and peaceful assembly, and of movement. We shall also play a full part in the detailed review of participating states' implementation of their CSCE human rights commitments.

Guyana

34. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet the President of Guyana.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to meet the President of Guyana.

Czech and Slovak Federal Republic

37. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic since the elections held on 8 June.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the elections in the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic on 8 June.

Mr. Waldegrave: We warmly welcome these free and peaceful elections. The exceptionally high turnout shows the enthusiasm with which the Czechoslovak people have greeted the restoration of democracy in their country. Our relations with Czechoslovakia are excellent.

We look forward to the formation of a new Government. They can rely on our help and support in meeting the challenges ahead.

Cambodia

39. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will review his policy regarding the Cambodian seat at the United Nations.

Mr. Sainsbury: With our EC partners we are reviewing our policy towards Cambodia's representation at the United Nations. In doing so we shall be taking into account the efforts of a range of countries, notably the five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council, to achieve a comprehensive political settlement.

British Colonies

46. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning democratic arrangements for residents of small British colonies.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received no such representations in respect of our Caribbean, Atlantic or Pacific dependent territories.

India

47. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet the Indian Foreign Minister.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs looks forward to meeting the Indian Foreign Minister again as soon as both their programmes allow this.

Antarctica

52. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning proposals to make Antarctica a world park.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received representations from many hon. Members and members of the public. We fully support and comply with the relevant obligations under the Antarctic treaty system and the Antarctic minerals convention, which offer the best possible means of protecting the Antarctic environment.

Chile

53. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the support which Her Majesty's Government are giving to the democratic Government of Chile.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have increased our contribution to the World University Service to enable it to help with the repatriation of exiled Chileans. We have also doubled our bilateral technical assistance programme.

European Community Foreign Ministers

54. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Foreign Ministers of the other European Community countries; and whether he discussed the importance attached by the European Community to the implementation of measures agreed by the Twelve.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the subject of implementation of European Community legislation at the informal meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers on 19 and 20 May.

Nuclear Arms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of how proposals to extend the competence of the European Economic Community into matters of non-proliferation would affect the United Kingdom's obligations under the non-proliferation treaty;

(2) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards extending the competence of the European Economic Community into matters of non-proliferation.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no proposals for such extension of European Community competence.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British Government's preparations for the non-proliferation treaty fourth review conference in Geneva in August-September.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have played a full and constructive role in the preparations for the fourth review conference of the non-proliferation treaty. The third preparatory committee successfully concluded procedural matters and the allocation of administrative posts.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his proposals to extend and develop the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 15 December 1989 to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals Her Majesty's Government intend to put forward at the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in regard to developing energy aid via provisions of articles III and IV of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not intend to put forward any proposals in this regard. We do, however, already provide assistance to a number of developing countries, via the "Footnote A" projects, under the International Atomic Energy Agency's technical assistance programme, for the development of peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which the development of the British Trident system is compatible with the Government's obligations under article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: Negotiations on the reduction of strategic weapons are being conducted by the United States and Soviet Union. We welcome the prospect of a START agreement this year. Our position with regard to the British strategic deterrent is that, if United States and Soviet strategic arsenals were further reduced very substantially and there had been no significant improvements in defensive capabilities, we would consider how best we might contribute to the arms control process in the light of the changed circumstances.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the composition of the British delegation to the fourth review conference of the non-proliferation treaty in Geneva in August-September.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which United Kingdom-based non-governmental organisations have been granted observer status for the fourth non-proliferation treaty review conference; how non-governmental organisations obtain such status; and what financial assistance is Her Majesty's Government giving to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations to attend the conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to my answer of 11 June to the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has prepared an educational video on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty for use in schools and colleges.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. However, the arms control and disarmament research unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office publishes notes on arms control on an approximately monthly basis and a quarterly review. Both publications regularly include information on the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the fourth review conference and are available on request.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions Her Majesty's Government have taken to fulfil their obligations under article IV of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and what initiatives the Government are considering to expand the provisions of article IV to include other energy sources.

Mr. Waldegrave: We contribute annually to the "Footnote A" projects, under the International Atomic Energy Agency's technical assistance programme, and there is a considerable amount of trade and co-operation in the nuclear area involving British companies. We are not considering any initiatives to expand the provisions of article IV.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions Her Majesty's Government have taken to encourage Albania to become a party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. In common with the other depository powers of the NPT, we do not have diplomatic relations with Albania.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those meetings concerning nuclear weapons proliferation and non-proliferation measures at which his Department will be represented between now and the fourth quinquennial review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The three preparatory committees for the NPT review conference have been concluded. No further multilateral meetings devoted specifically to this subject are planned before the review conference, although the subject will be on the agenda of a number of bilateral meetings.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives are being considered by Her Majesty's Government to expand the terms of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty so that source or special fissionable material or equipment or material specially designed or prepared for the processing, use or production of special fissionable material, can no longer be transferred from states party to the treaty to non-nuclear weapons states for non-peaceful purposes without the application of treaty safeguards.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. In accordance with article III of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and the nuclear suppliers guidelines to which all major nuclear suppliers subscribe, source or special fissionable material or equipment or material especially designed or prepared for the processing, use or production of special fissionable material may be transferred to non-nuclear weapon states only for peaceful purposes and only if the source or special fissionable material is subject to safeguards.

Afghanistan

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now re-open the British embassy in Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have no plans at present to re-open our embassy in Kabul.

Drugs

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the interdiction of drug trafficking in the Caribbean basin.

Mr. Sainsbury: Local Governments and aid donors have taken steps to combat the flow of drugs through the Caribbean, but trafficking remains a major problem. We recognise the seriousness of this threat and are committed to helping Caribbean nations fight it. We have provided over £3 million of anti-drugs assistance to the region since 1987 and will provide a further £1·2 million to help our Caribbean dependent territories in their efforts. We co-operate fully with other anti-drugs agencies in the region.

Lithuania

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Lithuania; and what Her Majesty's Government are doing to assist its economic recovery.

Mr. Waldegrave: Unfortunately, talks between Vilnius and Moscow have still not been launched, despite the readiness of the Lithuanians to suspend the legislation adopted since the declaration of independence. The economic measures imposed by Moscow continue.

We have no programme of assistance specifically for Lithuania. But Lithuania is able to participate in our wider programme of exchange and co-operation with the Soviet Union.

Open Skies Conference

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the open skies conference in Budapest which closed on 13 May.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are disappointed that it was not possible to reach agreement on an open skies regime at the last round of negotiations in Budapest. We remain determined to pursue an open skies agreement, which could make a significant contribution to confidence building. We hope for an early indication that the Soviet Union is willing to negotiate constructively on the outstanding issues.

EMPLOYMENT

Mentally Ill People

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he proposes to take to avert staff redundancies and unfilled training places in the programmes run by the providers of training for those with mental health problems.

Mr. Nicholls: Contracts with providers are negotiated for the number of places considered appropriate to meet local needs and in particular those who have special training needs. Training providers are responsible for running their programmes in accordance with their contract. Thus they are responsible for their own staff, including staff redundancies should they occur.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total sum of money allocated to training and enterprise councils; what percentage of this sum has been taken up; and what percentage of training and enterprise council funding is provided from European Community sources.

Mr. Eggar: The total budget allocated to training and enterprise councils in 1990-91 will be dependent on when individual training and enterprise councils become operational. To date the combined budget for the first 13 training and enterprise councils that have signed operational contracts is £215 million.

The extent to which training and enterprise councils will receive funding from the European Community through the European social fund cannot be determined fully until individual projects are considered by my Department.

National Insurance Credits

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a person who has been disallowed national insurance credits for not being available for or not actively seeking work has the right to appeal against the decision; what other procedures are open to them if they wish to dispute the disallowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Employment Exchanges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give full details of the consultative process to be undertaken by his Department before he considers closing any local part-time employment exchange.

Mr. Eggar: When the employment service plans to close a part-time local office it follows the established practice of ensuring that the hon. Member in whose constituency the part-time office is located is informed of the reason for the planned closure.

Repetitive Strain Injury

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on (a) research, (b) prevention and (c) compensation for repetitive strain injuries.

Mr. Nicholls: Section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 places general duties on employers to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, the health, safety and welfare at work of all their employees; and in particular the provision and maintenance of plant and systems of work that are, so far as is reasonably practicable, safe and without risks to health. These general duties apply to the prevention of repetitive strain injury and are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) and local authorities.

The HSE intends to publish later this year new guidance on work-related upper limb disorders which will give authoritative advice to employers on ways to prevent them. HSE funds an extramural biomedical research programme which includes support for research into repetitive strain injury. A report from the Institute of Occupational Medicine (IOM), "Clinical Epidemiological Study of Relations between Upper Limb Soft Tissue Disorders and Repetitive Movements at Work", has recently been published.

The HSE has also funded research projects at the IOM and the university of Birmingham which investigate the relationship between work routines and activities and specific upper limb disorders. Reports on these studies are still awaited.

State compensation for industrial injuries is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of any research commissioned or financed by him on square mesh panels as a means of conservation.

Mr. Curry: We are currently spending about £1·25 million a year on research related to fishing gear. Square mesh panels are one of the several options presently under investigation in our work to develop more selective fishing gear which will improve conservation by reducing the take of undersized fish. The marine laboratory of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland at Aberdeen has already undertaken, in addition to basic research on square mesh netting, a study on the behaviour of fish in codends with a square mesh panel and a further study on the process of capture in a seine net with various codends including one with a square mesh panel. This summer a study, in conjunction with the Shetland islands council, will investigate as part of a wider project the comparative catches of a codend with a square mesh panel and a conventional codend in a twin trawl. Depending upon the results further studies may then be made.

Further, the Government work with and fund work by the Sea Fish Industry Authority. In 1989-90 a trial was undertaken comparing the catches of a conventional 90mm trawl and one fitted with an 80mm square mesh panel and a further trial mainly looking at codend circumference and extension length also did some work on a square mesh panel. Further trials are taking place this summer in both trawl and seine nets and directed at haddock and cod as trials so far have focused on whiting. The effect of factors such as gear shape and towing on the openness of square mesh will also be studied. We also authorised an industry-led and funded trial to use 80mm square mesh panel rather than the minimum legal size of 90mm.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate losses to farmers and dealers in the United Kingdom as a result of bans on imports by European Community governments in the light of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy outbreak; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: At any time there are many factors affecting markets and no meaningful estimate can be made of the specific impact of the prohibitions on trade recently applied by several member states. In the wake of increased support to the market under the CAP regime for beef and the agreement reached last week in the Agriculture Council, I am pleased to note that market prices have improved significantly.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will support a unified European Community research programme to study the causes and treatments of BSE.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. The Council of Ministers agreed on 7 June to ask the European Commission to implement a Community-wide programme of research into BSE.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the (a) number and (b) percentage of beef herds affected by bovine spongiform encephalopathy on a county-by-county basis.

Mr. Maclean: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy is not a disease affecting cattle herds but rather one which affects individual animals within a herd.

The information requested for Great Britain up to 11 June 1990 is as follows:

County	Confirmed cases	Per cent. of total beef herds in county

Agricultural Improvements

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish his review of standard costs for agricultural improvements; and what aspects he will be taking into account in determining the uprating factor.

Mr. Curry: The Department is currently reviewing labour and material costs relevant to the setting of standard costs for agricultural grants. The question of any announcement must await the outcome of this review.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is aware of any recently produced reports by the French nuclear authorities indicating the potential dangers posed to agriculture in France and the United Kingdom arising from an accident at nuclear power stations located on the channel coast in northern France.

Mr. Curry: I understand that an annual report produced recently by the head of Electricité de France's general inspectorate for nuclear safety presented an overview of nuclear safety within the company as at the end of 1989. I am not aware that it indicates any new or increased threat to agriculture in France and the United Kingdom.

Under an existing bilateral agreement, signed in July 1983, we would be notified immediately of a serious incident involving the release of radioactivity in France. We would also be informed under the terms of both the International Atomic Energy Agency convention on early notification and decision 87/600/Euratom of the European Community Council of Ministers.

Prompt notification of a nuclear incident in France would enable the Department to initiate precautionary monitoring and other action to protect the food chain. We would do this within the framework of the new national response plan established by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, which encompasses the radioactive incident monitoring network (RIMNET).

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the percentage of the British sheep flock which had scrapie in 1984.

Mr. Maclean: Accurate information about its incidence is not available since scrapie is not a notifiable disease but it is currently estimated to affect about 10 per cent. of British sheep flocks.

Poultry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has with regard to the chemicals used on Spanish poultry post slaughter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no information about the use of chemicals on Spanish poultry post slaughter.

The rules for the production of poultry meat for intra-Community trade are laid down in EC directive 71/118. All consignments of poultry meat imported from other EC member states for human consumption must be accompanied by a veterinary health certificate confirming that they have been produced in accordance with the directive and passed as fit for human consumption.

Slaughterhouse Standards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food following the report by his veterinary officers on slaughterhouse standards, what percentage of premises visited had satisfactory health standards in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The reports by the veterinary officers are made to the local authorities (district councils) which are responsible for the enforcement of hygiene legislation. The information provided is for the local authority to act upon.

Contaminated Feed

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 15 May, Official Report, column 395, if he will make a further statement about animals, other than pigs, having been affected by contaminated feed.

Mr. Maclean: We have now received a report that some of the contaminated feed was fed to breeding geese and mallard on a Derbyshire farm in March. A sample of feed has been analysed by the Ministry and traces of isofenphos have been detected in it but at very much lower levels than those found earlier in contaminated pig feed.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to permit the grazing of set-aside land by farm livestock.

Mr. Curry: One of a number of options for the better management of set-aside land which I have been considering is a limited form of grazed fallow. I shall shortly be inviting applications for the third year of the scheme and will announce then any changes to the conditions which I decide to introduce.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 14 June 1990

PRIME MINISTER

Bradford

Q26. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Methyl Chloroform

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy that the time horizon of between 10 and 15 years for the 100 per cent. phase-out of methyl chloroform be used by Her Majesty's Government as a base starting point for agreement at the Montreal protocol meetings due to take place in London later this month.

The Prime Minister: It is the Government's policy ultimately to phase out all ozone-depleting substances. However, it is impossible at this stage to predict whether safe substitutes for all uses of methyl chloroform will be found within the next 10 or 15 years.

Advisers

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer, Official Report, 24 May, column 286, if she has any plans to make funds available from the Cabinet Office vote for political advisers to the leaders of all political parties with parliamentary representation.

The Prime Minister: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 5 June at column 397.

Correspondence

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will take steps to ensure that departmental Ministers have sufficient staff to reply to hon. Members' lettes within an acceptable span of time; and whether it is in accordance with her policy that a letter to the Secretary of State for Health dated 27 February should be answered on 6 June.

The Prime Minister: Long delays in replying to correspondence from Members of Parliament can rarely be justified. The Department of Health has introduced major changes in the national health service which have generated a great deal of public interest. Revised procedures have now been implemented to help in dealing with the large increase in correspondence. My hon. Friend will recall that I announced on 29 March a review of the handling of correspondence across all Departments.

Engagements

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 June.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 14 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be hosting a dinner at Downing street in honour of Sir Sonny Ramphal, Secretary General of the Commonwealth.

Official Visits

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those countries to which she has paid an official visit in each of the last 11 years, indicating in each case whether the visit was followed by an oral statement to the House.

The Prime Minister: I have paid an official visit to the following countries in the past 11 years:

	Country
1979
June	France
June-July	Australia
October	Italy, Luxembourg, West Germany
December	United States

Oral statements to the House are made whenever appropriate.

HEALTH

Blood Products

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which pharmaceutical companies are presently importing factor VIII concentrates into the United Kingdom; and if he will list each company's share of the market.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For reasons of confidentiality, the information held by the Medicines Licensing Authority about pharmaceutical companies importing Factor VIII concentrate cannot be divulged.

Plutonium Contamination

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans or studies have been made by his Department to assess what measures would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident on board a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans or studies have been made by his Department to assess what measures would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident on board a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Members to the reply my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces gave the hon. Members for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 8 June at column 724. The contingency plans referred to cover action necessary by all relevant Government Departments and public bodies, including this Department and health authorities.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements for access to information and expertise his Department has with the Gracewell clinic for rehabilitating sexual offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are aware of the work undertaken by the Gracewell clinic; officials have recently visited the organisation.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has of the percentage of children who are sexually abused.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. The information collected centrally relates to the number of children who are on the child protection registers who have been categorised as "sexually abused". The latest information available relates to the year ending 31 March 1989 and is published in the provisional feedback "Children and Young Persons on Child Protection Registers England 1989". Copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what contact his Department has with Governments in America, Australia and the EEC regarding their experience in the creation and running of national institutes for research into child sexual abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department does not have direct contact with overseas Governments concerning their research programmes into child sexual abuse. Professional staff within the Department keep in touch with research abroad as appropriate and researchers from departmentally funded programmes and units have contact from time to time with overseas counterparts.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount of money being spent by Government Departments on research into the sexual abuse of children (a) at May 1989 and (b) currently; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The following amounts were allocated by Government Departments for research into child sexual abuse.

	1989-90 £	1990-91 £
Department of Health	92,000	125,000
Home Office	72,000	32,000
Social Work Services Group (Scottish Office)	17,000	52,000
Total	181,000	209,000

In addition, the Department of Health funds a number of projects covering both sexual and physical abuse of children. The cost of these projects in 1990-91 is £221,000 which brings the total to £430,000.

Medical Accidents

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what review has been made of the gathering of information on medical accidents; if he will regularly publish statistics about the incidence of claims and settlements or awards achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: No review has been made of the gathering of information on medical accidents. When the health authority indemnity for medical negligence was introduced on 1 January 1990, the Department asked health authorities for an annual return of the number of claims of medical negligence, the number of such cases settled, and the total cost of the settlements reached or awards made. The returns for the period to 31 March 1990 are now being received. No decision has been taken on publishing any statistics.

Complaints Procedure

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how he intends to monitor and assess hospital complaints, family practitioner committee complaints, and the procedures at the General Medical Council and other related professional bodies.

Mr. Dorrell: Complaints made about the services provided in NHS hospitals are monitored by health authorities as required in directions made under section 17 of the National Health Service Act 1977; Family practitioner committees are obliged by regulations to forward reports to the Secretary of State. In addition, the Health Service Commissioner provides an independent assessment of the handling of complaints by health authorities and publishes his report annually.

The General Medical Council is an independent statutory body whose procedures are governed by the Medical Act 1983. The council publishes annually a summary of cases considered by its disciplinary Committees. The Department is not routinely informed by professional bodies of complaints which they receive.

Sheppey General Hospital

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the assessment made as to the closure of the Sheppey general hospital, what regard was paid to questions of (a) population influx in the summer months, (b) future housing development, (c) the nature of access to the island and (d) the availability of an ambulance service.

Mr. Dorrell: Medway health authority has no plans to close Sheppey general hospital.

Mr. Joseph Watts

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the report of the inquiry into the circumstances leading to the death of Mr. Joseph Watts, a patient at Broadmoor hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: Further to the reply of my hon. Friend, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 25 April 1990 at column 219, I welcome the intention of the Special Hospitals Service Authority to make the report widely available. I have arranged for copies of the report, with the authority's response, to be placed in the Library.

The authority shares many of the concerns of the inquiry team and has ensured that action on the report's recommendations is well in hand. The inquiry team produced an authoritative, comprehensive and constructive report. I am grateful to its chairman and members for the thorough way in which they approached their work.

Ophthalmic Clinics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new attendances at ophthalmic clinics were recorded in each quarter of 1988-89 and 1989-90 in each district health authority area in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information about consultant out-patient activity is not available centrally on a quarterly basis. Details of the numbers of new referral attendances for all consultant out-patient clinics are published annually and copies of these summaries for 1987-88 and 1988-89 will be placed in the Library.

Medical and Dental Schools

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the special increment for teaching paid to each medical and dental school in England; and what that sum represents per student.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The service increment for teaching—SIFT—is allocated to regional health Authorities to compensate hospitals for the additional service costs incurred through providing clinical facilities for undergraduate medical and dental education and research. In 1990-91, SIFT amounted to £343 million in total. It is allocated to RHAs according to numbers of undergraduate medical and dental students, at rates of £32,017 per medical student and £12,764 per dental student in 1990-91. For students in London, these figures attract a 9 per cent. weighting.

RHAs should distribute SIFT to specific hospitals according to a range of factors, taking advice from universities, and other research interests as appropriate. Information on sub-regional distribution is not collected centrally.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct regional health authorities to commission an opinion poll survey of the local population in each area where there is a proposal to establish a self-governing trust, in order to determine their views about such a proposal.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Successive Governments have never thought it sensible for changes in management of NHS services to be subject to opinion polls. When formal applications for NHS trust status are made, following parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation, regions will seek the views of the local community, community health councils and other parties with an interest, on individual proposals before any decisions are made.

Sight Tests

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total cost to his Department of commissioning the NOP survey on sight tests.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The cost of the survey is a commercial matter between the Department of Health and NOP.

Drug Side-effects

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have taken place between his officials and representatives of the pharmaceutical industry about setting up a drug damage compensation scheme for victims of drug side-effects which have become apparent some years after a drug was first prescribed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such discussions have taken place.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, column 231, what progress has been made by the research project reviewing the possible connections between BSE and Creutzfeld-Jakob disease; and what information he has on the common properties of the two diseases.

Mr. Dorrell: After detailed planning the Department of Health has recently commissioned the neuropathology component of the study which my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under Secretary of State announced in a reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 31 January at column 231. The two diseases Creutzfeld-Jakob Disease, a spongiform encephalopathy in humans, and bovine spongiform encephalopathy are both fatal, progressive, neurological disorders and have a large number of common properties.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Vietnam

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received seeking further aid to Vietnam; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 17 May about the provision of aid support for NGO activities in Vietnam. Since then I have received no representations seeking further aid for Vietnam.

Ethiopia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the population at risk from famine in Ethiopia he estimates can be reached by the southern supply route of the joint relief partnership.

Mrs. Chalker: From the start of the southern line operation on 20 March up to 3 June, 16,030 tonnes of food were delivered to northern Wello and Tigray. As damaged roads are repaired and additional transport capacity becomes available—in both of which areas Britain is providing assistance—the joint relief partnership hopes to build up deliveries towards its monthly target figure of 14,500 tonnes. This should be sufficient to feed just over 1 million people or perhaps a quarter of the total number at risk in northern Ethiopia.

Irrigation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many new irrigation projects he is currently supporting in the third world; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are currently funding 11 major irrigation projects, of which seven are in Pakistan and one in each of Bangladesh, Indonesia, Sudan and Zimbabwe. The total value of our support for these products over their duration is just under 100 million. We are also funding irrigation research with a total value of 3 million. Some of our wider programmes also include an irrigation component, but it would be disproportionately costly to collate this information.

Environmental Programmes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the Government's plans to help developing countries with their environmental programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: To promote sustainable economic growth and meet developing countries' diverse needs, our help covers a wide range including population programmes, energy efficiency, conserving biodiversity, natural resource management and the promotion of environmental awareness among other subjects.

Our policies are set out in a new booklet, "The Environment and the British Aid Programme", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. I have arranged for a copy to be sent to my hon. Friend.

International Service for National Agricultural Research

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all United Kingdom contributions to the international service for national agricultural research made since 1980.

Mrs. Chalker: Our contributions to the International Service for National Agricultural Research (ISNAR) since 1980 have been as follows:

Financial year	Contribution £
1979-80	15,000
1980-81	50,000
1981-82	50,000
1982-83	100,000
1983-84	120,000
1984-85	120,000
1985-86	120,000
1986-87	130,000
1987-88	135,000
1988-89	142,000
1989-90	140,000
[1]1990-91	140,000

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nuclear Accident, Greenwich

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans or studies have been made by his Department to assess measures that would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich with regard to children at schools in the area.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 11 June 1990, Official Report, column 22.

Mr. Peter Hunt

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the hon. Member for Ravensbourne may expect an answer to his letters of 2 April, 4 April and 4 June and his telephone calls of 10 May, 16 May and 22 May relating to the case of Mr. Peter Hunt; and what are the reasons for the delays in his Department's handling of this case.

Mrs. Rumbold: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 12 June apologising for the delay in replying to his letter of 2 April. In considering Mr. Hunt's case it was necessary for the Department to make inquiries of Bromley local education authority. The facts of the case were then given very careful consideration within the Department.

The final decision was communicated as soon as possible.

University Staff (Pay Offer)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the reasons for the delay in his Department's approving, via committee B of the universities' negotiating machinery, the vice-chancellors' offer of a 9 per cent. pay increase, accepted by university academic and related staff on 11 May; and what steps he is taking to expedite the process of ratification.

Mr. Jackson: There has been no unnecessary delay. The Government are giving careful consideration to the salary increases for university non-clinical academic and related staff proposed in the 25th report of committee A of the universities academic salaries committees.

Academic Awards

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to publish his Department's policy review of the Council for National Academic Awards.

Mr. MacGregor: The review has now been completed and I am publishing the report today. Copies have been placed in the Library. The report contains a number of important recommendations, on which I am seeking the views of interested parties. These have been requested by 14 September. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be arranging parallel consultations in Scotland and Wales. I shall announce the Government's response to the report in due course after these consultations.

Meningitis

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report in tabular form, details of all research into meningitis being supported by the Medical Research Council, indicating (a) the location of the research work, (b) the precise nature of the research project and (c) its tenure.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The Medical Research Council, which receives a grant in aid from this Department, is supporting the following research projects on meningitis:

Direct Support—through MRC establishments

(A) MRC Clinical Research Centre Middlesex.

(B) Project Title:

1. Pathogenesis and immunobiology of meningococcal infection.
2. Isoenzyme analysis for differentiation of neisseria meningitidis infection.

Indirect Support—Grants

(A) Professor E. R. Moxon, Oxford University.
(B) Project Title: Molecular basis of Haemophilius influenzae pathogenicity.
(C) Tenure: 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1995.

(A) Dr. G. J. Boulnois, Leicester University
(B) Project Title: Genetic Engineering of Polysaccharides
(C) Tenure: 18 July 1988 to 17 July 1991.

(A) Professor T. H. Pennington, Aberdeen University
(B) Project Title: Studies on the population genetics and typing of neisseria meningitidis.
(C) Tenure: 21 November 1988 to 20 November 1991.

(A) Dr. J. E. Heckels, Southampton University.
(B) Project Title: Immunobiology of meningococcal outer member proteins.
(C) Tenure: 1 September 1988 to 31 August 1991.

(A) Dr. D. M. Jones, London, Public Health Laboratory Service Board.
(B) Project Title: To investigate neisseria meningitidis surgace antigens for induction of protective antibody after disease/carriage.
(C) Tenure: 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1991.

(A) Dr. J. J. McFadden, University of Surrey.

(B) Project Title: DNA Probes to study epidemiology and virulence of neisseria meningitidis infection.
(C) Tenure: 31 January 1989 to 2 January 1992.

(A) Dr. B. G. Spratt, University of Sussex.
(B) Project Title: Molecular basis and molecular epidemiology of the emergence of penicillin resistance in neisseria meningitidis.
(C) Tenure: 1 May 1989 to 30 April 1992.

(A) Dr. A. Robinson, Porton, Centre for applied microbiology and research.
(B) Project Title: A preliminary investigation into mechanisms of meningoccal meningitis.
(C) Tenure: To be arranged.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the firms in the Mid-Ulster area which are registered with the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Agency in Strabane district council, Omagh district council and Cookstown district council areas; and what are the number of employees in each and the Fair Employment Agency religious break-down of each.

Mr. Needham: The firms listed are those in the Strabane, Omagh and Cookstown district council areas which have been registered by the Fair Employment Commission. The total number of employees is shown alongside the name of the firm.

The Fair Employment Commission is not releasing information on community composition from individual monitoring returns at present.

Primary Schools

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what discussions have taken place about the proposed rationalisation of the primary school sector within the Southern education and library board;

(2) what consultations have been held with the school principals within the primary school sector in the controlled section about the proposals for rationalisation in the Southern education and library board.

Dr. Mawhinney: The proposed rationalisation of schools is a matter in the first instance for either the education and library board in the case of controlled schools or the school authority in the case of voluntary schools. I am not aware of any discussions within the Southern board or between the board and primary school principals on proposed rationalisation, but I understand that the board has established a sub-committee to examine current school places.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the proposed rationalisation of the primary school sector within the Southern education and library board.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have received one letter from the hon. Gentleman.

Fencing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have taken place about the introduction of financial assistance in respect of the provisions of fencing at agricultural holdings in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Grants are available for fencing on agricultural holdings under both the United Kingdom farm and conservation grant scheme and the Northern Ireland agricultural development programme.

Sheep and Lamb

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further action will be taken to promote the Northern Ireland sheep industry and the sale of Northern Irish lamb.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Livestock Marketing Commission for Northern Ireland is mainly responsible for market promotion and is intensifying its efforts, particularly in relation to export markets.

The Department of Agriculture is supporting the development of a high-quality product through its promotional programmes and various schemes including breeding schemes and its education and advisory services.

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members there are on the Southern health and social services board; how many of these members selected by him are non-elected members; what arrangements he makes for flying the union flag at its various premises; and why it was not flown at Tower Hill hospital, Armagh, on 2 June.

Mr. Needham: There are currently 25 places on the Southern health and social services board, one of which is vacant.

Nine of the places on the board are filled after consultation with professional, academic and trade union interests. Nine people are appointed because of the individual contribution they can make to the conduct of the board affairs. Seven places are filled by district councillors.

The requirements to fly the union flag on those prescribed dates relevant to Northern Ireland applies only to central Government offices. There is no requirement therefore for it to be flown on Tower Hill hospital, Armagh.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of dedicated energy managers in his Department and the number of person-years devoted to energy management in the latest year.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 5 June 1990]: There is one dedicated energy manager in the Northern Ireland energy conservation unit for the Northern Ireland Government office estate. Three person-years were devoted to energy management in this estate by the unit in 1989-90.

ENERGY

Spent Magnox Fuel

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to require Magnox operators to backfit at site dry storage facilities for spent fuel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No. This is a matter for the operators of the Magnox stations. Neither Nuclear Electric nor British Nuclear Fuels have any such plans.

Nuclear Technology

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which countries, not being signatories of the non-proliferation treaty, have received nuclear technology from the United Kingdom since 1985.

Mr. Baldry: No export licence has been issued since 1985 for the export of nuclear technology to countries which are not signatories to the non-proliferation treaty. The guidelines for all United Kingdom nuclear exports remain as set out by the then Foreign Secretary now Lord Callaghan on 31 March 1976 at columns 514-16, which has been reaffirmed by the Prime Minister. These guidelines ensure that our nuclear exports are fully consistent with our international non-proliferation obligations under the non-proliferation treaty.

Spent Fuel Processing

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, Official Report, 23 May, column 207, what amounts by weight and volume of (a) high-level waste, (b) intermediate-level waste, (c) low-level waste, (d) reusable plutonium and (e) reusable uranium he estimates will result from the reprocessing of (i) the Magnox fuel and (ii) the spent oxide fuel awaiting reprocessing at Sellafield at 31 March.

Mr. Baldry: Detailed information on the quantities of materials arising from reprocessing is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Nuclear Reprocessing Contracts

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of Nuclear Electric concerning the review and revaluation of nuclear reprocessing contracts inherited from the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of Nuclear Electric regularly to discuss aspects of the nuclear industry. Reprocessing contracts between Nuclear Electric and British Nuclear Fuels are a commercial matter for the parties concerned.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to bring forward proposals at the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in August-September, for a multilateral programme for the long-term management of spent nuclear fuel, vitrified high-level wastes and the decommissioning of nuclear facilities developed under bilateral or multilateral nuclear technology transfer under the provision of article IV of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Nuclear Materials

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has agreed the definition adopted for the detection time concerning the diversion of nuclear materials from intended peaceful uses, by the safeguards authorities of the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The definition of detection time is given in paragraph 108 of the "IAEA Safeguards Glossary" 1987 edition—ref. IAEA/SG/INF/1 (Rev. 1)—a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. This definition is accepted by the member states of the International Atomic Energy Agency, including the United Kingdom.

Plutonium

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what developments have taken place since 1985 in safeguards to ensure that non-nuclear weapons states acquiring reprocessing facilities do not use plutonium for military purposes.

Mr. Baldry: We have full confidence in the safeguards arrangements which are currently applied by the International Atomic Energy Agency which has reported no evidence of diversion of civil nuclear material to non-peaceful use.

In recent years there has been a series of meetings to consider the application of safeguards techniques to large-scale commercial reprocessing plants, in which the United Kingdom has been involved; this programme is continuing. Furthermore, the United Kingdom has, since 1981, carried out a safeguards research and development programme, which is funded to the sum of approximately £1 million annually, in support of the International Atomic Energy Agency. A substantial proportion of this programme is devoted to the development of techniques relevant to the safeguarding of reprocessing plants.

Hinkley Point C

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received the inspector's report from the Hinkley Point C public inquiry; and when he intends to announce his decision on Nuclear Electric's application and to publish the report.

Mr. Wakeham: I have just received the inspector's report. I shall not be in a position to reach a decision on Nuclear Electric's application until I have thoroughly considered it, but I hope to reach this position by the late summer.

The normal procedure for planning inquiries is for the inspector's report to be published at the same time as my Decision. I intend to follow this procedure in the case of the Hinkley Point C inquiry.

Electricity Agreement (France)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the implications for the three-year agreement between the electricity supply industry and Electricité de France as part of the non-fossil fuel obligation as a result of current electricity output reductions in France; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The agreements between Electricité de France and the public electricity supply companies are not part of the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what criteria were considered when fixing the limit of 30 mm for topping-up loft insulation within the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The reference to 30 mm was in the consultation paper issued by the Energy Efficiency Office in February. The figure is that used previously for the homes insulation scheme. A number of representations concerning that level of insulation have been received as a result of the consultation process and are currently being considered.

Nuclear Power (Privatisation Fees)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he proposes to pay Kleinwort its full fees for the advice it gave on the privatisation of nuclear power.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Kleinwort Benson's fees for the relevant periods have been paid in full.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the price of shares in the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce the price of the shares in the 12 regional electricity companies on impact day. It is expected that will be during November 1990.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the television advertising campaign to sell the electricity distribution companies will commence.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Advertising to publicise the offer for sale of the 12 regional electricity companies will be undertaken to inform the public of the forthcoming flotations. It would be premature to set out provisional plans, which are subject to matters that will not be resolved until much nearer the time of flotations.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to have the estimated total of expenditure on advertising the sale of the electricity distribution companies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have nothing further to add to the answers that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member on 1 May and 6 June 1990.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he anticipates the Energy Efficiency Office announcing plans to include cavity wall insulation, electrical appliances and hot water tank thermostats within the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The possible inclusion of additional energy efficiency measures within the home energy efficiency scheme was an area on which a number of comments were received as a result of the recent consultation process. Those comments are currently being considered.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to implement a minimum standard of knowledge for the energy advisers to be operating under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A number of those responding to the recent consultation paper on the home energy efficiency scheme commented on the need for standards for the provision of energy advice. Those comments are currently being considered.

Nuclear Fuel (Reprocessing)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what further capital investment will be required by British Nuclear Fuels plc to meet its contractual obligations to the owners of foreign nuclear fuel to be reprocessed in Britain;

(2) what capital has been invested by British Nuclear Fuels plc to enable it to reprocess foreign nuclear fuel in Britain.

Mr. Wakeham: British Nuclear Fuels plc has reprocessing contracts for both Magnox fuel and thermal oxide fuel. Magnox fuel is reprocessed in facilities constructed for the United Kingdom's own Magnox reactors and no significant additional capital investment has been necessary to reprocess foreign fuel.

British Nuclear Fuels plc thermal oxide reprocessing plant is being constructed to store and reprocess both United Kingdom and foreign thermal oxide fuel. Several of the associated plants for the treatment of wastes arising from THORP reprocessing will also treat wastes from Magnox fuel. British Nuclear Fuels plc estimates that the allocation of capital investment for the storage, reprocessing and waste management of foreign thermal oxide fuel to date is £1,100 million with £600 million still to be spent.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the estimated value of British Nuclear Fuels plc contracts to reprocess foreign nuclear fuel in Britain in the current year and each succeeding year up to 1995;

(2) what is the estimated total value of British Nuclear Fuels plc contracts to reprocess foreign nuclear fuel in Britain;

(3) what is the longest period of any contract entered into by British Nuclear Fuels Ltdplc to reprocess foreign nuclear fuel in Britain.

Mr. Wakeham: BNFL's estimated turnover relating to storage, reprocessing and waste treatment still to be performed on foreign nuclear fuel is around £4 billion, excluding £0·75 billion from the series of contracts which BNFL is currently completing with West German utilities. More detailed information on contracts is a matter for the company.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Police (Complaints)

102. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average period of time taken by the Director of Public Prosecutions in processing complaints by prisoners against police officers in specific cases; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Records of the time taken to process such cases are not kept. However, all such cases are processed as swiftly as possible. The time taken for any particular case depends on the complexity and size of the case. Simple straightforward cases are normally processed within two weeks of receipt of the police investigation report, more complex cases within three months and the most complex and largest cases within six to 12 months.

High Court, Northern Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General whether there is a separate family division at the High Court in Northern Ireland; how many judges at the High Court deal with the family problem of custody of children and access to children following separation or divorce; how many such applications await hearing in the High Court; and if he has any proposals to shorten the time required before such cases are heard in the High Court.

The Attorney-General: A separate family division of the High Court in Northern Ireland was created by the Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978. The business of the family division is assigned to one of the judges of the High Court who is assisted by other judges of the Supreme Court as necessary. All 10 High Court judges hear petitions for divorce and judicial separation and deal with questions of custody of and access to children arising therefrom.

There are two custody applications awaiting hearing and one access application listed for hearing in the week beginning 11 June 1990.

Waiting times are in general considered to be satisfactory and there are therefore no proposals to shorten the time required before custody cases are heard by the court.

Court House, Armagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what are the arrangements for flying the union flag at the court house in Armagh city; and why it was not flown on 2 June.

The Attorney-General: An attempt was made by the office manager to fly the union flag at Armagh court house on 2 June 1990, but when being hoisted it caught on barbed wire and was torn to the extent that it was rendered unusable.

A new flag has been supplied and will be flown on all appropriate dates in accordance with standing instructions.

Evidence (Fax Machines)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Attorney-General whether there is any proposal to make provision, in relation to the Supreme Court for the admissibility of evidence from solicitors of documents in evidence via fax machines; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There are currently no proposals to make provision in the Supreme Court, for the admissibility of evidence from solicitors of documents in evidence via fax machines.

Fax copies are unsuited for use as part of the permanent court record because of their tendency to fade. The question of filing court documents by fax will be kept under review, in particular whether technological advances will make fax copies suitable as permanent documents.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste Imports

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details of the quantity of toxic waste imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The latest figure for imports of hazardous waste into the United Kingdom under the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations for the calender year 1989, is 41,554 tonnes. This figure is an update of the one given in the written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on 21 March 1990, Official Report columns 684-85, taking into account additional notifications received from disposers.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the Government's estimates of toxic waste imports to the United Kingdom in each of the next five years.

Mr. Trippier: The Government make no estimate of future imports of hazardous waste into the United Kingdom. However, it is expected that imports from other EC member states will reduce in future years following the Council of Environment Ministers' decision in Luxembourg on 7 June 1990 that member states must aim to be self-sufficient in waste disposal.

Drought

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will commission a study into the effects of prolonged drought on bird life that requires a diet of freshwater fish; and what information he has on the numbers of herons observed fishing in the sea along the south coast.

Mr. Trippier: There is no evidence that the risk to birds from the effects of drought is so significant as to justify commissioning a study. Populations of herons and other waterways birds are monitored annually. I have no information about the extent to which herons fish in the sea, but I understand that it is not unusual.

Sea Birds (Poisoning)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the research centre at Monkswood has within the last 12 months examined any sea birds for evidence of glycol poisoning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Institute of Terrestrial Ecology's Monkswood experimental station—part of the natural environment research council—has not examined any sea-birds for evidence of glycol poisoning in the past 12 months.

In 1988 the institute carried out analysis and post mortem studies on a number of birds found dead in the Bacton area of Norfolk. No single cause of death could be found at post mortem and none of the chemical or metal residues found in the birds could, taken singly, be considered to have caused death. Tests for glycol residues were inconclusive, although glycols are not generally considered to be especially toxic to vertebrates. No further incidents have been brought to the institute's attention.

Planning Appeals, Manchester

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of planning appeals made to his Department against decisions made by each local authority in Greater Manchester in (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987, (d) 1988 and (e) 1989, together with the number of appeals upheld in each year against each authority.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is as follows:

Appeals 1985-86

Notes:
1. Appeals received do not equal those decided. Cases decided in any one year were not necessarily received in that year.
2. The Greater Manchester Metropolitan County Council was abolished in 1986.

Development Plans

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases there have been in the last 12 months where developers have been found liable for costs after they have pursued appeals against refusals properly substantiated by policies in up-to-date development plans.

Mr. Michael Spicer: During the 12 months from 1 June 1989 to 31 May 1990, my right hon. Friend and planning inspectors awarded the planning authority's appeal costs against an appellant in 53 cases, where the appellant's

"unreasonable" behaviour, as interpreted in DOE circular 2/87, caused the planning authority to incur costs unnecessarily. These awards were justified by the circumstances in each case; and I regret that an analysis of cases in which the award was based solely on inconsistency with an up-to-date development plan could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Leaseholders

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce legislation for the enfranchisement of leaseholders of flats.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no immediate plans to do so. As the law stands, freehold tenure does not provide a sound basis for the ownership of flats. The concept of commonhold is being developed with a view to overcoming this problem, but a number of important issues remain to be resolved. I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor intends to make a statement on the subject in due course.

Climatic Change

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to proposals for a European Community centre of studies of climatic change; and if he will make a statement on the results of discussions held in Madrid for this purpose.

Mr. Trippier: There is at present no European Community proposal for a centre for climate change studies. The directors of western European meteorological services have recently established an ad-hoc working group, which first met in Madrid on 5 and 6 June to consider possible initiatives for co-ordinating their activities on climate change issues. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister opened the new Hadley centre for climate prediction and research on 25 May. This will build on the leading work of the United Kingdom Meteorological Office, and international co-operation will be an important part of its remit.

Industrial Rates

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the cost to the Treasury of industrial derating for manufacturing industries.

Mr. Chope: The aggregate rate liability of factories, mills, works and workshops in England and Wales in 1990-91, subject to transition, is around £2·1 billion.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what limit he can impose on the amounts that firms situated in enterprise zones may offset against any taxable benefit tied to that location in respect of other enterprises outside such zones making losses.

Mr. Moynihan: None. The circumstances in which tax relief available in enterprise zones can be utilised is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Ozone

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that information on low-level ozone build-up is released automatically to the press and public on a daily basis wherever it exceeds World Health Organisation air quality guidelines.

Mr. Trippier: Information on ozone levels is already automatically released through the Department's press office, as I said in the answer I gave on Tuesday 24 April 1990 to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey, (Mr. Hughes) at column 121. So far this year, 27 daily summaries have been released and many requests for information have been received.

Housing Associations (Low-cost Houses)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in implementation of the provisions for repurchase by housing associations of low-cost houses.

Mr. Chope: The Department is anxious to ensure that shared ownership housing association schemes on scarce sites in rural communities continue to benefit local people with modest means. We are now considering proposals from the Housing Corporation for a housing association rural repurchase scheme, which it is hoped to introduce shortly.

Student Nurses

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress has been made in reclassifying psychiatric student nurses as students for the purposes of the community charge;

(2) if he will now reconsider the definition or classification of student nurses for the purpose of the community charge.

Mr. Chope: The eligibility criteria for the student relief are set out in the Personal Community Charge (Students) Regulations 1989—S.I. 1989/443. They already provide that students on undergraduate nursing courses and those undertaking Project 2000 training will be eligible for the student relief. Over the next few years the Project 2000 scheme will be extended to cover all pre-registration nursing trainees at schools of nursing, including those training for psychiatric nursing.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of percentage price increases in the cost of living each year for the next five years in Scotland, Wales, northern England, southern England and south-east England due to the uniform business rate.

Mr. Chope: In fixing the national non-domestic rate poundages for England and Wales for 1990-91 the Government have aimed to raise in real terms from private businesses and the nationalised industries broadly the same amount in rates as they paid in 1989-90. In future years, the poundage cannot, by law, rise by more than the level of inflation. The new system is therefore not inflationary. There is no uniform business rate in Scotland, though my right hon. and learned Friend has taken powers to harmonise the local poundages there with the non-domestic rate poundage in England over a period of years.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he proposes to make to the announcement by West Germany of a ban on the domestic use and production of chlorofluorocarbons by 1995, and the banning of the use of halogenated hydrocarbons in hand-held extinguishers and on the use of carbon tetrachloride and methyl chloroforms as solvents by 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Future international controls on ozone depleting substances will be decided at the meeting of the Montreal protocol parties in London at the end of this month. In the light of the results of that meeting, member states of the European Community will discuss what measures to impose within the Community, consistent with the operation of the single European market.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce a Bill to implement the Montreal protocol proposals to cause a reduction in the use of chlorofluorocarbons and halons.

Mr. Trippier: The Montreal protocol is implemented on a Community wide basis by EC regulation 3322/88, which is directly applicable in United Kingdom law. The Commission has proposed a new regulation aimed at implementing the changes to the protocol which should be agreed at the end of this month. Member states will consider the draft regulation in the light of the changes which are actually agreed—we expect to complete the process by the end of 1990.

North Sea Conference

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the implementation, proposed to be drawn up within three months, of the North sea conference on 8 March.

Mr. Trippier: I hope to publish the Government's guidance note on implementation of the third North sea conference within the next month.

Disability Grants

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will delay implementation of the new scheme for means-tested grants for people with disabilities until local authorities have received full information on the scheme.

Mr. Chope: The new scheme will be introduced on 1 July by which time local authorities will have received full information by way of Departmental circulars.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Hands of Calderdale as part of the consultation process on proposed procedures for means-testing home improvement grants for people with disabilities; and if he will be responding to their questions.

Mr. Chope: The Department received a letter from Hands of Calderdale in response to the consultation exercise on the test of resources for the new disabled facilities grants being introduced under part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Their comments were considered along with those of other consultees in finalising the test of resources regulations.

Housing

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table which, allowing for recent adjustments to the Housing Corporation's capital programme, shows for 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 (a) the number of housing association new approvals and (b) the number of housing association completions.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The Housing Corporation is currently discussing with housing associations the implications of recent adjustments to the corporation's capital programme for the level of approvals and completions over the next three years. The Housing Corporation has already indicated that housing association completions in 1990-91 are expected to exceed earlier forecasts. Thereafter, massive expansion in the output of new homes is still expected.

Norman Shaw North (Water Supply)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what pollutants have recently been found in the water supply to the Norman Shaw North parliamentary office building; and what action has been taken to remove them.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 June 1990]: Following a complaint about the quality of drinking water in the building, samples were tested by the laboratory of the Government chemist. Those taken from the supply to the Embankment side of the building were found to contain coli-aerogenes. Remedial action was taken. Further tests samples taken on 5 June 1990 contained no coli-aerogenes and the supply has now been reinstated.

Tyne and Wear Development Corporation

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has as to how many new jobs in Sunderland have been created by the activities of the Tyne and Wear development corporation, from its inception.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 June 1990]: To date, 1,138 jobs have been created in Sunderland through the activities of the Tyne and Wear development corporation.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to test the accuracy of job creation forecasts given to his Department by Tyne and Wear Development Corporation.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 June 1990]: The corporation is well aware of the advice issued by the Department about job-creation figures and I have every confidence that the appropriate techniques are being applied.

Sunderland Enterprise Zone

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of the cost to Her Majesty's Government of the Sunderland enterprise zone, broken down into (a) rate relief and (b) capital allowances.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 June 1990]: The initial estimate of the overall costs of the zone was given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 7 December 1988. The cost of rate relief and capital allowances in the zone will depend on the progress of reclamation and development and the decisions of individual firms.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what facilities his Department offers to local government to spread the best practice in suspected cases of sexual abuse of children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

The Department routinely issues guidance to local authorities, and has recently hosted a national conference for chairmen of area child protection committees, the proceedings of which will be disseminated. In addition, several projects in the Department's central training initiative are concerned with child sexual abuse and as part of the training support programme (child care) a special development group has produced guidelines for local authority training officers to assist them with planning their staff training in this area. The Department's social services inspectorate also produce reports which highlight good practice.

Aquaguard

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to renew the product licence for Aquaguard.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Minister is hoping to make a statement shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuna

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he has taken to assure himself that the tuna fish served in the House is caught in a manner harmless to dolphins.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Refreshment Department purchases only canned tuna fish products which derive from skipjack tuna and, which it is understood, do not usually swim with dolphins. It is also keeping itself informed of developments in the marketing of "dolphin-safe" canned tuna fish. It is impracticable for the Department to purchase foodstuffs from other than a wholesaler.

Parliament (Organisation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will consider an approach from a management consultancy company to undertake a study on the organisation of the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am always interested in suggestions which may lead to improvements in the organisation of the House and the services provided for hon. and right hon. Members. However, a separate study by management consultants would not seem appropriate at present in the light of the review of management, decision-taking and financial responsibilities which was announced by the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith), on behalf of the House of Commons Commission, on 23 May, Official Report, column 179.

Motions

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Lord President of the Council on how many days since 1 July 1987 the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) has tabled notices of motion relating to each of (a) a Select Committee on Legal Affairs, (b) the reform of the House of Commons procedure, (c) sittings of the House and (d) Members' facilities; and what estimate he has made of the total cost to public funds and the volume of newsprint that have been involved in the printing of these motions.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The total cost to public funds of printing and publishing notices of motions relating to (a) a Select Committee on Legal Affairs, (b) the reform of the House of Commons procedure, (c) sittings of the House and (d) Members facilities, tabled by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) since Sessions 1987-88, 1988-89 with 1989-90 up to and including 7 June 1990, is estimated as £55,000. The volume of paper consumed was about 300,000 sheets of A4 paper.

The number of days on which the notices of motions were tabled in each Session are as follows:

Motion	Number of days
	Session 1987-88	Session 1988-89	Session 1989-90[1]	Total
(a) Select Committee on Legal Affairs	—	71	92	163
(b) Procedure	69	122	92	283
(c) Sittings	69	123	92	284
(d) Facilities	—	115	92	207

[1] Up to and including 7 June 1990.

Secretarial Facilities

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Lord President of the Council what action he intends to take to improve the secretarial facilities for hon. Members.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In the context of planning for the new parliamentary buildings several initiatives have been taken to improve conditions for Members' secretaries. Further accommodation has been provided in Canon row; 100 new desk spaces are planned for phase 1; more will be included in phase 2; and, in the Services Committee's third report of this Session (HC 334) recommendations are made to establish basic minimum standards in respect of planning for future accommodation.

Any proposal to increase the secretarial allowance is a matter for the House to decide.

Pedestrian Access

Dr. Marek: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any proposals to improve pedestrian access across the road directly outside St. Stephen's entrance and Chancellor's Gate.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee has accepted the advice of the traffic authorities that all pedestrians crossing St. Margaret's street should be encouraged to use the existing facility. It is understood that the installation of any additional crossing would run counter to plans to improve the management and safety of pedestrians and traffic in that area.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give for each year from 1978 the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by the Privy Council Office, expressing the figures in (a) cash terms, (b) 1978-79 money terms and (c) units of consumption for electricity in kilowatt hours, gas in therms, liquid fuel in litres and solid fuel in tonnes.

Sir Geoffrey Howe [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The Privy Council Office, as the joint occupier of a building complex, pays a negotiated proportion of composite charges for gas, and for electricity. The office does not incur any costs in repect of liquid or solid fuels. The total units of consumption for gas and electricity in the financial year 1989-90 were given in my answer on 10 May 1990, but comparable figures for the previous decade could not be accurately calculated except at disproportionate cost. The annual costs to the Department in cash, and 1978-79 money, terms for gas and electricity for those years for which figures are available are as follows:

	Cash terms		1978-79 money terms
	Gas £	Electricity £	Gas £	Electricity £
1983-84	1,350	6,150	793	3,611
1984-85	1,854	8,446	1,037	4,725
1985-86	2,160	9,840	1,146	5,224
1986-87	2,511	11,439	1,289	5,874
1987-88	1,782	8,118	868	3,956
1988-89	1,675	7,632	762	3,472
1989-90	1,920	10,923	820	4,666

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Advisers

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the advisers to his Department, and the area of work for which their advice was required, for the period since 1 January 1984.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are two special advisers at present, Mr. D. Lidington and Mr. M. Fraser. Their role is to consider the presentational and domestic political aspects of policy issues, including those for which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not have lead responsibility. Others who have held the post during the period since January 1984 are Mr. J. Houston, Mr. A. Teasdale and Mr. A. Fergusson.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the courses of action available to Her Majesty's Government (a) in the prevention of the settlement of Russian emigrants in territories illegally occupied by Israel and (b) to persuade Israel to take part in a conference with a view to negotiating a settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Israelis are well aware of our view that the settlement of Soviet Jews in the occupied territories, including east Jerusalem, is both illegal and a serious obstacle to peace and should not be permitted. We are working closely with the United States and other interested parties to encourage Israel to open a dialogue with representative Palestinians as a first step towards a comprehensive settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute which will have to be negotiated at an international conference.

Mrs. Asmat Jan and Son

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the applications made to the post in Islamabad by Mrs. Asmat Jan and her son Atlas Khan, Refs: IMM/92511 and K22704, to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the question to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive a reply from the unit as soon as possible.

Defence Policy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to the foreign policy implications of the options for change study.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has, of course, been consulting us and other colleagues on the work he has in hand. He will be reporting to the House on this in due course.

Naval Policy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what international negotiations on (a) naval confidence-building measures and (b) naval disarmament the Government are currently involved.

Mr. Waldegrave: No negotiations are taking place on naval arms control involving the United Kingdom. The subject of naval disarmament does, however, feature on the agenda of the annual United Nations disarmament conference.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current assessment of the feasibility of opening negotiations on (a) naval confidence-building measures and (b) naval disarmament.

Mr. Waldegrave: The alliance's priority for conventional arms control remains land and air forces, because of the potential threat they can pose to stability. Naval forces are explicitly excluded from conventional arms control negotiations taking place in Vienna by their terms of reference.

Mr. Choudhry Mohammad Waheed

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he issued instructions to the post in Islamabad to issue entry clearance to Mr.

Choudhry Mohammad Waheed following his successful appeal against refusal to grant entry clearance, Ref. TH/7817, in August 1989; when they were received there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

Rail Services

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider making grants to the British Rail Board towards the reopening of rail lines or the reinstatement of rail services where such services will relieve traffic congestion or enhance travel opportunities to the benefit of the community.

Mr. Freeman: Grants may be made under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 towards the cost of investments which are not financially viable but which can be justified on wider social and economic grounds. The availability of such grants to British Rail was noted by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in his letter of 19 December 1989 to the chairman of the British Rail reported in the Official Report on 19 December, at columns 227-32.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the extent to which bus substitution provides an acceptable alternative to existing rail services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to make any such assessment in the first instance in the light of the objectives set by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in his letter of 19 December 1989 to the chairman of the British Railways Board.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider increasing the public service obligation grant to British Rail in respect of the Provincial Services Network in line with inflation each year; and what account he takes of the need to reduce overcrowding and congestion and increase reliability of services when considering increases to the public service obligation grant.

Mr. Freeman: The size of the grant needs to reflect progress made by British Rail in increasing revenue and reducing costs. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has set quality targets for reliability, punctuality and load factors, which were taken into account when the current financial targets were set in his letter of 19 December 1989 to the chairman of the board.

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish guidelines to Network SouthEast and the Provincial Services Network of British Rail concerning the level of services supported by public services obligation grant he expects them to provide.

Mr. Freeman: The British Railways Board was directed on 30 March 1988 to provide a public service generally comparable with that provided at the date the direction was made. The direction is published each year in the board's annual report and accounts. Quality of service standards were among the objectives set by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in his letter of 19 December 1989 to the chairman of the board.

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. Atkins: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I have nothing to add to the replies given to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 30 March 1990 and to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 15 March 1990.

Smoking on Trains

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to reintroduce section 20 of the Regulation of Railways Act 1868, repealed in 1959.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of smoking accommodation on trains is now a matter for the management of British Rail and other railway undertakings to decide.

Dangerous Substances

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give consideration to transferring to local authorities the enforcement of the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Atkins: The regulations are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive. I have no plans to change this.

Aircraft Pollution

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies are being carried out into the influence of water vapour created by aircraft on the atmosphere, and on the stratosphere in particular, over and above naturally occuring water vapour levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the troposphere, water vapour is known to be an important natural contributor to the greenhouse effect, although the contribution made by aircraft is negligible. Whether the amounts emitted by aircraft directly into the lower reaches of the stratosphere are significant is a matter on which I am seeking advice from Professor Hoskins, the Department's scientific adviser on global environment.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals exist for scienific studies into the effect on stratospheric ozone in relation to proposals for a post-Concorde fleet of supersonic transport aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the United States of America the National Aeronautical and Space Administration is undertaking a major programme of research into this issue in view of the recent revival of interest in supersonic transport aircraft. In addition to determining the potential impact of an supersonic transport aircraft fleet on the protective ozone layer, NASA is also seeking to establish technologies and operational procedures that would ensure that future supersonic transport operations would not result in significant ozone depletion. At home, Warren Spring laboratory has been asked to consider what effect aircraft operations in the stratosphere might have on the ozone layer.

Rail Safety

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the railway inspectorate on the safety implications of allowing locomotive number 86238 to travel from Norwich Crown Point to Manningtree on 7 June without a qualified driver.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the locomotive was used in conjunction with one of the driving trailers which are to be introduced on Liverpool Street to Norwich InterCity services later in the year. The train was driven by a traction inspector who was fully qualified to drive both the locomotive and driving trailer. Two other, similarly qualified inspectors were also on board. Had a driver been present he would only have assisted with route knowledge and all three traction inspectors were fully competent in that respect. The railway inspectorate assures me that safety was not compromised.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money he estimates to have been saved by compulsory competitive tendering in road and other transport schemes in each of the last five years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 June 1990]: Competitive tendering has been the long-term policy for the construction of the Department's motorway and trunk road schemes. Fee competition for consultants responsible for the preparation, design and supervision of construction of these schemes was introduced in January 1985. This has resulted in projected savings of about 25 per cent. on the total whole life costs of commissions placed in the first five years.

Local authority highway works have been increasingly exposed to compulsory competitive tendering since 1981 but information on which to base estimates of savings is not available. The Audit Commission has begun a study of effects of. the 1987 and 1988 regulatory changes, which require all highway works over £25,000 and 60 per cent. of work at or below that threshold to be subjected to compulsory competitive tender.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give full details of the ships, aircraft and other pollution control equipment available to the marine pollution control unit; where these ships and aircraft are based; and what plans he has to augment the unit's equipment.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The list of directly owned or contracted counter-pollution resources available to the marine pollution control unit is extensive; copies have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

In addition, the unit can also hire equipment from commercial sources in the United Kingdom and can call on assistance from other North sea states under the terms of the Bonn agreement for co-operation in dealing with oil spillages.

A full review of United Kingdom preparedness to deal with an oil spill at sea was completed last year after the Exxon Valdez incident in Alaska. I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 6 March 1990, Official Report, columns 551-52.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has supplied to the European Commission on arrangements concerning the transport of nuclear fuel and waste through the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: When Eurotunnel puts forward proposals covering the movement of dangerous goods and radioactive materials, they will be considered by the intergovernmental commission established by the channel tunnel treaty to oversee safety, and any necessary advice sought.

The European Commission does not at present have any direct influence in this field.

THE ARTS

European Audiovisual Industry

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the European Commission's proposals to encourage the production of more European-made programmes for television.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon West (Miss Nicholson) on 6 June, Official Report, column 607, on Her Majesty's Government's support for the Commission's proposed 250 million ecu budget to promote the European audiovisual industry.

EMPLOYMENT

Special Needs Training

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy that the cost of funding special needs training will continue to be underwritten by the Government.

Mr. Eggar: The Government will continue to ensure that all eligible people with special training needs who join youth training or employment training have access to suitable training programmes. The cost of such training will in part be met by the contributions of scheme sponsors and employers, and in some cases by training and enterprise councils out of their own self-generated funds. The Government contribute funds, totalling more than £2 billion, for youth training and employment training in 1990-91, to ensure that its declared guarantees and aims for youth and adult training are fully met.

Genetic Manipulation

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list any prosecutions, enforcement notices or improvement notices issued under the Genetic Manipulation Regulations 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: Since the Health and Safety (Genetic Manipulation) Regulations 1989 came into force on 1 November 1989 a total of five improvement notices have been served by the Health and Safety Executive to enforce the requirements of these regulations.

Three of the notices were served on the City and Hackney health authorities at St. Bartholomew's hospital, London and a further two were served on a department head at the hospital.

Employment Exchanges

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give full consideration to the social value of a local part-time employment exchange before considering any proposal for its closure;

(2) if he will ensure that the local authorities covering any part of the area served by a part-time local employment exchange are fully consulted and that full weight is given to their response before considering any proposal to close any such office; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will list any part-time local employment exchanges in Wales which his Department is currently considering closing;

(4) if he will undertake a full process of public consultation with any community served by a local part-time employment exchange before considering any proposal for its closure.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 13 June.

In considering the closure of a part-time local office, full consideration is given as to how best to provide the most effective service to ES clients. Larger full-time offices offer a comprehensive range of services and are better able to help unemployed people back to work.

The following part-time local offices in Wales are scheduled for closure by the end of July:

Bethesda
Brynamman
Clydach
Cwm
Hirwaun
Merthyr Vale (Aberfan)
New Tredegar
Pembroke
Senghenydd.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industry Council

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the European Economic Community Industry Council meeting of 28 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Industry Council on 28 May discussed the involvement of small and medium sized enterprises in public procurement and EC R&D programmes, and the implications for such firms of the business environment. The Council considered the subject of semiconductors and held a first debate on the Commission's proposal for a seventh directive on aid to the shipbuilding industry. The Commission also presented its views of prospects for the EC steel industry over the next five years. The business was both uncontroversial and routine in character.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Britain was represented at ministerial level at the recent meeting of the European Community Industry Council at which steel was discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom was represented by the United Kingdom permanent representative to the Community, Sir David Hannay, supported by senior DTI officials.

Steel Industry

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to meet the chairman of British Steel to discuss the proposed closure of the strip mill at Ravenscraig.

Mr. Ridley: I last met Sir Robert Scholey on 5 June when we had a confidential discussion.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the chairman of the British Steel Corporation to discuss the future of the steel industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I last met Sir Robert Scholey on 5 June when we had a confidential discussion.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations about the working of the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Redwood: I receive a considerable number of representations on a variety of topics relating to the regulation of financial services.

Chartered Accountants

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has for fresh legislation to cover the chartered accountants profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: We have no plans to legislate in respect of chartered accountants in particular or the accountancy profession in general. However, the implementation of part II of the Companies Act 1989 and of Directive 89/48/EEC on the mutual recognition of professional qualifications will affect parts of the accountancy profession, including chartered accountants.

Greenhouse Effect

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information his Department collects on the production of chemicals which may have a harmful effect on the ozone layer; if he will break down this information by manufacturer for the most recent 12-month period available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: There are only two United Kingdom manufacturers of chlorofluorocarbons, one of which also manufactures halons. They are obliged, under EC Regulation 3322/88, to report their production of these substances to the European Commission at six-monthly intervals. They do so on a commercially confidential basis, and copy the data to my Department and to the Department of the Environment.

There are no reporting arrangements for the production of other ozone-depleting substances.

British Steel

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the date of his last meeting with the chairman of British Steel; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 June 1990]: I last met Sir Robert Scholey on 5 June when we had a confidential discussion.

National Consumer Council

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much is paid from public funds to the National Consumer Council; for what purpose those funds are paid; and who are the members of the council.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 June 1990]: For the financial year 1990-91 the total grant-in-aid to the National Consumer Council will be £2·178 million. This amount includes the grants-in-aid to the Scottish Consumer Council, Welsh Consumer Council and Consumers in the European Community Group which are paid via the National Consumer Council.

The grant is paid to the National Consumer Council to enable it to carry out the functions described in its memorandum of association, that is to promote action for furthering and safeguarding the interests of consumers, to ensure that those who take decisions which will affect the consumer can have a balanced and authoritative view of the interests of consumers before them and to insist that the interests of all consumers, including the inarticulate and disadvantaged, are taken into account.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that the National Consumer Council reflects the views of consumers.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 June 1990]: On many subjects there may be no one consumer view. However, I am satisfied that in so far as it is possible to do so, the National Consumer Council reflects the views of consumers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are taken by his Department to check claims made by the National Consumer Council before those claims are made public knowledge.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The Department does not check the claims made by the National Consumer Council (NCC) before they are made public knowledge, nor does it believe that it would be appropriate for it to do so.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to increase the accountability of the National Consumer Council to consumers.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 June 1990]: No. I am satisfied that the National Consumer Council adequately takes account of the views of consumers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to phase out the funding of the National Consumer Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 12 June 1990]: No.

Export Licences

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences have been granted under the powers given to him by the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 to firms seeking to export equipment to (a) Jordan, (b) Syria, (c) Libya, (d) India, (e) Pakistan, (f) Israel, (g) Saudi Arabia, (h) Egypt and (i) Argentina in the last 10 years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 June 1990]: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at extremely disproportionate cost.

Trade Licences

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences have been granted under the powers given to him by the Import, Export and Custom Powers (Defence) Act 1939 to (a) Matrix Churchill Ltd., (b) TMG Engineering Ltd., (c) Technology and Trade Development Group Ltd. and (d) Canira Technical Corp. Ltd., in the last 10 years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 June 1990]: It is not the practice to publish such information.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Statistics

10. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chief constable of Warwickshire to discuss crime figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend meets chief officers of police on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of policing matters, but he has no present plans for a meeting with the chief constable of Warwickshire to discuss crime figures in particular.

17. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Cumbria to discuss crime figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend meets chief officers of police on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of policing matters, but he has no present plans for a meeting with the chief constable of Cumbria to discuss crime figures in particular.

20. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chief constable of Gwent to discuss crime figures.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend meets chief officers of police on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of policing matters, but he has no present plans for a meeting with the chief constable of Gwent to discuss crime figures in particular.

24. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chief constable of Staffordshire to discuss crime figures.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend meets chief officers of police on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of policing matters, but he has no present plans for a meeting with the chief constable of Staffordshire to discuss crime figures in particular.

28. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chief constable of Leicestershire to discuss crime figures.

42. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Wiltshire to discuss crime figures.

49. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Surrey to discuss crime figures.

73. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Sussex to discuss crime figures.

80. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Derbyshire to discuss crime figures.

95. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Chief Constable of Greater Manchester to discuss crime figures.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend meets chief officers of police on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of policing matters, but he has no present plans for meetings to discuss crime figures in particular.

37. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what comparable figures he has on international levels of crime and on the level of crime in England and Wales.

46. Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the level of crime in England and Wales, in each member country of the European Community and in the United States of America.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend and my hon. and learned Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Ipswich (Mr. Irvine).

British Summer Time

13. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further representations he has received in respect of proposed changes to British summer time.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further representations he has received in respect of proposed changes to British summer time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones).

Car Security

14. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with motor manufacturers in the last year on improving the quality of car security.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no discussions with motor manufacturers in the last year but he has written recently to the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders to invite them to discuss what more can be done by motor manufacturers to improve the quality of car security. I have also written to the Consumers Association to invite it to meet me to consider how consumer demand for improved car security can be encouraged.

59. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the quality of car security.

76. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the quality of car security.

86. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the quality of car security.

Mr. John Patten: So far this year, we have answered two parliamentary questions, four letters from Members of Parliament and three letters from members of the public about car security. The parliamentary questions and one letter from a Member were concerned about the action taken by the motor manufacturers to improve the quality of car security.

Crime Prevention

15. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chief constable of West Yorkshire to discuss crime prevention initiatives.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has, at present, no plans to meet the chief constable of West Yorkshire, but officials maintain regular contact with the West Yorkshire police to discuss crime prevention issues.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

16. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the remaining scientific evidence in the Birmingham pub bombings case, in the light of the statements to the May inquiry that forensic evidence in the Maguire case can no longer be considered reliable.

33. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the remaining scientific evidence in the Birmingham pub bombing case, in the light of the statements to the May inquiry that forensic evidence in the Maguire case can no longer be considered reliable.

44. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider the remaining scientific evidence in the Birmingham pub bombings case, in the light of the statements to the May inquiry that forensic evidence in the Maguire case can no longer be considered reliable.

Mr. Waddington: I have said on many occasions that I will consider any new evidence which appears to call into question the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six. I will of course take into account any evidence presented to the May inquiry which may be relevant to those convictions.

19. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to have the results of the Devon and Cornwall police investigation into aspects of the Birmingham pub bombings case.

39. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to have the results of the Devon and Cornwall police investigation into aspects of the Birmingham pub bombings case.

62. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to have the results of the Devon and Cornwall police investigation into aspects of the Birmingham pub bombings case.

96. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to have the results of the Devon and Cornwall police investigations into aspects of the Birmingham pub bombings case.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given earlier to the question from the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short).

23. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that material in police or other official archives relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case will not be destroyed.

56. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that material in police or other official archives relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case will not be destroyed.

65. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that material in police and other official archives relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case will not be destroyed.

79. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that material in police or other official archives relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case will not be destroyed.

Mr. Waddington: As I made clear in response to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 26 April, I understand that the West Midlands police and the Devon and Cornwall constabulary have made arrangements to ensure that all material in their possession relating to the Birmingham pub bombings case is stored in secure conditions pending the outcome of further inquiries into the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six. Relevant papers in the possession of the Home Office will also be preserved.

38. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to recover the 2,000 or so non-material statements which were not made available to solicitors acting for the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks).

53. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the Birmingham six; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Since the beginning of this year, we have received representations from Members of both Houses of Parliament, representatives of the clergy and members of the public, both here and abroad, expressing concern about the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six.

Careful consideration is given to all representations received about the safety of convictions. My right hon. and learned Friend has asked the chief constable of the West Midlands police for a report on a number of points arising out of representations made to him about the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six. These matters are now the subject of inquiries by the Devon and Cornwall constabulary, and my right hon. and learned Friend will take full account of the report of the outcome of those inquiries, together with any other relevant information, before deciding whether his further intervention in the case would be justified.

55. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to recover the playing cards which were an exhibit in the Birmingham pub bombings case but which have since disappeared.

98. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to recover the playing cards which were an exhibit in the Birmingham pub bombings case but which have since disappeared.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to recover the playing cards which were an exhibit in the Birmingham pub bombings case but which have since disappeared.

Mr. John Patten: The cards, which were mentioned in the evidence for the defence, were not an exhibit at the trial. It was, of course, open to the defence to bring them before the court if they had wished to do so, but they did not. However, the police are making inquiries to trace the present location of the playing cards said to have been used by various members of the Birmingham Six on the train journey from Birmingham to Heysham.

Police Allowances

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on his discussions with the Police Federation regarding allowances and the community charge.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Regulations to modify police rent allowance were laid on 9 March. These regulations took account of representations made be my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) and representatives of the staff side of the police negotiating board, including the Police Federation. The discussions resulted in a number of important changes to the original proposals.

Immigration

21. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals have been made under the 1992 programme to facilitate the greater access of residents in European Economic Community nations to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These matters remain under discussion between member states. My right hon. and learned Friend will in the usual way report to the House the conclusions of the current meeting of Immigration Ministers in Dublin.

Concessionary Television Licences

22. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from pensioners' representatives about free television licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1 January we have received 103 letters from people representing pensioners about free or reduced price television licences for pensioners. Ninety-seven were from hon. Members and six from organisations. We have no plans to change the present concessionary arrangements.

Strangeways Prison

25. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of the damage caused to Strangeways prision, Manchester, caused by the recent disturbances.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated total cost of damage to Strangeways prison, Manchester, caused by the recent disturbances.

Mr. Mellor: I announced on 17 May at columns 489-90 plans for the refurbishment of Strangeways prison to provide a range of new and improved facilities, including integral sanitation at a cost of £60 million. This work will also include repair of the damage done during the recent disturbances, which amounts to about £30 million.

The Greater Manchester police authority advises that the additional cost of policing as a result of the disturbances was £580,000.

Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to refurbish Strangeways prison to enable it to be brought back into use as soon as possible.

64. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to refurbish Strangeways prison to enable it to be brought back into use as soon as possible.

Mr. [illegible]o: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress of his plans to refurbish Strangeways prison.

84. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to refurbish Strangeways prison to enable it to be brought back into use as soon as possible.

Mr. Mellor: As I announced on 17 May at columns 489-90 the refurbishment of HM prison Manchester should be completed in about three years' time. One of the remand wings—K wing—should, however, be back in use by October of this year, and the remaining accommodation in the remand wings should be available in about a year's time.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward legislation in the light of recent judgments on Sunday trading cases by the courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made on the question of Sunday trading.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it remains the Government's intention to reform the Shops Act 1950.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made on the question of Sunday trading.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on reform of the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans).

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many written representations in favour of and against Sunday trading he has received since 3 May.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since 3 May 1990 we have received 10 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and three against.

Police Houses

29. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the pay and conditions of police officers living in police houses.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have recently received a large number of representations from police officers, from hon. Members on behalf of police officers and from police representative organisations. These refer, in particular, to the Police (Amendment) Regulations 1990 and a proportion concern the position of officers living in provided accommodation. In response we have explained the reasons for setting aside certain aspects of the police negotiating board agreement on rent allowance. My right hon. and learned Friend has also made a number of important changes to the original proposals to meet points which were raised.

Prison Boards of Visitors

30. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the uprating of car mileage allowances payable to members of prison boards of visitors to the same level as that payable to prison staff and members of other prison committees.

Mr. Mellor: The co-ordinating committee made representations to the prison department in May 1988 to request that rates for boards of visitors travelling, subsistence and loss of earnings should be linked to the civil service rates rather than those applicable to justices of the peace.

Violent Crime

31. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of who are the most likely victims of violent crime.

68. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of who are the most likely victims of violent crime.

77. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of who are the most likely victims of violent crime.

Mr. John Patten: Recent research shows that in England and Wales young people aged 16 to 24 remain most at risk of becoming victims of assaults, and young men are by far at the greatest risk. People in England and Wales are less likely to be victims of violent crime (robbery, assaults and sexual assaults) than in most western European countries, the United States of America, Australia and Canada.

Prison Conditions

32. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to accelerate the ending of slopping out in prisons.

89. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to speed up action to provide access to sanitation in prisons to enable the procedure of slopping out in British prisons to be phased out by the year 2000.

94. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to accelerate the ending of slopping out in prisons.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on 3 May 1990 at column 659.

35. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what submissions he has received recently about the state of prisons in England.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office receives numerous communications about the state of prisons. These vary considerably in content from an individual's problem to more general concerns.

82. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chairman of the Prison Officers Association to discuss prison regimes.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at this stage to meet the chairman of the Prison Officers Association to discuss prison regimes, but should a request be made he will give the matter urgent consideration.

Football Matches

34. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to enable chief constables to veto the holding of Football Association and league football matches.

75. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what machinery now exists for the exercise of a police veto on a football fixture.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 8 May when my right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of the Football League they agreed to work out urgently with the Association of Chief Police Officers effective arrangements for obtaining police advice about the scheduling of fixtures and to act upon it on all occasions. We shall keep these arrangements under review, but at present we have no plans to introduce legislation on this matter.

Drugs

36. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on any new Government initiatives to deal with the drugs problem.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) on 29 January at column 19 in which I listed recent initiatives for combating the misuse of and traffic in drugs.

Further developments include:

the announcement of plans for a United Kingdom task force to advise other countries on ways of reducing the demand for drugs;

the setting up of a joint police/customs task force, to target cocaine and crack;

plans for the first seven Home Office drug prevention teams to be located in the London boroughs of Hackney, Lewisham, Newham and Southwark and in Birmingham, Brighton and Liverpool;

a further tranche of drug-related assistance to Colombia, amounting to some £4·5 million;

the unanimous adoption of a detailed 35-point political declaration at the conclusion of the world ministerial drugs summit in April giving a commitment to a range of practical measures to reduce the demand for drugs and combat the cocaine threat.

Police Manpower, Warwickshire

40. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current level of police manpower in Warwickshire; and what it was three years ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The position at 31 March is set out in the table:

1987—965 (2 vacancies)
1990—975 (45 vacancies)

Trevi Group

45. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet other members of the Trevi group to discuss the implications of open frontiers on levels of drug smuggling and terrorist activity.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is attending meetings of Trevi Ministers in Dublin today and tomorrow at which progress is strengthening police co-operation with a view to the implementation of the single European market will be reviewed. The Government are strongly committed to such co-operation, while believing that checks at United Kingdom ports and airports will continue to play a necessary part in combatting terrorism, drug trafficking and other crimes.

Public Order Laws

47. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is considering any amendments to the public order legislation currently in force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In reply to a question from my hon. Friend, my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd), the then Home Secretary, announced on 26 October 1989 at column 620 that an evaluation of section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986 was to be undertaken to obtain a clearer picture of the consistency and effectiveness of its application. We are now considering the representations received.

My right hon. and learned Friend is also considering the recommendations in Lord Justice Taylor's final report on the Hillsborough stadium disaster for the creation of some new offences and penalties in connection with behaviour at sports grounds.

Prison Officers

98. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the Prison Officers Association to discuss pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet the Prison Officers Association to discuss pay and conditions of service. Discussions concerning the annual pay award are currently taking place between officials of the Treasury, the Home Office and the appropriate trades unions, including the Prison Officers Association.

Videos

50. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the enforcement of the Video Recordings Act 1984 which restricts retailers from hiring 18 videos to children under the age of 18 years.

61. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he is making of the effectiveness of the law prohibiting the sale of 18 classification videos to minors; and what steps he is taking to make enforcement more effective.

Mr. Mellor: The Criminal Justice Act 1988 provides powers for local authority trading standards officers to enforce the provisions of the Video Recordings Act 1984 and the manner in which they discharge these duties is a matter for each local authority to decide. The Video Standards Council has recently drawn up a code of practice for the industry and we shall be monitoring its effectiveness closely. However, we have not ruled out the possibility of fresh legislation if such self-regulation proves inadequate.

Prison Population

51. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current prison population; what it was one year ago; and what are the equivalent figures for young offenders.

87. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current (a) adult and (b) young prisoner prison population; and what it was one year ago.

72. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current prison population; what it was one year ago; and what are the equivalent figures for young offenders.

Mr. Mellor: On Friday 8 June the total prison population, including those held in police cells, was 45,630. The corresponding figure for 9 June 1989 was 48,604. The latest information available in the form requested is for 31 March, when the total number of prisoners held in prison service establishments was 46,888: 37,224 were adult prisoners; 9,664 were prisoners aged under 21, of whom 6,655 were sentenced young offenders. The corresponding figures for 31 March 1989 were 49,180, 38,597, 10,583 and 7,395 respectively.

Metropolitan Police

52. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Metropolitan Police Commissioner; and if he discussed traffic problems.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the Commissioner on 5 June. Although traffic problems were not on the agenda on that occasion, regular contact is maintained with the Metropolitan police on traffic issues.

66. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss police manpower.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend last discussed police manpower with the commissioner on 21 December, when he met him to discuss his strategy statement for 1990, which was published on 11 January.

Mid-Glamorgan Fire Service

54. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chairman of the Mid-Glamorgan fire service to discuss emergency planning procedures.

Mr. John Patten: I have no plans for such a meeting.

Prisons, Isle of Wight

57. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to increase the current levels of security at Her Majesty's prisons on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Mellor: A number of improvements to the physical security of the three prisons on the Isle of Wight are currently in hand, planned or under consideration.

Football Hooligans

58. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutory provisions relating to the imposition of restriction orders and exclusion orders on football hooligans.

60. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers there are to allow courts to impose restriction orders and exclusion orders on football hooligans.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since August 1987 part IV of the Public Order Act 1986 has empowered courts to impose exclusion orders on those convicted of football-related offences as defined in that Act to prevent them from attending designated matches in England and Wales. Since 24 April 1990 the courts have been empowered by part II of the Football Spectators Act 1989 to impose restriction orders on those convicted of football-related offences as defined in that Act to prevent them from attending key matches outside England and Wales. From 1 June 1990 magistrates courts have had the power under the 1989 Act to impose restriction orders on those convicted of corresponding offences in Scotland or Italy.

Expatriates (Voting Rights)

63. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many United Kingdom expatriates have registered for voting purposes to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are 1,237 overseas electors on the United Kingdom electoral register for 1990-91. Corresponding information for the 1991-92 register, which will include those registered under the new provisions introduced by the Representation of the People Act 1989, will not become available until the draft register is published on or before 28 November of this year.

Firearms

69. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to review the effects of the Firearms (Amendment) Act and its implementation by different police forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under section 22 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 it is the function of the firearms consultative committee to review the provisions of the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1988 and to make to the Home Secretary such recommendations for improving their working as the committee thinks necessary. The Home Office also keeps the operation of the Act under general review. Administration of firearms controls is a matter for individual chief officers of police.

Political Asylum

70. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to amend the procedure for considering claims for asylum in the United Kingdom.

93. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to amend the procedure for considering claims for asylum in the United Kingdom.

97. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to amend the procedure for considering claims for asylum in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Procedures are kept under review. We have no present plans for fundamental change.

South Yorkshire Fire Authority

71. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the results of the review that is being currently carried out by the South Yorkshire fire authority of its own operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the chief fire officer of South Yorkshire fire service is reviewing the fire risk categorisation and standards of fire cover throughout the South Yorkshire area. When the review has been completed, the chief fire officer will submit his report and findings to the South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority. I understand that the review is still at a very early stage and it would be inappropriate for my right hon. and learned friend to speculate on when the results of the review will be available.

War Crimes

78. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress being made in the setting up of a war crimes investigation unit.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary indicated in the Second Reading debate on the War Crimes Bill on 19 March that the unit would not be set up before the Bill received Royal Assent. On 14 June another place declined to give the Bill a Second Reading. The Government now intend to reflect on all aspects of the issue before taking any decision on further action.

Right of Silence

81. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to amend the law relating to the right of silence of suspects in police custody; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 7 March at column 639.

Domestic Violence

83. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has recently revised his guidance to police officers about dealing with domestic violence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Work on a new set of guidelines is at an advanced stage and my right hon. and learned Friend hopes to issue them within the next few weeks. The new guidelines will represent an important step in ensuring that the victims of domestic violence receive the full protection of the law to which they are entitled.

Immigration (Airlines Liability)

88. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals relating to the operation of the Immigration (Carriers Liability) Act 1987 as it affects airlines.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 21 May at column 8.

Police Manpower, Northumbria

90. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the chief constable of Northumbria police to discuss manpower levels.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State met the chief constable and the police authority on 3 April when police manpower was discussed.

Remand Prisoners

91. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of remand prisoners held in police cells; and what it was one year ago.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn).

92. Mr. Cecil Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated total cost of damage to Strangeways prison, Manchester, caused by the recent disturbances.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Porter).

Ticket Touts

99. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to curb the activities of ticket touts.

Mr. John Patten: We have no general plans to introduce legislation in this area. We are currently considering the recommendation by Lord Justice Taylor for control of ticket touting at football matches.

Radio Broadcasting

100. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet the Director General of the BBC to discuss radio broadcasting.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend met the BBC board of governors yesterday, together with the director general and board of management, and discussed a wide range of broadcasting matters, including radio.

Sentencing

101. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the chairman of the National Association of Probation Officers to discuss sentencing policy.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans at present for the Home Secretary to meet the chairman of the National Association of Probation Officers, but we maintain regular contact with the association.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women in open prisons requested home leave to visit their children during 1989 or during the most recent available period.

Mr. Mellor: There were 212 recorded applications for home leave for this purpose during the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women in open prisons were granted home leave to visit their children during 1989 or during the most recent convenient period; and how many periods of home leave they were granted on average during this time.

Mr. Mellor: During the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990, 152 women from the three open establishments were granted at least one period of home leave to visit their children. Details of the average number of periods of home leave granted to individual prisoners are not readily available.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for granting home leave to women in open prison; and at what level the decision was made.

Mr. Mellor: All applications for home leave are considered by the establishment's home leave board and must be approved by the governor. The criteria for considering applications are laid down in circular instructions 9/1988 and 12/1988. For prisoners in open establishments, these will include the length of the prisoner's sentence, her behaviour in prison, whether the prisoner can be trusted not to commit any further offence during the leave and to return on time and the suitability of the accommodation where the home leave is to be spent.

Drinking in Public Places

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the request by Bolton metropolitan borough council to introduce a byelaw to prohibit drinking in public places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The byelaw is being tested on an experimental basis in seven areas. A decision on whether the byelaw will be made widely available will depend on the results of these experiments.

BBC Report (Chinese Nationals)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department made any representations to the British Broadcasting Corporation regarding its report at 1 pm on Friday 18 May, regarding 33 Chinese nationals.

Mr. Mellor: No. After the 1 pm report, the BBC asked for, and was given, the views of the Home Office.

Criminal Records

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an agency independent of the police charged with maintaining criminal records and meeting vetting requests.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements are being made for an early scrutiny of the issues involved and the implications of establishing such an agency.

Football Licensing Authority

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the location of the offices for the Football Licensing Authority and the number of staff to be employed.

Mr. John Patten: No final decision has yet been taken on the location of the offices of the Football Licensing Authority. We envisage that the authority will have a small headquarters staff headed by a chief executive, and a team of inspectors some of whom will probably be located in different parts of the country.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to announce the chairman and members of the Football Licensing Authority.

Mr. John Patten: As soon as possible.

Nuclear Accident, Greenwich

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans or studies have been undertaken to assess the measures that would have to be taken in the event of widespread contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to a question from the hon. Members for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 8 June at column 724.

Evidence (Fax Machines)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department's parole unit in relation to the admissibility of evidence from solicitors of documents in evidence via fax machines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The parole unit will accept documents by fax subject, where appropriate, to confirmation later of their provenance.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are to be taken to improve the effectiveness of policing the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 by the Scientific Procedures Inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This country is unique in having a full-time inspectorate consisting only of qualified medical practitioners and veterinary surgeons. The present controls are highly effective and my right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to change them.

Boundary Changes, Northampton

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the timetable of any prospective changes in ward or constituency boundaries within any part of the Northampton, North constituency or concerning Northampton, North.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Local Government Boundary Commission for England has agreed to carry out a review of the electoral arrangements for the borough of Northampton. This is likely to commence as soon as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has reached a decision in respect of a recent review of parishes in the borough of Northampton. The review is expected to be completed in good time for the next local elections to the borough council in 1995.

The Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England will commence its next general review of all constituency boundaries in England, including those of the Northampton, North constituency, in 1991. The commissions report must be submitted between 1993 and 1998.

Mother-and-Baby Units

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost per week of keeping a mother and her baby in the units at (a) Holloway, (b) Askham Grange and (c) Styal.

Mr. Mellor: In 1988-89, the average net operating costs per inmate per week for Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, Her Majesty's prison and young offender institution, Styal and Her Majesty's prison, Askham Grange were, respectively, £491, £340 and £314. Operating costs of the mother and baby units are not separately identified.

Correspondence

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters per month are being received by his Department from hon. Members; and what proportion of them are being answered within five, 10, 20 and 40 working days, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is laid out in the table:

Number of inquiries received by the Home Office from members of parliament for the months of January to April 1990.

Answered within	January	February	March	April
10 days	687	554	374	249
11-20 days	567	786	874	536
21-30 days	646	680	585	823
31-40 days	263	189	336	268
Total number of inquiries	2,551	2,875	2,904	2,534

Police Disciplinary Proceedings

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, following the outcome of recent police disciplinary proceedings relating to the investigation into the murder of PC Keith Blakelock, he will now review the convictions of Winston Silcott, Mark Braithwaite and Eugin Raghip.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 13 June 1990]: The disciplinary charges against Detective Chief Superintendent Melvin concerned Mr. Jason Hill, not the convictions of Mr. Braithwaite, Mr. Raghip or Mr. Silcott. My right hon. and learned Friend is always ready to consider cases in which it is suggested there might be new evidence which might call the safety of the convictions into question. We are considering whether the recent television programme contained any new evidence or other consideration of substance.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet Lord Justice Lane to discuss the safety of the convictions of Winston Silcott, Mark Braithwaite and Eugin Raghip for the murder of PC Keith Blakelock.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 13 June 1990]: No.

DEFENCE

Tanks and Helicopters

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department is making concerning the proper balance between tanks and helicopters for the British Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The balance between tanks and helicopters is kept under constant review.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if insensitive high explosives are used on the nuclear warheads fitted to United States air force SRAM-A missiles based in Britain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no United States air force SRAM-A missiles based in Britain.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any nuclear warheads of British manufacture use insensitive high explosive.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It would not be in the national interest to reveal such details of nuclear weapon design.

Harrier GR7

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the first Harrier GR7s to enter Royal Air Force service.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence took delivery of the first Harrier GR7 on 5 June this year. It will be in Royal Air Force service within the next few months.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying movements were authorised in the Borders tactical training area at less than 250 ft in the periods (1) 1 July 1986 to 30 June 1987, (2) 1 July 1987 to 30 June 1988 and (3) 1 July 1988 to 30 June 1989; and if he will provide a breakdown of the 1988-89 figure into movements in the Borders tactical training area (west) and the Borders tactical training area (east).

Mr. Neubert: The information requested regarding aircraft movements authorised in the Borders tactical training area at less than 250 ft is given in the table. It should be noted that the movements figures for the Borders tactical training area have, since 1988, been recorded on a different basis following the extension to the Borders training area, and the number of movements quoted for this area from July 1988 onwards is not directly comparable with earlier movement figures which predate the extension of the area. I regret that central records do not separately identify movements in the Borders tactical training area west and the Borders tactical training area east over the period for which information is requested.

Operational low-flying movements in Borders tactical training area

Period	Number
1 July 1986 to 30 July 1987	873
1 July 1987 to 30 July 1988	558
1 July 1988 to 30 July 1989	1,865

French Defence Minister

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his French counterpart; and whether he discussed European security.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State had a bilateral meeting with Mr. Chevènement at the Anglo-French summit in London on 4 May, when a wide range of defence questions was discussed, including future European security.

Army Regiments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the regiments of the British Army and (a) the location and value of the property associated with each and (b) the location and value of the property associated with each which has been sold in the past 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The regular regiments and corps of the British Army are listed below:

Women's Royal Army Corps

The data requested concerning location and value of property could not be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British Army regiments existed in 1979 and currently; and if he will name those which (a) have been amalgamated or abolished and (b) it is proposed to amalgamate or abolish.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Details of numbers of combat arm regiments and infantry battalions are given annually in volume 1 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates.

Of these, the only regiments or battalions that have been amalgamated or disbanded since 1979 are 2nd battalion, 7th Gurkha Rifles, which was raised in 1981 and disbanded in 1986; 2 Regiment and 9 Regiment Army Air Corps, which were disbanded in 1983 and 1982 respectively; the Composite Infantry Demonstration Battalion, which was disbanded in 1982; and 25 Regiment, Royal Artillery, which was disbanded in 1984.

As for future amalgamations or disbandments, this will depend on the circumstances at the time. However, we recognise that the changing circumstances in Europe will have implications for the deployment and structure of our forces and that we are therefore examining the options for change.

Army Property

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the outside management consultants used by his Department to rationalise the property assets of the British Army since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence—and, before 1988, the Property Services Agency—has employed a great many outside management consultants to assist with the rationalisation of property assets across all three services and the procurement executive. No central record is maintained of the use made of consultants, however, and it is not possible to provide this information retrospectively.

Territorial Army

Mr Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spends on the Territorial Army at the present time; and what the figure was in 1979 at constant prices.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1990-91, expenditure on the Territorial Army will total £345 million compared with £271 million in 1979-80. Both figures are at 1989-90 prices.

Defence Policy

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will initiate a review of Britain's defence policy, following the recent summit conference between Presidents Bush and Gorbachev.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are already examining options for change in the structure and deployment of our armed forces in light of the changing international circumstances.

United States Navy Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the visits of United States navy nuclear submarines to Bangor since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no records of any port visits to Bangor, Wales, or Bangor, Northern Ireland by United States navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Stoney Castle Ranges

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about unauthorised access across his Department's land at Stoney Castle ranges, Pirbright, for the illegal tipping of waste; and what steps he is taking to prevent this.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has received representations from the Pirbright parish and Surrey county councils and a number of local residents about access across Ministry of Defence land at Stoney Castle ranges, Pirbright, Surrey, for the illegal tipping of waste.

Action is in hand to establish the status of access. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the management structure for atomic weapons establishment sites after contractorisation.

Mr. Neubert: No decisions have yet been made on the details of the future interim management structure of AWE. It will be open to the contractor in discussion with MOD to recommend organisational changes or additional management posts to facilitate efficient operation of the establishment as a whole.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his choice of contractor for the atomic weapons establishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: We expect to let an interim management contract at AWE in the autumn of this year.

Maguire Case

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions he has given to RARDE regarding the making available to Sir John May's inquiry of papers relating to the Maguire case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: My officials have been instructed to be as helpful as possible in the inquiry.

Arms Exports, Middle East

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the role of British exports of military equipment in spreading sophisicated weapons and military technology to the middle east.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom has won orders for a range of military equipment to some middle east countries, but these have been allowed only after very careful consideration of each export to ensure that it is consistent with our national interests and international obligations. The factors considered always include assessments of political, strategic and technology transfer aspects.

Police Review

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure has been incurred to date on the study of options for change.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The work is being done by personnel in the office of management and budget and the defence staff in addition to their normal duties. We have not sought to attribute their time and related costs between this and their other tasks.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communications have taken place with North Atlantic Treaty Organisation allies about the study of the options for change.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has informed our NATO allies that work on options for change is taking place and he is in close touch with them about international developments and the evolution of alliance policy, which are important elements in that work.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when the options for change study will be completed;

(2) whether the results of the study of the options for change will be published.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Parliament will be informed once the Government have reached a view on the appropriate way forward on the options for change exercise.

Nuclear Accident, Greenwich

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans or studies have been made by his Department to assess measures that would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 8 June, Official Report, column 724.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Low Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the poorest one tenth of the population in the period 1981 to 1985 he estimates had an income rise of (i) minus 5 per cent, or less, (ii) 0 to minus 5 per cent., (iii) 0 to plus 5 per cent. and (iv) plus 5 per cent. or more.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The households below average income analysis is derived from data on incomes contained in the family expenditure survey which is a continual annual survey of a sample of private households in the United Kingdom. The households below average income analysis enables comparisons to be made between the position of decile groups over time, but, because the sample consists of different families each year, it is not possible to draw similar comparisons between individual families. The information requested is therefore not available.

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, if claimants in receipt of unemployment benefit income support have their fortnightly benefit payment suspended for not actively seeking employment on three successive occasions, and they then satisfy the condition, they have to make a fresh claim for benefit and complete a new B1 or whether their fortnightly payment is automatically reinstated; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No fresh claim for income support is required if hardship payments are made when benefit has been suspended on account of failing to actively seek employment. However, if hardship payments have not been made and income support has been suspended for longer than a fortnight, a fresh claim on a new form B1 will be required.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether a non-householder income support claimant without dependants whose income support is suspended for not actively seeking work or being available for work can be paid on income support hardship payment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Yes. The adjudication officer has to be satisfied that, unless income support is paid, the claimant will suffer hardship. No distinction is made between householders and non-householders.

Personal Pension Plans

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 21 December, Official Report, column 405, he has completed his review of the disclosure requirements for occupational and personal pension schemes, including unit-linked personal pension plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The disclosure of information regulations will need amendment as a result of the provisions on occupational pensions in the Social Security Bill and of other recommendations in the Occupational Pensions Board report "Protecting Pensions" which we have accepted. A number of interested bodies have been asked for their views on the existing regulations, and responses are due very soon. In the light of these comments, we hope to bring forward our proposals as soon as possible.

Family Credit and Income Support

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving family credit or income support in each county in England and in each district council area in England.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on the number of recipients of family credit or income support by county and district council area is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much public expenditure has been reduced as a result of policy changes to housing benefit each year since 1982, both at current prices and at 1990-91 prices; and what has been the cumulative total of savings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information is not available in the detail requested because, over time, the financial effects of successive policy changes overlap with other changes such as uprating of benefit levels, movements in housing costs, changes in unemployment, and movements in income levels. In cash terms, housing benefit expenditure was £1·6 billion in 1982-83, including help with rates, and the forecast for the current year is £7 billion, including community charge benefit. This represents a substantial real terms increase since 1982-83.

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost to public funds in the current financial year, and with retrospective effect to 6 April of (a) raising from £3,000 to £6,000 the savings disregarded for community charge rebate, while leaving the £16,000 figure unchanged and (b) assuming that each £500 of savings produces £1 a week of income.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 23 May 1990]: The estimated benefit cost of increasing, for community charge benefit, the lower capital limit from £3,000 to £6,000 and changing the tariff rate to £1 of every £500 over £6,000, allowing for retrospection to 6 April 1990, would be £100 million in 1990-91. (Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1985-86-87 family expenditure survey).

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost to public funds in the current financial year and with retrospective effect to 6 April, of entitling all non-employed spouses of persons who are paying income tax only at the standard rate to a community charge rebate of 80 per cent.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 23 May 1990]: I regret that it is not possible to make an estimate of this. Any estimate of the total benefit cost requires such a wide range of assumptions, for example, the allocation of community charge benefit children's allowances to the employed spouse, and the allocation of savings between the partners, as to make any estimate both arbitrary and uncertain.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions compensation has been refused in respect of confirmed BSE cattle since January 1989; under what circumstances such applications are refused; what advice he offers to farmers to avoid such refusal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Ministry is required by the Animal Health Act 1981 to pay compensation in respect of all cattle slaughtered as BSE suspects.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made towards being able to identify the presence of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy infective agent in cattle prior to the onset of clinical symptoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 21 May at column 86.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 22 March, Official Report, column 734, to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), what recent research is being undertaken to establish whether the infective agent responsible for bovine spongiform encephalopathy can be transmitted to (a) pigs, (b) poultry and (c) dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 12 June at column 135.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contingency plans he has to cover the event of BSE being found to be vertically transmissible.

Mr. Maclean: There is no evidence to suggest that BSE is vertically transmissible. However, measures are in hand to require cattle owners to maintain herd breeding records, including the identity of each calf and its dam, and to retain these and the existing movement records for 10 years. These measures will assist the tracing of calves born to dams in which BSE is subsequently confirmed, should further animal health measures be necessary to facilitate the elimination of the disease.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average cost to his Department of each case of BSE; and what is the breakdown of such cost into its components of compensation, carcase disposal, laboratory test and other.

Mr. Maclean: The average expenditure between August 1988 and April 1990 is estimated to be as follows:

Item	Average cost £
Compensation	422
Carcass disposal and miscellaneous expenditure	216
Laboratory costs	166
Veterinary field service	251
Total	1,055

Colorado Beetle

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions Colorado beetle has been found in the United Kingdom in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Thirty seven live and nine dead Colorado beetles were found on produce imported into the United Kingdom in the 12-month period ending 31 May 1990. No breeding colonies have been identified here.

The Colorado beetle presents a serious threat to our potato crops and the Government remain determined to prevent its introduction and spread in the United Kingdom. We maintain careful surveillance of imports and continuing public awareness campaigns to ensure that our crops remain free from this pest.

Marine Turtles

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Southern sea fisheries committee has distributed information to Isle of Wight fishermen on marine turtles; and if he will make this information available to hon. Members.

Mr. Curry: The activities of sea fisheries committees are, of course, a matter for the committees themselves as constituent bodies of local councils. I understand that the Southern Sea Fisheries Committee has neither sought nor distributed any information on marine turtles to fishermen within its district.

Animal Health Inspectors

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animal health inspectors are now in post; what qualfications were required for recruitment; what training provision was undergone by recruits; and what arrangements have been made for reviewing the effectiveness of training and the working of the scheme as a whole.

Mr. Maclean: There are currently 547 state veterinary service (SVS) staff appointed as inspectors by the Minister for the purposes of the Animal Health Act 1981. All veterinary offices are qualified on entry to the SVS to be appointed as veterinary inspectors for the purposes of the Act, without further training. The technical support staff (animal health officers) receive training on entry to the SVS over at least two years, on the provisions of the Act and its associated orders, the service of statutory notices and the duties of an inspector under the Act. The performance of all inspectors is constantly monitored as part of the routine staff appraisal process, and appointments can be withdrawn if duties are not effectively carried out.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what rules exist in respect of the voltage levels and use of cattle goads; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he is taking to minimise offences in respect of the use of goads under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and the Transit of Animals (Road and Rail) Order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no specific statutory controls on the energy output of cattle goads. Their use is, however, subject to the general provisions of the Protection of Animals Act 1911, the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 and orders made under the Animal Health Act 1981. We are planning to introduce statutory welfare measures in markets and slaughterhouses which would prohibit the use of electric goads on all animals, other than adult cattle and adult pigs under certain conditions.

Fishing Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much British finance is committed to EC structural policy 4028/86 on fishing; how much money comes back to this country in return; and what is his estimate of the net benefit/loss to the United Kingdom for 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Curry: This information is not readily available.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give his estimate of the amount spent on decommissioning grants for fishing vessels of its national Governments by the Commission in (a) France, (b) Denmark, (c) Holland, (d) Belgium and (e) Spain in the latest available year.

Mr. Curry: The latest available figures of European Community reimbursements in 1989 for decommissioning grants are as follows:

	£ million
France	Nil
Denmark	1·64
Holland	1·87
Belgium	Nil
Spain	Nil

Meat Tenderising Enzymes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the extent of the usage of meat tenderising enzymes administered pre-slaughter.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that about 2 per cent. of cattle are treated with the enzyme Papain before slaughter.

The Government have announced that they will not be seeking provision for the continued use of this pre-slaughter treatment under the rules to be adopted for the single market.

Hill Livestock

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when delays in payment of hill livestock compensatory agreement premiums will be resolved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Hill livestock compensatory allowances are paid as quickly as possible following receipt of claims, once the necessary administrative checks have been completed.

Beef

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of beef produced in the United Kingdom is from (a) steers and (b) bulls under the age of 14 months.

Mr. Gummer: No information is available on the age of slaughtered stock. However, in 1989 steers accounted for 46 per cent. of United Kingdom beef production by carcase weight and young bulls for 8 per cent.

ADAS (General Charging)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give for each complete financial year since the introduction of general charging by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, the income and the number of customers.

Mr. Curry: Charging for ADAS services on a general scale was introduced in April 1987. Income for the financial years since then is as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	16·7
1988-89	21·1
1989-90	25·8

Almost 85,000 customers have purchased ADAS services since April 1987. Customer figures by year are not available.

Marine Environment

Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department is taking to improve the quality of the marine environment.

Mr. Curry [pursuant to his reply, 19 April 1990, c.971]: The Government are determined that the unpleasant practice of dumping colliery minestone on beaches in the north-east of England should stop as soon as practicable. As a result of a great deal of study carried out at the Government's direction various options have been considered for disposal of the waste on land. However, before any disposal on land can begin, British Coal must get planning permission.

I am therefore now requiring British Coal to seek all necessary permissions for a land-based means of disposal of their minestone.

It is important to set a deadline for this process. The Government consider that five years is a tight, but not unreasonable, timescale for British Coal to prepare an application, have it properly assessed through the planning system, and to construct the necessary arrangements for dealing with these large quantities of stone on land. I am therefore making clear to British Coal that the Ministry envisages that the licences which permit British Coal to dump minestone on the beaches should end in five years. The only reason for extending the licences beyond that date would be if the outcome of pursuing a planning application were that no practical means of disposing of the stone on land is in fact available to British Coal.

I shall similarly be requiring British Coal to seek permissions for disposing on land the minestone that they currently dump out at sea from Wearmouth and Westoe collieries. For these licences, a seven-year deadline will be set.

Dietary Survey

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the results of the dietary and nutritional survey of British adults.

Mr. Maclean: The first detailed results of this major survey of the diet and health of more than 2,000 adults throughout Great Britain are published today. I have placed a copy of the report in the library of the House.

The survey was conducted by the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys for the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health. In addition, MAFF and the Department of Health provided the dietary, nutritional and health expertise needed to conduct and interpret such a complex survey.

My noble Friend Baroness Hooper, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, and I welcome this excellent report, which will provide a sound base for future food and health policy. The detailed findings provide an invaluable source of reference for those outside as well as within Government, and are a benchmark against which future developments can be measured.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Customs and Excise (Devon)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of staffing in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in Torbay; what was the level of staffing in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The current and previous three years staffing levels of Customs and Excise officers engaged in Customs work in Torquay is as follows.

	Numbers
1987	5
1988	5
1989	4
1990	2

The reductions in 1989 and 1990 were the result of transferring Customs posts to the Brixham office. There are currently a further 14 VAT staff and one excise officer also located in Torquay.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of staffing in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in Brixham; what was the level of staffing in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The current and previous three years staffing levels of Customs and Excise in Brixham is as follows. All staff are engaged on customs work.

	Numbers
1987	2
1988	2
1989	4
1990	6

The increases in 1989 and 1990 were the result of transferring customs posts from the nearby Dartmouth and Torquay offices.

Pensions

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the percentage increases over the past 10 years in (a) the state retirement pension, (b) the armed forces pensions and (c) police pensions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

The percentages used to increase the state retirement pension, the armed forces pensions and police pensions in each of the last 10 years are in the table.

	per cent
1980	16·5
1981	9·0
1982	11·0
1983	3·7
1984	5·1
1985	7·0
1986	1·1
1987	2·1
1988	4·2
1989	5·9
1990	7·6

WALES

Silage

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received any scientific advice concerning possible dangers to sheep from eating silage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Listeria organisms can be found in silage and in some circumstances can cause death in sheep. The overall incidence of this disease is low; fewer than 80 deaths were diagnosed in Wales last year by the veterinary investigation service. ADAS advisory leaflets on the production and feeding of silage to sheep are available to farmers on request. Advice is also available from ADAS nutrition chemists and the veterinary investigation service.

Acid Rain

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives have been taken by his Department to try to secure an improvement in the acid rain problem facing Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Department has initiated a programme of research which has been designed to assess the impact of acid rain on Wales and seek practical steps to reduce its impact.

In addition, the Welsh Office has supported the Department of the Environment in funding a major research project in the Llyn Brianne area to assess the relative contribution which air pollution, afforestation, land type, and land use and practice make to the acidification of Welsh water.

Limitation of the effects of acid rain on Wales is dependent, of course, upon a reduction of emissions throughout the United Kingdom and Europe. Using 1980 as a base line, the United Kingdom is committed to reducing emissions of sulphur dioxide by 20 per cent. and oxides of nitrogen by 15 per cent. from existing large combustion plants by 1993 as the first stage of directive 88/609/EEC, "The Limitation of Emissions of Certain Pollutants Into the Air From Large Combustion Plants".

Mental Handicap Nurses

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made on an all-Wales level with regard to the future role of mental handicap nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: In the context of the development of community-based services for people with a mental handicap, under the all-Wales strategy, mental handicap nurses have a valuable and important role in the provision of the range of services required in support of those people living in, or resettled into, the community and who require nursing care.

The four chief nursing officers in the United Kingdom have established a working group to review the needs of people with a mental handicap, and identify the future requirement for skilled nursing care arising from the changes outlined in the White Paper "Caring for People". Their report, which will address the issues that require resolution at the all-Wales level, will be ready in the autumn.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest figures for the number of confirmed cases of BSE in cattle in (a) Carmarthen, (b) Dyfed, (c) Wales and (d) Britain.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Total number of confirmed cases as at 1 June 1990

	Number
(a) Old County of Carmarthen	162
(b) Dyfed	493
(c) Wales	967

Lactofol

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what investigations have been undertaken by his agricultural department of the Welsh Office into Lactofol, in relation to its potential as a fertiliser and as an agent to counteract acid rain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The analytical facilities of the Government's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service are available to the private sector on a contractual basis. The details of such contracts are a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many planning applications were submitted in each of the Welsh national parks in the last two years for which figures are available; how many were determined; and how many of those determined, in numbers and as proportions, were successful.

Mr. Roberts: The information on planning applications in the calendar years 1988 and 1989 for Brecon Beacons national park and the Pembrokeshire coast national park is set out in the following table. No statistical returns were received from Snowdonia national park.

	Year	Submitted	Decided	Granted
				Number	Per Cent.
Brecon Beacons NP	1988	812	650	463	(71)
	1989	907	819	558	(68)
Pembrokeshire Coast NP	1988	727	600	489	(82)
	1989	787	704	526	(75)

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of children aged under 16 years received free eye tests in Wales (a) in each quarter of 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter of 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: The data requested were not collected centrally before 1 April 1989, since when it has been collected on a six-monthly basis.

The available information is given in the following table:

Estimated[1] percentage of relevant population who received eye tests in the six months ending

	30 September 1989	31 March 1990
Children aged under 16	6	7

[1] Estimates based upon a 2 per cent. sample of all such sight tests paid for by family practitioner committees and expressed as a percentage of the estimated number of children aged under 16 (as at 30 June 1988).

Beef

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he proposes to assist the beef-rearing industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The beef-rearing industry is assisted by a number of measures, directly by the suckler cow premium and indirectly by market support measures. My agriculture colleagues and I are considering the suckler cow premium rate for 1990-91 and will make an announcement in due course.

Heart Operations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of heart patients who were sent for surgery from Wales to England for each of the years 1984 to the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information is not available in the form requested.

However, an indication of the number of cases of Welsh residents treated in the 14 regional health authorities of England whose speciality on discharge was cardiothoracic surgery is as follows:

	Numbers
1984	511
1985	462
1986	446
[1]1987-88	408
[1]1988-89	405

[1] 1 April to 31 March

Notes:

1. These estimates are based on the best available information supplied by the English regional health authorities.
2. The estimates relate to the specialty of cardiothoracic surgery as figures for cardiac surgery cannot be separately identified.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales are awaiting heart surgery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of people in Wales awaiting heart surgery is not available centrally, but the number waiting for in-patient treatment in hospitals in Wales in the specialty of cardiac surgery at 31 December 1989 was 242.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he has any proposals to eliminate waiting lists for investigating heart problems;

(2) what proposals he has to increase facilities in Wales for heart surgery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Proposals for major developments in the investigation and treatment of patients with heart disease in Wales are well under way following a review by the cardiology committee of the Royal College of Physicians. A centre of excellence capable of providing 800 open heart operations yearly for adults with appropriate cardiology is to be developed at University hospital of Wales (UHW), Cardiff. Funds have already been provided to upgrade the cardiac catheter laboratories and are to be made available this year to enhance intensive and coronary care facilities at the hospital. Consideration is also being given to the development of a second adult cardiac unit in South Wales. In the interim, funds have been made available to secure additional cardiological procedures and cardiac surgery from other specialist centres in England.

A new paediatric cardiac unit at UHW is on schedule for completion in autumn this year.

In North Wales, additional funds have been made available to improve access to cardiology and cardiac surgery for patients in Clwyd, and Gwynedd health authority has been asked to assess its requirements and present detailed proposals to the department.

Local Authorities (Devolution)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to devolve more powers during the next five years to Welsh local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans for changes in the responsibilities of local authorities in Wales.

Schools (Opting Out)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales have formally expressed interest in opting out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: To date four schools in Wales have balloted parents on making application for grant-maintained status. Two of these have voted against and two in favour of making an application.

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications he has received from hospital trusts in Wales.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has not yet received any applications from hospitals for trust status.

NHS Pay Awards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what ways he proposes to help the area health authorities of Wales meet pay awards and national health service medical inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Health authorities in Wales have already benefited from supplementary provision of £11·125 million towards the excess cost of pay awards to staff covered by the review bodies' machinery over and above the allowance for inflation already provided in allocations for 1990-91.

When taken together these extra funds represent a cash increase averaging 7·8 per cent. over last year. This increase, together with the resources which authorities are expected to unlock by cash improvement programmes and income-generation schemes, should be sufficient to meet anticipated inflation and provide for further service developments.

The excess cost of other pay awards which are negotiated through the Whitley machinery have not in the past been met from Exchequer funds. Authorities are represented on Whitley councils and it is therefore appropriate that they should be expected to meet the consequences of settlements to which they are party.

Myodil

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his replies of 27 March, Official Report, column 134, 28 March, Official Report, column 186 and 29 March, Official Report, column 271 and his letter dated 27 April, what information he now has on the number of patients who have come forward to complain of after-effects and side-effects of the drug Myodil; and if he will now agree to instigate a thorough and independent investigation into the incidence of such cases in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Representations have been received on behalf of 12 patients in Wales who may have been affected adversely by the use of Myodil. That point aside, there is nothing I can add to my letter of 27 April.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when he anticipates issuing a revised letter of agreement on the radioactive site licence for atomic weapons establishment, Cardiff, pursuant to the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, section 13;

(2) what consultations have taken place with the Environmental Health department of Cardiff city council, the South Glamorgan county fire service and the National Rivers Authority regarding revision of the letter of agreement issued by his Department to the Ministry of Defence under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, section 13, regarding the atomic weapons establishment, Cardiff;

(3) if he will revise and publish the letters of agreement issued to the Ministry of Defence in respect of the atomic weapons establishment, Cardiff under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, section 13, before contractorisation takes place.

Mr. David Hunt: The revision of the agreement is currently being considered and it is expected that it will be completed before the atomic weapons establishment site at Cardiff becomes contractor operated.

Although no consultations with the organisations mentioned are required under the terms of section 14 of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, my Department will be informing the local authorities of the proposed revision at an appropriate stage. The Department will also be copying to them the revised letter of agreement for their records.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the actions of the French and German Governments concerning BSE and the export of beef from Wales.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 7 June 1990]: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food indicated in his statement to the House on 7 June, the illegal ban on British beef exports imposed by France, Germany and Italy was dealt with at a meeting of the Agriculture Council on 6 and 7 June. The Council was able to consider the latest advice from the Commission's scientific veterinary committee, which confirmed that the existing Community rules in respect of bovine spongiform encephalopathy provided full protection for public health. However, after prolonged discussions the Council agreed to amend Community rules to provide certain additional guarantees. The unilateral bans imposed by certain member states were immediately lifted.

SCOTLAND

Mental Health Programmes

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take to avert staff redundancies and unfilled training places in the programmes run by the providers of training for those with mental health problems.

Mr. Rifkind: It is the duty of the Training Agency to enter into contracts with training providers to provide for the delivery of sufficient places to meet likely demand from potential trainees including those with mental health problems and other special needs groups. It is the responsibility of training providers to maintain their staffing at levels commensurate with the efficient and cost-effective delivery of their training commitment in terms of such contracts.

Steel Industry

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or any agency responsible to him has commissioned a business plan for an independent Scottish steel industry.

Mr. Lang: No, nor would it be appropriate for my right hon. and learned Friend to do so.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has formally asked British Steel if it is prepared to sell its Scottish assets to enable them to form the basis of an independent Scottish steel industry.

Mr. Lang: The chairman of British Steel has assured my right hon. and learned Friend and me that if the company should wish at some stage to close its steelmaking facilities at Ravenscraig, it would consider on a commercial basis, any wholly private sector offer for those facilities as an alternative to closure.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps the Scottish Development Agency or any of his departments has taken to assess the viability of an independent Scottish steel industry.

Mr. Lang: It would be for any business parties interested in establishing or acquiring steelmaking facilities in Scotland to consider whether such an entity —however defined—might be viable.

Nursery Education

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of nursery school or other pre-five facilities places available in each regional council area in each of the past 12 years;

(2) what is his estimate of the number of children in the current year who are unlikely to be accommodated in pre-five facilities.

Mr. Lang: The table gives for each regional and islands council the total of the following:

pupils attending local authority nursery schools, places in local authority day nurseries,
places in local authority and registered pre school playgroups, places for which local authority sponsored and private childminders are registered.

Figures for numbers of pupils attending nursery schools have been used because there are no reliable figures for the number of places and because many children attend nursery school part time. It should also be noted that some children may make use of more than one of type of provision.

There were in addition 1,392 children in September 1989 below the age of five attending independent schools, 351 children below the age of five attending special schools at September 1988 and an estimated 1,500 places in registered day nurseries. Information for 1977-78 is not available on a consistent basis and that on private nursery schools is not collected centally. At June 1988 there were an estimated 322,989 children under five and 126,079 children in the population aged three and four years, the range which is the relevant age group for nursery education.

Ravenscraig

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when British Steel was informed of the House's view on the closure of the Ravenscraig hot strip mill, as set out in the Official Report, of 21 May, column 75.

Mr. Lang: No doubt British Steel took note of the House's view, as set out in the Official Report, and which was widely reported in the media following the debate on 21 May.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the names of companies and identification of proposed site locations in Scotland for toxic waste incinerators.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the constituencies in which there are proposals to site new licensed toxic waste incinerators; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Applications for planning consent or for waste disposal licensing are in the first instance matters for district and islands councils. There is no statutory requirement for information to be held centrally.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Government's policy on an increase in the numbers of licensed incinerators in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to limit the numbers of licensed incinerators in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government regard incineration as a sound means of waste disposal, provided that the appropriate statutory conditions for operation are fully met. We have no policy to increase or to limit the existing number of incinerators in Scotland.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to bring forward proposals to charge members of the public for the right of appeal against the siting of incinerators or dumps.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The right of appeal exists only for those who have been refused planning permission. Members of the public may object both to their local planning authorities during the consideration of an application and to my right hon. and learned Friend during any subsequent appeal. There are no proposals to charge members of the public for submitting such objections.

Sheep

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by region (a) how many sheep and (b) how many farms, still have restrictions in force because of the Chernobyl explosion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for each of the Regions in Scotland where restrictions are in force is set out in the table:

Region	Number of sheep	Number of farms
Central	46,000	19
Dumfries and Galloway	22,000	17
Strathclyde	56,000	38
Total	124,000	74

Public Houses

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions were mounted for offences in connection with under-age drinking; and how many convictions resulted in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The available information is set out in the table.

Under age drinking offences, Scotland 1988

Offence	Persons proceeded against	Persons with a charge proved
Sale of drink to persons under 18	270	106
Person under 18 buying alcoholic liquor or consuming alcoholic liquor in a bar	190	189
Purchasing alcoholic liquor for consumption by person under 18	96	87

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many applications for late licences for public houses were granted under section 64 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) how many public house licences were in operation in 1976 in Scotland and at the latest available date; and, in each case, how many public houses per thousand of the population this represents;

(3) how many licences for the sale of liquor were in operation in Scotland in 1976 and at the latest available date; and, in each case, how many licences per thousand of the population this represents.

Mr. Rifkind: Five thousand six hundred and four extensions of permitted hours were granted in 1980 in respect of licensed premises in Scotland. Separate figures in respect of public houses and afternoon or evening extensions are not available. I refer the hon. Member to table 4.4 of civil judicial statistics Scotland 1980 (Cmnd. 8710).

In 1976 there were 4,132 public house licences in force in Scotland, which represented 0·79 public houses per 1,000 of the Scottish population at that time. In 1980, the latest year for which official figures are available, there were 4,472 public house licences in operation, representing 0·86 public houses per 1,000 of the population.

In 1976 there were 14,781 liquor licences in force in Scotland, representing 2·83 licences per 1,000 of the Scottish population at that time. In 1980, the latest year for which official figures are available, there were 16,412 liquor licences in operation, which represented 3·16 licences per 1,000 of the population.

The collection and publication of liquor licensing statistics in Scotland was discontinued after 1980, following consultation with the police and local authorities on the use being made of the statistics. Information on licensing statistics up to 1980 was contained in the annual civil judicial statistics Scotland; and unofficial estimates for later years are contained in the annual Brewers Society statistical handbook. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Charities

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what bodies he proposes to treat as a Scottish charity as the phrase is used in clause 1(6) of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Bill.

Mr. Rifkind: Clause 1(6) will entitle any Scottish body recognised by the Inland Revenue as charitable to describe itself as "a Scottish charity". There may be 15,000 such bodies.

Fine Defaulters

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of admissions to prisons in Scotland of persons for non-payment of fines of (a) up to £25 and (b) between £25 and £50, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The available information is for value of fine outstanding rather than fine imposed at court and for receptions rather than persons admitted to prison. One reception is counted if one or more warrants arrive for the same person for the same court on the same day. Some receptions relate to warrants arriving at establishments for people already held in custody.

In 1989, the number of receptions where the fine outstanding was (a) up to and including £25 was 387, and (b) greater than £25 and up to and including £50 was 1,420.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were admitted to Scottish prisons as a result of non-payment of fines in the last year for which figures are available; what percentage this was of total admissions and what was the average length of stay in prison before release.

Mr. Rifkind: The available information is for receptions rather than persons admitted to prison. One reception is counted if one or more warrants arrive for the same person from the same court on the same day. Some receptions relate to warrants arriving at establishments for people already held in custody.

In 1989, there were 9,154 receptions into penal establishments in Scotland for non-payment of fines, 47 per cent. of all receptions. The average period spent in custody by fine defaulters was 11 days.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the daily prison population in Scotland was made up of inmates in prison because of non-payment of fines, excluding remand prisoners.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1989, 6 per cent. of the average daily population in penal establishments, excluding those held on remand, were there for non-payment of fines.

Public Trusts

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications have been made to the Court of Session for the reorganisation or amalgamation of public trusts whose objectives are obsolete or have otherwise been fulfilled in each of the last five years.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is not available in the form requested.

Divorce

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many decrees of divorce were granted in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will break this figure down on the basis of the grounds of divorce used to establish the irretrievable breakdown of the marriage.

Mr. Rifkind: The numbers of decrees of divorce granted in Scotland for 1988, the latest year for which figures are available, broken down by grounds are set out in the table.

Adultery	1,309
Behaviour	3,559
Desertion	83
Non-cohabitation for 2 years with consent	4,879
Non-cohabitation for 5 years	1,626
Cases with more than one ground	12
TOTAL	11,468

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate, using current divorce statistics, of the percentage of marriages now contracted in Scotland which will end in divorce.

Mr. Rifkind: A paper on "Trends in Marriage and Divorce in Scotland 1951-1987", published by the Registrar General for Scotland with the vital statistics return for the week 17-20 June 1989, estimated that approximately one quarter of recent Scottish marriages would end in divorce.

Government Buildings (Security)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the management report prepared for his Department by David Stevenson dealing with the use of private security firms to oversee his Department's premises.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 11 June, Vol. 174, c. 50.

Marriages

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of marriages contracted in Scotland in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The provisional figure for 1989 is 35,325.

Conveyancing

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has carried out any research into the legal fees charged in conveyancing transactions in Scotland since the abolition of scale fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 19 January Official Report, Vol. 165 col. 418. Of the projects referred to there, the report on the first has just reached my Department, while the report on the second is expected early next year.

Water Supply

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide figures for the separate costs of liming and orthophosphate treatment in the water supply in Scotland in each year between 1979 and 1990, inclusive, and for the projected annual cost of these treatments from 1990 to 1998; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is an operational matter for each regional and islands council and such costs, which will vary considerably between individual treatment works, may not be separately identified. Costs incurred by authoriies for particular treatments to meet individual water quality standards are not recorded on a national basis.

Scotland-Ireland Bridge

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will initiate a survey and report into the possibility of a bridge between the Mull of Kintyre and Torr Head, Co. Antrim; and if he will seek the co-operation of the Commission of the European Community for this research.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The right hon. Member will not be surprised to learn that my right hon. and learned Friend has no intention of initiating a study into the feasibility of a bridge between Mull of Kintyre and Toor Head, Co Antrim.

Adult Education

Ms. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list his office's priorities and objectives for the expansion of community-based adult education in Scotland; and what guidance he has issued to Scottish education authorities on the matter;

(2) if he will list his office's priorities and objectives for the expansion of English as a second language provision in Scotland (a) on a community-based adult education programme and (b) as a school-based provision; and what guidance he has issued to Scottish education authorities on this matter.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on 7 June to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell).

As to school-based provision of English as a second language, this remains the responsibility of education authorities to determine in the light of other first language usage. Circular 1178, issued by the Scottish Education Department in January 1989, commends to authorities the practice of using another language in primary schools as a bridge to proficiency in English.

"Step up the Wordpower"

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total level of expenditure allocated by his Department for the provision of support to the BBC "Step up the Wordpower" basic skills campaign in the current financial year.

Mr. Lang: The BBC initiative "Step up the Wordpower" took place in 1989-90. The Scottish Education Department contributed £16,500 in that year in direct support, and further contributions were made by the Scottish Community Education Council, which received a total grant of £528,000 from the Department, and by the Training Agency.

A BBC numeracy initiative is due to commence in the current financial year, and £10,500 has already been made available by the Department towards the costs of this initiative.

Family Planning (Lothian Region)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much it costs per case for Lothian health board to provide family planning advice through (a) community clinics, (b) the general practitioner service and (c) the Brook Advisory Centre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Medical and Dental Schools

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total additional cost for teaching paid to each medical and dental school in Scotland; and how much that represents per student.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The additional cost of undergraduate medical and dental education and research in hospitals which support teaching is reflected in the allocation of resources for recurrent expenditure made to the four teaching health boards. The amount made available for this purpose for the financial year 1990-91 is set out in the table:

Teaching Health Board	£ million
Greater Glasgow	32·076
Lothian	22·671
Grampian	14·215
Tayside	14·797

This represents a cost of £36,450 per medical student and £9,110 per dental student.

Piper Alpha (Pollution)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring is being undertaken to establish the effects on the marine environment, including fish stocks and sea mammals, of the loss of polychlorinated biphenyls from the Piper Alpha platform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 May 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which was given to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 25 January (Vol. 165, columns 839-40.

Officials have since discussed with representatives of the fishing industry and the Nature Conservancy Council the results of the surveys carried out under the abandonment programme approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. My right hon. Friend is considering what further monitoring may be needed under the abandonment programme.

DAFS will continue to monitor the area round Piper Alpha as part of its general monitoring of the contaminant levels in sea water and in fish stocks in sea waters around Scotland.

Research on contaminants in seals and other sea mammals in Great Britain's coastal waters has been commissioned by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The sea mammal research unit in co-operation with the DAFS marine laboratory, Aberdeen is at present examining the relationship between contaminant burdens in seals and their feeding sites by studying a group of breeding female grey seals over a number of years. Results are expected soon.

Disabled People

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employment training places have been taken up by people who have disabilities in Scotland by Training Agency area over the last two years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: In the period September 1988 to March 1990, 2,822 people with disabilities have taken up employment training places in Scotland. This information is not available by Training Agency area.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Closures

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools were closed in each of the last five years within the Norfolk local education authority area.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of schools which were closed in each of the past five years in the Norfolk local education authority area is as follows:

	Number
1989	12
1988	15
1987	11
1986	14
1985	25

Examinations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children took the GCE O-level and CSE examinations in Lancashire in 1989; and what results were achieved.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information for 1989 is not yet available. Of the 17,500 maintained school leavers in Lancashire in 1988 who had attempted at least one GCSE, O-level or CSE examination, 5,610 achieved five or more results at grade A to C[1] at GCSE (or equivalent), 5,020 achieved between one and four results at grade A to C and 6,760 achieved at least one result at another grade.

[1] Including O-level grade A to C and CSE grade 1.

Ms. Katharine Sharkey

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress being made in dealing with the appeal under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 in respect of Katharine Sharkey; and when he expects the appeal to be decided.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Hounslow local education authority is currently considering a further letter from the parents of Katharine Sharkey in support of their appeal. My right hon. Friend expects to make a decision when he has received the authority's response to that letter.

Pupils (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in how many schools the pupil population is in excess of 90 per cent. of any one ethnic minority (a) in the public sector and (b) in the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested is not available centrally, but my right hon. Friend has announced in circular No. 16/89 that ethnic statistics will be collected by local education authorities from schools maintained by them as from September 1990. Aggregated local education authority returns will be submitted to the Department annually from June 1991.

National Curriculum

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the means by which the national curriculum is to be monitored in private sector schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for independent schools to decide whether to adopt the national curriculum. Her Majesty's inspectors, in the course of their normal programme of inspecting independent schools, are monitoring the schools' intentions with regard to adopting this and the extent to which they are implementing it. My right hon. Friend is pleased that many are choosing to do so.

Computing Equipment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many applications were received by the Science and Engineering Research Council in respect of its initiative of March to provide computing equipment to universities and polytechnics incorporating parallel and novel architectures;

(2) how many of those applications received by the Science and Engineering Research Council in respect of its initiative of March to provide computing equipment to universities and polytechnics incorporating parallel and novel architectures were alpha-rated;

(3) how many of those applications received by the Science and Engineering Research Council in respect of its initiative of March to provide computing equipment to universities and polytechnics incorporating parallel and novel architectures were funded.

Mr. Jackson: There were 75 applications of which 47 were alpha-rated. The number of applications to be funded has not yet been determined.

Foreign Students

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the number of foreign students studying in London this summer without accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available centrally. The accommodation needs of students from abroad, as of home students, are a matter for the institutions they are attending.

TRANSPORT

Public Inquiries

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the venues south of the River Thames which his Department considered as alternatives to Stratford old town hall for the preliminary meeting of the inquiry into the east London river crossing and London City airport on 9 May; and if he will give the reason why each venue was unsuitable.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the current negotiations on access for United States carriers to Manchester airport to be concluded; and if he will make a statement on the progress of the negotiations.

Mr. McLoughlin: The current negotiations are being carried forward as speedily as possible, but no timetable has been set for their completion. It would not be appropriate for any further statement to be made now.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Development Assistance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross national product was allocated to net official development assistance in 1989.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), of 2 April, Official Report, column 412, if he will announce the figure for the percentage of gross national product spent on official development assistance in 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: Net official development assistance in 1989 as a percentage of GNP is provisionally estimated at 0·31 per cent.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross national product was spent on official development assistance in 1988.

Mrs. Chalker: The percentage of gross national product spent on official development assistance in 1988 was 0·32 per cent.

ENVIRONMENT

Protection of Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to designate further sites to protect birds under the special protection areas scheme or the Ramsar convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's aim is to designate those sites which are necessary to meet the conservation objectives of the convention and the directive.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, with whom rests responsibility for the designation of sites in Scotland, recently announced the designation of four special protection areas, one Ramsar site and three sites with dual designation, bringing the Great Britain totals to 40 special protection areas and 43 Ramsar sites.

A number of proposals are currently being considered and the next designation will take place as soon as the necessary consultations have been satisfactorily completed.

Desalination

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies his Department has made of methods of desalination both for overseas markets and for the United Kingdom; what research funds have been made available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A study was made by the Water Resources Board and published as "Desalination 1976". This concluded that desalination was not economical in the United Kingdom when other sources could be exploited. My Department has made no further studies and none is planned.

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the possible need for desalination units in the United Kingdom with the water companies and other interested organisations.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. It is for the private water companies and interested organisations to determine the potential for desalination units.

Metal Detectors

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to regulate further the use of metal detectors to discover items of historical or archaeological interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced on 13 December 1989, in another place, the Government's intention to amend at a suitable opportunity the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 so as to make it an offence to remove, without consent, any item of historical or archaeological interest from the site of a scheduled ancient monument, and to consider less formal measures relating to finds made on unscheduled sites. The unauthorised use of metal detectors is already prohibited on scheduled sites. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to further regulate the use of metal detectors.

Foxes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement concerning the disposal of captured urban foxes;

(2) if he will seek to make it a criminal offence to release foxes captured in urban areas into the countryside; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will give an estimate of the number of foxes captured in urban areas each year and released into the countryside;

(4) if he will make it his policy to introduce stiff penalties for persons releasing foxes captured in urban areas into the countryside.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. and learned Member.

Homelessness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement concerning his proposals to combat homelessness in the Greater London area.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 8 May at column 15.

Management and Computer Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department expects to spend on management and computer consultancy contracts in 1990-91.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 13 June 1990]: My Department's current budget (including Property Services Agency services) for management and computer consultancies in 1990-91 is £27·3 million.

Nuclear Accident, Greenwich

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans or studies have been made or commissioned by his Department to assess measures that would have to be taken in the event of contamination by airborne plutonium resulting from a nuclear weapons accident aboard a Royal Navy ship docked at Greenwich.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 12 June 1990]: This is a matter for the Ministry of Defence and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 12 June at column 142.

Advertising Costs

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total cost of advertisements for the community charge; in which daily and Sunday newspapers have advertisements been placed; and if he will list papers and cost of advertisements placed in each newspaper.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 13 June 1990]: No advertisements for the community charge have been placed by the Department. We did, however, sponsor a campaign in January and February designed to inform people of the availability of community charge benefit and transitional relief. The total cost of the advertisements in this campaign in various media was just under £4 million. Of this the cost (excluding VAT) of placing advertisements in daily newspapers was just under £1·05 million, made up as follows:

Daily Mirror	338·3
The Sun	325·0
Daily Star	58·2
Daily Mail	61·5
Daily Express	40·0
Today	18·4
The Times	36·0
The Independent	33·7
The Guardian	36·6
The Daily Telegraph	99·0

In addition, design costs were incurred, but these are not easily separable from the design costs of the advertisements in other media. No advertisements were placed in Sunday newspapers.

The Department of Social Security has subsequently taken newspaper advertisements publishing the increased savings limits for community charge benefit announced in the Budget, and reminding people of the time limit for making backdated claims for benefit and of the level of income likely to entitle people to benefit.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases of Filipino wives of British subjects seeking admission to the United Kingdom whose applications were submitted to the Immigration Appellate Authorities up to the end of March are still outstanding; when the application of Mrs. Nancy Barrera Sanderson will be decided; what are the reasons for the delay in processing such applications; and whether he will take urgent steps to end the distress caused by the delays to lawfully married couples.

The Attorney-General: The information requested in the first part of the question is not available, as the Immigration Appellate Authorities (IAA) does not record information separately about appeals from Filipino citizens.

The IAA has now sent the case papers of Mrs. Nancy Barrera Sanderson's appeal to her representatives in the United Kingdom. When the representatives indicate to the IAA that they are ready to proceed to the hearing before the independent adjudicator, a hearing will be set down within four to six weeks.

Delays in processing appeals at the IAA have been caused by the unexpectedly high rise in the volume of appeals in 1988 and 1989. There was a 60 per cent. rise in 1988; a 30 per cent. rise in 1989; and a further 40 per cent. rise is expected over the next 18 months.

Significant additional resources were provided to the IAA last year, which resulted in a 50 per cent. rise in disposal rates. However, the increased workload has been so great that the backlog of appeals still remains high, but the situation is being kept under review.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will tabulate, in the Official Report, the amount of precept levied by the Metropolitan police on each of the local authorities within its area, distinguishing those wholly within the Greater London area, for the years 1989-90 and 1990-91 respectively, together with their respective adult populations for each year and the amount contributed per head for both years, together with the percentage increase or decrease in the two per capita contributions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The funding arrangements for local authorities which came into operation this year mean that it is not meaningful to compare on a per capita basis the amounts levied by precept by the receiver for the Metropolitan police in 1989-90 and in 1990-91. This is because the precept in 1989-90 was not a per capita charge, but expressed as so many pence in the pound of rateable value; because it included rates on commercial properties in the area concerned, while moneys raised through the new uniform business rates are redistributed to local authorities on a national basis; and it did not include block grant, which is paid to the receiver directly, while revenue support grant which replaces block grant is paid into the collection funds on which the precept is levied.

Football Licensing Authority

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what stage has been reached in making appointments to the Football Licensing Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Appointments to the Football Licensing Authority are still under consideration. My right hon. and noble Friend has already written to the hon. Member to tell him that the Government intend to appoint the authority as soon as possible. He has also written to the Football League to make clear the Government's view that it is not necessary for football clubs to wait for the authority to be set up before starting to make the improvements to football grounds which were recommended in Lord Justice Taylor's final report on the Hillsborough tragedy.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were held in police cells in England and Wales on 4 June.

Mr. Mellor: On Monday 4 June there were 1,080 prisoners, all of them male, held in police stations in England and Wales.

Astley Bridge Police Station

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on what factors were responsible for the escape of a category A prisoner, from Astley Bridge police station, Bolton.

Mr. Mellor: An investigation into the escape of Alan Lord, a category B prisoner, from Astley Bridge police station, Bolton, is being undertaken by Greater Manchester police. I will write to the hon. Member when the investigation is completed. Alan Lord was recaptured at around 11 o'clock last night in Liverpool.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of building Astley Bridge police station, Bolton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The final cost is not yet available but is expected to be about £1,295,000.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A prisoners are held (a) in prisons and (b) in police stations; what instructions are given about the secure holding of prisoners held in police stations; and, if he has any plans for changes.

Mr. Mellor: At present 418 prisoners are confirmed as category A and all are held in prison accommodation.

Steps taken by the police to ensure the security of prisoners held in their custody are a matter for the chief officer of police. Reciprocal arrangements exist between the prison service and the police for the exchange of information relevant to the custody of prisoners who are transferred from the one to the other. Such arrangements are subject to review in the light of particular incidents.

Advertising (Overseas Voters)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost of the newspaper and other advertising campaign about overseas voting registration (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The cost is £750,000 this year, of which £136,400 is being spent on advertising in the United Kingdom (including advertising in publications which also have some overseas circulation) and £510,700 on various forms of advertising or publicity overseas. The remaining £102,900 is for leaflets, posters and production costs, or has not yet been allocated.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cat Skins

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any recent representations on the export of cat skins to West Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has received a number of letters referring to the export of cat skins from the United Kingdom. Several of these letters have mentioned West Germany as a destination for these exports.

My Department is aware of a limited trade in cat skins from the United Kingdom which is legitimately carried out by a small number of companies. Cat skins are not subject to export controls, and, because of the limited level of trade, cat skin exports are not recorded under a separate heading in the Customs tariff.

The worrying issue of cat thefts is for the Home Office.

Debt Advice

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to increase spending on debt advice work.

Mr. Forth: None. My Department does not specifically fund debt advice much of which is provided by citizens advice bureaux, as part of their general service. DTI grant in aid to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Citizens Advice Scotland, which provide the support services for individual citizens advice bureaux, will amount to more than £11 million in 1990-91, compared with some £10 million last year. Individual bureaux are funded mainly by local authorities.

Advice Agencies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the implications of the poll tax on the workload of the citizens advice bureaux and other advice-giving agencies.

Mr. Forth: No such assessment has been made. Independent advice on matters related to the community charge will be given by local citizens advice bureaux which are primarily funded by local authorities. My Department provides funding to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux (NACAB) and Citizens Advice Scotland (CAS), which provide support services to individual citizens advice bureaux including training and information materials. The Department of the Environment has agreed to provide £36,000 to NACAB this year to help with the costs involved in providing training for bureaux workers on the community charge and the Scottish Office has given CAS £36,000 over the last two years for the same purpose.

Desalination

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what funds his Department makes available for research into desalination both for (a) the United Kingdom and (b) overseas markets.

Mr. Forth: I launched my Department's "Wealth from the Oceans" advanced technology programme in April 1989 with a budget of £9,000,000 to encourage firms to carry out more pre-competitive collaborative research into the ocean technologies, including desalination. Some £6,000,000 remains uncommitted and is available to match those sums advanced by industrial consortia whose proposals for longer-term research in this area satisfy the programme's rules.

Alternatively, firms wishing to collaborate with companies located in one or more of 18 other countries in Europe to investigate desalination can apply for EUREKA status and support, which is made available on a case-by-case basis.

Competition Act 1980

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to make a further reference of a public sector body to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980.

Mr. Redwood: A reference has today been sent to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to investigate the efficiency and costs of, and the service provided by, Northern Ireland Railways Ltd. and its subsidiaries in providing passenger, freight and other services. A copy of the reference has been placed in the Library.

ENERGY

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. Wakeham: The information from 1985 onwards is as follows:

Management Consultants with Subject and Outcome

Stuart McKechnie Ltd—Management Training—Design of a training and development programme

TDA Consulting Group Ltd—Management Training—Design of a training and development programme

Information on contracts before 1985 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The cost of individual contracts is commercially confidential.

Nuclear Research

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the major nuclear research projects being undertaken by the Atomic Energy Authority, together with the dates they commenced and the objectives of each project at the time they were originally initiated;

(2) if he will list the major nuclear research projects being paid for by his Department together with the dates they commenced and the objectives of each project at the time they were originally initiated.

Mr. Wakeham: The objectives of the nuclear R and D programmes currently funded by the Department and carried out by UKAEA are described in chapter 5 of the 1990 public expenditure White Paper (Cm 1005). Details of UKAEA's programmes are contained in its annual reports which are laid before Parliament.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for each type of plant the assumed GW and TWh of generation in 1990, 2005 and 2020 in the central growth, low and high price scenarios set out in table 4.10 and 4.11 of his Department's "Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions".

Mr. Wakeham: Capacity and generation for 1990, 2005 and 2020 underlying the central growth with low and high price scenarios of energy paper No. 58 are given in the table. The figures relate to purely illustrative scenarios which used IEA fuel price assumptions.

Scenarios of future United Kingdom generation by fuel type (TWh)

	1990		2005		2020
	CL	CH	CL	CH	CL	CH
Coal	209	208	205	230	62	358
Oil	8	8	10	10	10	10
Gas	0	0	105	58	399	86
Nuclear	66	66	77	77	43	43
Hydro	3	3	3	3	3	3
Imports	13	13	4	13	4	13
Renewables	0	0	0	4	5	8
Total	299	298	405	397	525	520

Scenarios of future United Kingdom capacity by fuel type (GW)

	1990		2005		2020
	CL	CH	CL	CH	CL	CH
Coal	43	43	37	37	12	55
Oil	14	14	16	16	9	9
Gas	0	0	21	19	82	38
Nuclear	12	12	13	13	7	7
Hydro	1	1	1	1	1	1
Imports	2	2	2	2	2	2
Renewables	0	0	0	1	1	1
Total	72	72	91	89	114	114

Notes: CL = Central growth, low price scenario.
CH = Central growth, high price scenario.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for both coal-fired and nuclear plant, in GW, TWh and Mtoe, the assumed gross loss of old plant and the assumed gross gain in new plant, during both 1990 to 2005 and 2005 to 2020 assumed in tables 4.10 and 4.11 of his Department's "Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions".

Mr. Wakeham: The gross gains and losses of coal and nuclear capacity underlying tables 4.10 and 4.11 in energy paper No. 58 are shown in the table. Comparisons are meaningful only on this GW basis. The figures relate to purely illustrative scenarios which used International Energy Agency fuel price assumptions.

Capacity retired and new capacity built (GW)

	1990 to 2005		2005 to 2020
	CL	CH	CL	CH
Coal
Capacity lost	6	6	28	46
New capacity	0	0	3	46
Net change	−6	−6	−25	+18
Nuclear
Capacity lost	4	4	6	6
New capacity	5	5	0	0
Net change	+1	+1	−6	−6

CL = Central growth, low price scenario.
CH = Central growth, high price scenario.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on what grounds the baseline scenarios in his Department's "Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions", assume an annual rate of reduction in the energy ratio of between 0·5 per cent. and 0·8 per cent. compared with an average annual rate of 1·9 per cent. between 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Wakeham: The baseline scenarios in energy paper No. 58 represent projections of demand equations, estimated on past behaviour, and do not contain explicit assumptions about energy efficiency per se. The projected changes in the energy ratio reflect the assumed economic background and, in particular, the energy price scenarios, which were provided by the International Energy Agency.

PRIME MINISTER

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North of Tuesday 12 June, if she will list the members of the interdepartmental group on child sexual abuse.

The Prime Minister: The interdepartmental group on child abuse is chaired by an under-secretary in the Department of Health and comprises senior officials and professional staff from that Department's social services inspectorate and medical, nursing and research management divisions; senior officials from the Department of Education and Science and a member of Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools; senior officials representing the police and probation departments at the Home Office and senior officials from the Scottish Education Department, the Welsh Office and the Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland). Additional members are co-opted to discuss specific issues as necessary.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her reply of Tuesday 12 June to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North, if she will set out in tabular form the actions taken by the Government as a result of the deliberations of the interdepartmental group on child sexual abuse.

The Prime Minister: The role of the interdepartmental group on child abuse is to facilitate the exchange of information about the work undertaken by various Government Departments in the field of child protection and to develop consistent policies across the range of Government responsibilities. Examples of issues in respect of which officials have taken account of the group's discussions in advising Ministers include:

(i) guidance on child protection which was issued to all agencies in July 1988 as part of the Government's response to the Butler-Sloss report;
(ii) training;
(iii) implications of the Children Act;
(iv) research, and
(v) management and treatment of perpetrators of child sexual abuse.

Aid (USSR)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister what plans the Government have to provide aid to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The Prime Minister: We are already offering bilateral technical assistance to the Soviet Union in areas such as management, banking, and agriculture. Such help can make a significant contribution to the process of economic reform.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Duties (Nights)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nights each of the Ministers of the Northern Ireland Office spent in Northern Ireland during the months of September, October, November and December 1989 and the months of January, February, March, April and May 1990.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is in the table:

	Mr. Brooke	Mr. Cope	Lord Skelmersdale	Dr. Mawhinney	Mr. Needham	Mr. Bottomley
September 1989	10	10	18	6	3	14

SCOTLAND

Graeme Stewart and John Allan Milligan

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of 11 June, relating to Graeme Stewart and John Allan Milligan, what criteria are used to decide whether to institute proceedings under section 1 of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Dumbarton of 11 June relating to Graeme Stewart and John Allan Milligan, what criteria are used when deciding whether to prosecute under section 1 of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 June 1990]: When deciding whether or not to institute criminal proceedings in any case reported to him, the public prosecutor in Scotland considers (a) whether the known facts and circumstances disclose a crime at common law; (b) whether he has jurisdiction in the case; (c) whether there is sufficient evidence to justify the institution of proceedings; (d) whether the matter is of sufficient substance and importance to merit criminal proceedings; or (e) whether it is otherwise in the public interest.

WALES

National Parks

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of planning appeal decisions (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) undetermined in each of the Welsh national parks in each of the last two years for which figures are available; and if he will express the numbers allowed and dismissed as a percentage of those determined.

Mr. Roberts: The table sets out the information relating to 1989, the first year for which separate records were kept, and to the period from January 1990 to date:

National Park	Year	Allowed	Per cent.	Dismissed	Per cent.	Withdrawn	Undetermined
Snowdonia	1989	9	36	16	64	3	4
	[1]1990	4	21	15	79	1	13
Brecon Beacons	1989	4	27	11	73	5	1
	[1]1990	4	19	17	81	3	20
Pembrokeshire Coast	1989	6	35	11	65	3	4
	[1]1990	3	19	13	81	2	19

[1] January 1990 to date.

Myodil

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he is now able to make of the number of people in Wales who are complaining of side-effects and after-effects arising from the use of the drug Myodil.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on Thursday 14 June 1990.

Pupil-teacher Ratios

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average pupil-teacher ratio at secondary schools in Wales of (a) fewer than 100 pupils, (b) 100 to 200 pupils and (c) 200 plus pupils, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: The information as at September 1989[1] is as follows:

	Pupil-teacher ratio[3]
100 to 200 pupils[2]	10·6
200 plus pupils	15·3

There are no secondary schools in Wales with fewer than 100 pupils.
[1] Provisional data.
[2] Refers to one recently opened school.
[3] Based on teachers within schools.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average pupil-teacher ratio at primary schools in Wales of (a) fewer than 100 pupils, (b) 100 to 200 pupils and (c) 200 plus pupils, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: The information as at September 1989[1] is as follows:

	Pupil-teacher ratio[2]
Fewer than 100 pupils	18·2
100-200 pupils	22·1
200 pupils	23·6

[1] Provisional data.
[2] Based on teachers within schools.

Statutory Health Bodies

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether membership of (a) health authorites, (b) family practitioner committees, and (c) community health councils, has been extended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Those members of district health authorities whose periods of office were due to terminate on 31 July 1990 have been invited to serve until 31 July 1991. Members of family practitioner committees are due to serve until 31 March 1991 or later. In both cases the membership will cease at an earlier date should Royal Assent be obtained to the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. The periods of office of some of those members of community health councils appointed by the Secretary of State are due to expire on 30 June 1990 and invitations in respect of those positions have recently been issued.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the implementation of local financial management of schools in Wales, and how it affects (a) schools of fewer than 100 pupils and (b) schools of 100 pupils or more.

Mr. Roberts: Schemes for the local management of schools have been approved for each of the local education authorities in Wales and they came into force on 1 April. Accordingly all primary and secondary schools are being formula-funded subject to LEAs' transitional arrangements. The delegation to secondary and larger primary schools of responsibility for managing their budgets is being phased in over the next three years.

The position of small schools was carefully considered before formal approval to the schemes was given. The budgets of schools with fewer than 100 pupils and of the majority of primary schools with 100 pupils or more may benefit from additional LEA funding to protect them against disproportionately high salary costs and to ensure that the requirements of the national curriculum can be met.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what change there has been in the pupil-teacher ratio in Wales since implementation of local financial management; what were the comparable figures for the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roberts: Schemes for local management of schools were introduced by local education authorities in April 1990. No information on pupils or teacher numbers has been collected since that date.

HEALTH

Community Care

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how it is proposed that the level of funds made available to local authorities in respect of community care services will take into account the proposed closure of hospitals for patients with mental handicap and mental illness.

Mr. Dorrell: Local authority expenditure on community care will continue to be funded in the same way as other local authority expenditure. Additional funds are made available to local authorities by district health authorities as a result of local agreements to support mentally handicapped and mentally ill patients discharged from hospital to live in the community. A specific grant is proposed to facilitate community care for people with a mental illness.

Women Workers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women have children between the ages of five and 16 years; and how many of these women work (a) part time and (b) full time.

Mr. Dorrell: Table 1 shows that in 1987, the latest year for which these data are available, 22 per cent. of all women of working age had at least one child aged five to 15 years. Table 2 gives the percentages of these women who were going out to work full time and part time. The data are taken from the general household survey, which obtains information from a sample of private households, and are therefore subject to sampling error.

Table 1 Great Britain

	1987 (per cent.)
Percentage of women with child(ren) aged 5-15 years	22
Base = 100 per cent. (women aged 16-59)	7,656

Table 2 Great Britain

	1987 (per cent.)
Percentage of women, with children aged 5-15 years, who went out to work:
Full time	21
Part time	47
Total going out to work[1]	68
Base = 100 per cent. (women aged 16-59 with child(ren) aged 5-15)	1,694

[1] Includes a few cases for which hours of work were not given.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress has been made on child sexual abuse since the statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 15 May 1989, Official Report, columns 145-48;

(2) if he will provide a table of recent, current and proposed research funded by each Government Department relevant to child sexual abuse in each of the years since 1979, listing (a) projects under consideration, with earmarked funding, (b) projects in progress, (c) projects completed, (d) broad themes identified for research, and the actual and projected cost in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 2 May, Official Report, column 548, whether all local authorities in England have now incorporated the recommendations of the Butler-Sloss report in the guidelines they issue to those of their social workers involved in cases of alleged child abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department does not routinely see all local guidance issued to social workers. However, the social services inspectorate as part of its inspection work looks at social work practice and local guidance.

General Practitoners' Budgets

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who will be responsible for paying for drug addicts to attend drug dependency units when general practitioners have their own budgets.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Health Service and Community Care Bill provides for GP practices which volunteer to do so, and which meet the eligibility criteria, to run their own practice funds. From 1 April 1991, practice funds will enable GPs to purchase a specified range of hospital services for their patients. The practice funding arrangements will cover all initial out-patient referrals made by GPs—but not those made by other health professionals—and certain in-patient or day case procedures, primarily in the area of elective surgery. The cost of treating patients referred by GP fund holders to drug depedency units on an out-patient basis will be met from the practice fund, whereas the cost of referrals by other agencies (such as social services), self-referrals and of in-patient care will not be a charge on the fund. These patients will be covered (as will the patients of non-fund holders) by the contracts which district health authorities place on behalf of their resident population.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with glaucoma and diabetes received free eye tests in each district health authority area in England (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics prior to 1 April 1989 were not broken down by patient group. Since then family practitioner committees have collected data on sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services on a six-monthly basis. District health authorities do not collect such information. The table gives estimated numbers by patient group and regional health authority for the period in question.

NHS sight tests paid for during April-September 1989:

RHA	Diabetics/ Glaucoma sufferers
Northern	5,410
Yorkshire	8,900
Trent	15,660
East Anglia	3,200
North West Thames	6,700
North East Thames	9,700
South East Thames	11,900
South West Thames	6,450
Wessex	8,290
Oxford	5,250
South Western	8,750
West Midlands	10,200
Mersey	3,940
North Western	9,830

These figures are based on a 2 per cent. sample of national health service sight test application forms processed by family practitioner committees. They do not take into account sight tests paid for after 1 April 1989 but conducted before that period.

NHS Reform

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions officials of his Department have undertaken about the possibility of any part of the health service in the Greenwich district opting for self-governing status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Health Services, Greenwich

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether his Department has been involved in any discussions about the establishment of a new district general hospital at the Memorial hospital, Woolwich;

(2) what discussions or correspondence his Department has had with officers of the Greenwich health authority about the future of acute services in Greenwich during the past 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has not been involved with these issues in the past 12 months. Greenwich health authority is to produce a strategy document for acute services for consideration which should address all options.

Steroids

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department first became aware that high dosages of steroids had serious and lasting side-effects; and what action was taken to make this information known to general practitioners and hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A number of serious diseases require long-term treatment with steroids. The side-effects of long-term treatment have been well known for many years, and the British National Formulary sent to all prescribers by the Department free of charge, has carried warnings to this effect since 1966. Licensing of medicinal products under the Medicines Act started in 1971, and companies promoting medicines to doctors are required to provide individual product data sheets which include appropriate information on warnings, contraindications and side-effects.

AIDS

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further proposals he has to eliminate the spread of AIDS through (a) blood transfusions, (b) dirty syringes and (c) sexual transmission; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are firmly committed to taking effective action to minimise the spread of HIV infection.

All blood donations are tested for HIV antibody and people who may have been exposed to HIV are asked not to donate blood. As a consequence, the risks of infection with HIV through blood transfusion in this country have been reduced to the lowest level currently possible.

We recognise the grave potential for spreading HIV through the use of infected injecting equipment by drug users. To counter this threat we have asked agencies working with drug users to maximise the number of users they are in contact with and to make HIV prevention activities a key part of their work. Advice has been issued on the establishment of syringe and needle exchange schemes, and on cleaning injecting equipment. We are also considering the role pharmacists have to play in the provision of injecting equipment in the light of the recent report of the addiction research unit, a copy of which is in the Library.

Sexual transmission of HIV remains the major threat: national and local action has been set in hand to meet that threat. Nationally, the Health Education Authority runs mass media campaigns and back-up activities aimed at the general public, with targeted work directed at groups at particular risk. Locally, health authorities have been asked to develop HIV prevention initiatives, in collaboration with local authorities and voluntary bodies, paying particular attention to HIV prevention services in genito-urinary medicine clinics.

This year health authorities are receiving £128 million specifically for HIV and AIDS-related work, local authorities have been allocated a £9·8 million support grant, and we expect to make grants of £1·8 million to voluntary bodies working in this field.

We expect action on all aspects of HIV prevention will have to be sustained for the foreseeable future, and the need for further action will be kept closely under review.

Drugs

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department monitors the number of persons who show serious side-effects after a long period of drug therapy; and what action is taken both in informing manufacturers and advising the medical profession.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) carefully monitors all issues of drug safety. Suspected adverse reactions to medical products are reported on a voluntary basis by doctors and dentists under the yellow card scheme, and there is a statutory requirement for pharmaceutical companies to submit reports. This applies to patients receiving treatment over short and long periods. The CSM recommends that manufacturers carry out post marketing surveillance studies for new drugs likely to be used for widespread long-term use, in order to identify any side-effects associated with treatment. In addition the CSM closely monitors worldwide epidemiological studies investigating the long-term effects of medicines.

Information on potential problems is sent regularly to all prescribers by means of CSM's "Current Problems" bulletin; in the case of major drug safety hazards the professions are alerted by means of a letter from the chairman. Drug prescribing information and guidance is also available from a number of other sources, for example the British National Formulary, which the Department issues free to all doctors twice yearly.

The pharmaceutical industry is regularly supplied with information on adverse reactions received by the CSM. In addition it is involved in receiving and providing information in relation to drug safety problems for its licensed products.

Blood Transfusion Service

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the costs of operating the blood transfusion service in each national health service region for the latest available year; and if he will express those costs in terms of cash, cash per head, and cash per litre of blood product supplied.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 23 May 1990]: The revenue costs of operating the blood transfusion service for 1988-89 (the latest year available) are shown in the table along with the cost per head of population resident in each regional transfusion centre's area. Information is not held centrally to calculate the cost per litre of blood product supplied.

Region	Revenue expenditure
	On the Blood Transfusion Service (£)	Per head of population in RTC area[1]
Northern	4,011,374	1·33
Yorkshire	5,626,860	1·79

Tuberculosis

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the correlation coefficient between the incidence of HIV infection and the incidence of tuberculosis in England over the period 1980 to 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The reported number of people with HIV infection has increased during the 1980s in England and Wales and in a small proportion of those who have progressed to develop AIDS, tuberculosis has occurred. However, no evidence of a correlation between the HIV epidemic and the overall incidence of tuberculosis has been identified so far in England and Wales.

Tuberculosis incidence, as measured by notifications, has been declining by approximately 5 per cent. per year in recent decades, but the rate of decline varies from year to year. Total notifications for England and Wales in 1988 (5,161) were 1·5 per cent. higher than the total in 1987 (5,086), but such small annual increases have been seen from time to time (in 1973, 1975, 1978 and 1986) with a subsequent resumption of the downward trend. The small increase that was seen in 1988 occurred mainly in the younger females and the elderly age group.

Alcoholism

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the organisations in receipt of funds from his Department that provide post detoxification residential care, indicating the amount received and the number of beds provided.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 11 June 1990]: There is no central register of the number of beds provided for detoxification, nor of the funding specifically used for the provision of these facilities.

The Department does not allocate earmarked moneys for the provision of post detoxification residential care for alcohol misusers. The Department does, however, make available to regional health authorities earmarked funding, which this year totals £15·5 million, for the provision of drug services locally. Post detoxification residential care may be funded from these allocations.

COMARE

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to the Minister of State's answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 674-75, when COMARE originally recommended a study of any possible health effects on the offspring of parents occupationally exposed to radiation; for what reason the recommendation was not then adopted; and when the studies will commence.

Mr. Dorrell: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE)'s original recommendation for epidemiological studies to consider any possible health effects on the offspring of parents occupationally exposed to radiation was made in COMARE's second report (June 1988). The Government accepted this recommendation and research proposals were invited. COMARE subsequently broadened the scope of this recommendation in its third report (June 1989). The Government also accepted this recommendation and, following consultations with COMARE, have invited more detailed proposals. These proposals are currently undergoing the usual refereeing procedure and research should be commissioned later this year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the earnings disregards are for all single or married income support claimants who are required to be available for work; what earnings received by a claimant are not counted for income support purposes; what expenses can an income support claimant deduct from their gross earnings when calculating their benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The main disregards and provisions in income support for people with weekly earnings who are required to be available for work are:

Couples aged under 60 years who have been continuously in receipt of income support for two years or more—£15 per couple.
Couples receiving, or with underlying title to, the disability premium—£15 per couple.
All other couples—£5 each member.
Single people—£5

Earnings from employment which ceased before the claim for income support was made are ignored, with the exception of royalties and, for people below pension age, holiday pay, pay in lieu of notice or remuneration, and retainer fees.

Deductions are made from gross earnings in respect of income tax, social security contributions and one half of any contribution towards an occupational or personal pension scheme. In addition, where earnings are from self-employment deductions may be made for certain expenses wholly and exclusively defrayed for the purposes of that employment.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single-pensioner households in Scotland are in receipt of income support or have been in receipt of income support or supplementary benefit for each of the past five years, expressed as a percentage of all single-pensioner households and as a numerical total.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [pursuant to her reply, 1 March 1990, c. 318-20]: I regret that the information given was incorrect. The corrected figures, which relate to single people aged 60 and over, are in the table. The information requested is not available for single-pensioner households.

Number of "Single" people in Scotland

Thousands

	1983	1984	1986	1987	1988
a. Aged 60 and over	482	483	483	484	484
b. In receipt of Income Support aged 60 and over	131	138	135	150	149
c. Percentage in receipt of Income Support	27·2	28·6	28	31	30·8

Note: The population figures are mid-year population estimates from the population statistics branch of the General Registry Office for Scotland. The number of benefit recipients are taken from the annual statistical enquiries (ASE) in December 1983, December 1984, February 1986, May 1987 and May 1988. No ASE was produced in 1985.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the 1988-89 cost of providing the national insurance retirement pension (a) including spouse additions and (b) excluding spouse additions to category A retirement pensioners (1) in total, (2) for males and (3) for females.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The costs[1] as requested are as follows:

Including Adult Dependency Additions (ADAs)[2]

	£ million
Total Costs	12,240
To men	7,840
To women	4,400
Excluding ADAs
Total Costs	12,090
To men	7,690
To women	4,400

[1] Source Government Actuary Department.
[2] It is impossible to tell from Government statistics whether the ADA is paid for a spouse or a person having care of children.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the number of (a) male and (b) female claimants who receive a spouse addition for non-contributory benefits for the latest available year.

Mr. Scott: The latest available figures show that 4,966 male and 487 female claimants receive increases of non-contributory benefits in respect of adult dependants. It is not possible to separate those cases where the increase is payable in respect of a spouse.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 June on the cost of spouse additions, what percentage of the £800 million and £4 million relate to the retirement pension.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: On male contribution records approximately 20 per cent. of the estimated £800 million figure relates to retirement pension. On female contribution records the percentage is negligible. (Note: The figures of £800 million and £4 million in the earlier answer were the estimated cost in 1988-89 of adult dependency additions, which include a small number of adult dependants other than spouses who have care of a child or children. It is not possible to give separate figures solely for spouse additions although the amounts involved are unlikely to be significantly different.)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 323, regarding the woman's half-test, what information is available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A woman who was affected by the married woman's half-test would not have received any pension (not even a reduced one) based only on her own contributions. However, that test was abolished on 22 December 1984 for all women regardless of when they reached pension age and as a result some women became entitled to a reduced pension based on their own contributions.

At March 1989 there were some 0·6 million women in receipt of a reduced category A pension (that is one based on their own contributions), but it is not possible to say how many of these were women who became entitled to that pension as a result of the abolition of the test.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many single-pensioner households in Scotland are in receipt or have been in receipt of housing benefit for each of the past five years, expressed as a percentage of all single-pensioner households and as a numerical total.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [pursuant to her reply, 7 March 1990, c. 679]: I regret that a correction is necessary.

The estimate for 1988 of 250,000 single people in Scotland aged 60 or over in receipt of housing benefit represents 51·7 per cent. of the total number of Scots in this group and not 11·3 per cent. as shown in the published reply.

Pension Ages

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 323, regarding pension ages, in what form the information is available.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Such information as is available is set out in my answer to the hon. Member's earlier question.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Charities

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many bodies established under the law of Scotland or managed or controlled wholly or mainly in, or from, Scotland are presently recognised by the Inland Revenue as charitable for tax purposes and are eligible for relief under section 505 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue is in the process of transferring to computer information about bodies in Scotland which have been recognised as charities for tax purposes. The task is not yet complete, but it is estimated there may be about 15,000.

Mortgages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his reply of 6 March, Official Report, column 595, if he will now make provision for writing down against tax liabilities the increases in mortgage debts of individuals which were incurred because of the rise in interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Increases in mortgate interest payable as a result of changes in interest rates qualify for mortgage interest relief in accordance with the normal rules. Relief is allowed for the actual interest paid on qualifying loans up to the statutory limit.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer from the budget of which Department the United Kingdom's contribution to the European bank for reconstruction and development will be paid.

Mr. Ryder: The United Kingdom's contribution to the European bank for reconstruction and development will be paid through the Overseas Development Administration. The contributions for the years up to 1993-94 will be additional to ODA's existing provisions. Provisions for contributions in the years after 1993-94 will be considered in future public expenditure surveys.

Society of Chartered Accountants

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Society of Chartered Accountants; and what was discussed.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 14 June 1990]: I have no knowledge of any organisation by this name.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the status of a BSE-free herd will be affected by (a) the purchase of calves or young stock from a herd with BSE and (b) the purchase of calves or young stock from a herd that subsequently develops BSE; and, in the second case, how the authorities and the purchasing owner will be guaranteed information of the change in circumstance.

Mr. Maclean: Since there is no test for BSE in the live animal it is not possible to certify that any herd is BSE free.

Salmon

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the report on the future of the east coast salmon fishery.

Mr. Curry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) on 26 April at column 317.

Spongiform Encephalopathy (Pets)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the latest figures for the incidences of spongiform encephalopathy in domestic pets.

Mr. Maclean: Thirteen cats' brains have been examined at the central veterinary laboratory at Weybridge, of which three have been confirmed as having a spongiform encephalopathy. There are no confirmed cases involving dogs.

Rabies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the result of the rabies tests carried out on an eight-month-old border collie, which died in Walthamstow, east London on 15 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The rabies tests were all negative.

DEFENCE

Disarmament

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the process of disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In common with our NATO allies, the United Kingdom has continued to give strong support to current arms control negotiations, and to work actively in those in which we are involved. We are now making important progress in achieveing our long-standing aim of enhancing security and stability in Europe at the lowest possible levels of forces consistent with our security needs. We intend to maintain this policy, which has proved such a success.

Air-to-Surface Missiles

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the proposed sitings of tactical air-to-surface missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The question of the detailed sitings of tactical air-to-surface missiles has not arisen.

Cruise

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about sea-launched cruise missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave on 5 April at column 832.

German Unification

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes he envisages in Britain's defence policy as a result of the two-plus-four talks on the reunification of Germany.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State informed the House on 6 February, we are examining options for change in the structure and deployment of our armed forces in the light of changing international circumstances. We will also be playing a full part in the forthcoming review of NATO strategy. It is still too early to indicate any specific changes, but we will continue to maintain our commitment to NATO which provides the best guarantee of peace and security in Europe.

Aircraft Procurement

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current state of the CFE negotiations and their possible effect on future military aircraft procurement for the RAF.

Mr. Alan Clark: The negotiations continue to make good progress and there are hopes that an agreement may be reached later this year. There has, as yet, been no agreement on either the definition or number of combat aircraft which might be covered by a CFE treaty. It is, therefore, not possible to speculate on the likely effects on future procurement.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests of nuclear weapons have taken place in the last five years; whether they have been to test the effectiveness of the weapons or in connection with modernisation; where such tests took place; and what notification was given to any international bodies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following joint UK-US nuclear tests have been held in the last five years:

Kinibito—5 December 1985
Darwin—25 June 1986
Midland—16 July 1987
Barnwell—8 December 1989

All were conducted at the Nevada test site. Such tests are carried out in order to maintain the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons capability. In line with standard practice, all were simultaneously announced in London and Washington 30 minutes after shot time; no specific notifications were given to any international body.

RAF Akrotiri

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year for the last 10 years to date, the number of times the United States U2 spy aircraft has used the facilities of RAF Akrotiri; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The USAF U2 aircraft has been permanently stationed at RAF Akrotiri since 1974 in support of middle east peacekeeping arrangements. It operates with the knowledge of all Governments directly involved.

Biological Defence

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has obtained for his departmental library a copy of the United States Department of Defense 1986 publication, "Biological Defense Programme"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: No. A copy is, however, on order by the relevant departmental library.

Trilateral Air Force

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement in respect of the proposed plan to create a trilateral British, United States and West German air force, based primarily in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have received no proposals for a trilateral British, United States and West German air force based primarily in the United Kingdom.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the procedure for ensuring that the non-military potential applications of work carried out with genetically modified organisms are identified and subsequently exploited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Scientific work leading to the development of defensive measures against chemical and biological warfare, including the limited amount of work on genetically manipulated organisms, often has non-military potential. It is identified by the scientists in the course of their experiments and reviewed by the independent medical, physical sciences and life sciences committees.

Where possible, the work is then exploited through contacts between the MOD's scientific staff and industry and scientific research organisations. The greater part of the work not disseminated in this way is published in open literature.

Low Flying

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gower (Mr. Wardell) of 25 April, Official Report, column 208, on how many occasions full charges were carried on low-flying training exercises in 1989 and 1990 to date; and what forms of charges were involved.

Mr. Neubert: The detailed information requested is not available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost and effort.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of low-flying training sorties flown by RAF and NATO aircraft over South Yorkshire and neighbouring counties in 1989 and the proposed number in 1990; and how close any such sorties fly to Crowedge, Hazlehead, South Yorkshire.

Mr. Neubert: Central records are not held in a form that would enable the information requested to be provided.

Army Structures

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has initiated to reduce public expenditure on the British Army by rationalising its regimental and property structure.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is this Government's policy to make the most cost-effective use of resources in all areas, including the organisation and infrastructure of the Army. The scope for reducing costs is kept under continuous review.

Royal Ordnance Factory, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will conduct an immediate review of security at the royal ordnance factory, Nottingham.

Mr. Neubert: Security arrangements at the factory are regularly reviewed by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons Ministry of Defence police are currently employed at the royal ordnance factory, Nottingham; whether they are armed; and whether he has any plans to withdraw them.

Mr. Neubert: Ministry of Defence police officers are present as required by the Ministry of Defence as part of the security arrangements for the factory and there are no plans for their withdrawal. All Ministry of Defence police officers are trained in the use of firearms and may be armed if it is considered necessary for operational reasons.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police currently patrol the royal ordnance factory at Nottingham; and at what cost.

Mr. Neubert: It is not the practice to give details of numbers of Ministry of Defence police (MDP) patrolling any particular location. The estimated cost of the MDP detachment at ROF Nottingham for 1989-90 is £500,000. Final figures are not yet available.

British Aerospace

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police are employed at British Aerospace establishments.

Mr. Neubert: Currently 118 MDP officers are employed at the five ROF plc sites.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what manufacturing materials are used in increased quantities at the atomic weapons research establishment, Cardiff, following the transfer of work from the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston, to the atomic weapons research establishment, Cardiff;

(2) what increase there has been in the percentage by value of the Trident D5 warhead programme at the atomic weapons research establishment, Cardiff, by virtue of the transfer of work from the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Neubert: There has been a small increase in the non-fissile workload at AWE Cardiff associated with the Trident warhead production programme. For security reasons it would be inappropriate to quantify this in either material or cost terms.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current rates of pay for Ministry of Defence police.

Mr. Neubert: The current rates of pay for officers of the Ministry of Defence police, from 1 September 1989 are as follows:

Arms Control

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made in reaching arms control arrangements between Britain and the USSR.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

There are no current bilateral arms control negotiations between Britain and the USSR. However, both nations participate actively in a number of multilateral negotiations, in particular those covering conventional forces in Europe, confidence and security-building measures, and a global ban on chemical weapons. Progress is being made, although complex issues remain to be resolved in all these negotiations.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

COCOM

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the most recent meeting of COCOM.

Mr. Waldegrave: The high-level meeting of COCOM took place in Paris from 6-7 June. The meeting agreed a British proposal for the establishment of a "core list" of items of essential strategic significance, to be applied to all the proscribed destinations. This core list will replace the existing industrial list and will result in a new, shorter set of controls.

The meeting also agreed to the deletion of 30 items from the existing industrial list, identified as a direct result of work already done following the British proposal for a core list. The deletions will be implemented on 1 July. Work will continue to identify further items for deletion.

Signifiant revisions were also agreed in the controls on machine tools, computers and telecommunications. These will be implemented on 1 July.

The high-level meeting welcomed the establishment from 1 July of an interim export control regime for the GDR.

Soviet Union (Exit Visas)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise with the Soviet authorities their failure to grant an exit visa to Irinia Sokolova-Lidsky of Kiev.

Mr. Waldegrave: The case of Irinia Sokolova was raised with the Soviet authorities during my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's visit to the USSR, 7-10 June. We shall not let up until there is a satisfactory outcome.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise with the Soviet authorities their refusal to grant an exit visa to Emil Kunin and his family of Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: We can certainly raise the case of Emil Kunin and his family with the Soviet authorities but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise with the Soviet authorities their failure to grant an exit visa to Boris and Eda Zolotarevsky of Moscow.

Mr. Waldegrave: We can certainly raise the case of Boris and Eda Zolotarevsky with the Soviet authorities but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise with the Soviet authorities their failure to grant an exit visa to Valery Zelichenok of Kranoyarsk and his family.

Mr. Waldegrave: We can certainly raise the case of Valery Zelichenok with the Soviet authorities but in order to make our representations most effective we shall need further details.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is now prepared to meet Mr. Rauf Denktash, President of the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus; and if he will make a statement about political progress following the presidential and parliamentary elections in Northern Cyprus.

Mr. Maude: We would consider a ministerial meeting with Mr. Denktash if it would materially assist the achievement of a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement of the Cyprus problem. That is not currently the case. We fully support United Nations efforts to reconvene the intercommunal talks.

British Embassies

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all British embassies with the number of diplomatic staff in each (a) at the present time, (b) in May-June 1989, (c) in May-June 1988, (d) in May-June 1985 and (e) in May-June 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the current edition of the HM diplomatic service overseas reference list, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Actual staff levels vary from day to day, depending on leave, training and urgent operational requirements.

The other information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

USSR—South Korea Relations

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in its capacity as a member of the Security Council, the United Kingdom has been involved in recent developments concerning relations between the Soviet Union and the Republic of South Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. We welcome the meeting between President Roh and President Gorbachev, in San Francisco on 4 June, as an important step towards the improvement of relations between the Soviet Union and the Republic of Korea. We hope that this will also improve the prospects for peace on the Korean peninsula.

Yemen

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Yemen.

Mr. Waldegrave: We enjoy good relations with the Republic of Yemen. This was reflected in messages of congratulations from the Queen and my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on the occasion of the unification of the Yemen Arab Republic and the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen on 22 May. We wish the Government and people of the Republic of Yemen well.

Anti-Semitism

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom Government policy on the increase in anti-Semitism in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: We of course deplore anti-Semitism in all its forms and will continue to do all we can to counter it. Our embassies in eastern Europe are monitoring the situation carefully. There have been some reported incidents of anti-Semitism, and the freer atmosphere has allowed it to be expressed openly, but we do not think that there has been a general increase in anti-Semitism in the area.

Liberia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom Government propose any assistance towards ending the civil war in Liberia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are following the situation in Liberia closely through our embassy in Monrovia. We hope that the talks in Freetown between the Liberian Government and opposition forces will lead to a peaceful solution for this troubled country. We are funding an eight-man UNDRO relief team at a cost of £200,000.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 18 June 1990

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Lenient Sentences

Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases involving lenient sentences he has referred to the Court of Appeal for review; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Since 1 February 1989, when this power took effect, I have applied for leave to refer the sentencing in 15 cases to the Court of Appeal. Four cases have not yet been heard, and I have withdrawn two cases in the light of further information. Leave has been granted in eight of the remaining nine cases, and sentences have been increased in seven of the cases. I have referred one case to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland; the sentence in that case was also increased.

Legal Aid

31. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General what was the smallest amount paid in legal aid in the past year; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There is no minimum sum below which a claim for legal aid will not be met. Details of legal aid fund expenditure are contained in the legal aid annual report, a copy of which is placed in the Library each year.

House of Fraser

32. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if he will discuss with the Director of Public Prosecutions the arrangements for promoting prosecutions on breaches of company law, in the light of the publication of the House of Fraser report.

The Attorney-General: Primary responsibility for the enforcement of company law rests with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The Crown prosecution service prosecutes Companies Act offences where they are relevant to other proceedings which they have brought. The relevant principles are clearly established, and I have no present plans to discuss them with the DPP.

Judges (Retirement Age)

33. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any proposals to lower the retirement age for judges.

The Attorney-General: No.

Maguire Case

34. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General when he last discussed the Maguire case with the Director of Public Prosecutions.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore).

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

The Attorney-General: No such studies have been conducted within the legal secretariat to the Law Officers or the Serious Fraud Office. In the case of the Treasury Solicitor's Department the firm of Peat Marwick McLintock advised on the installation of a computerised time recording and billing system. The cost of this consultation was £86,337·63 and the system has now been installed.

Since the service was created in 1986, the following studies by management consultants have been carried out in the Crown prosecution service.

Strategic planning and budgeting study by Hay Management Consultants, completed April 1987, cost £37,000, results—strategy set and planning system implemented;

Telecommunications strategy study by Logica, completed January 1987, cost £20,000, result—strategy set;

Internal communications study by Charles Barker Communications, completed December 1987, cost £29,000, result—internal communication manager appointed and work on improving internal communications put in hand;

Information study, assistance from The Mindworks Partnership, cost £37,000, completed December 1988, result—programme of work to develop internal information systems put in hand;

Staffing model feasibility study by PA Management Consultants, cost £37,000, completed December 1988, result—feasibility established leading to full study;

Staffing model development by PA Management Consultants, completed January 1990, cost £135,000, result—model produced, currently being tested and refined;

Evaluation of the use of information technology to present evidence in court by The Human Science and Advanced Technology Research Centre, Loughborough University, completed February 1990, cost £15,000, result—evaluation report produced and supplied to other relevant organisations;

Review of CPS contract car-hire scheme by Transtech Consultancy Services, completed April 1990, cost £14,000, the report is now being considered.

Licensed Conveyancers

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Attorney-General how many licensed conveyancers are presently registered to practise in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: There are presently 766 licensed conveyancers holding licenses, of whom 270 are practising on their own account. The remaining 496 are employed as conveyancers.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Attorney-General what educational requirements and what technical educational qualifications are required before an applicant can be accepted as a licensed conveyancer.

The Attorney-General: To be accepted as a licensed conveyancer a person must have successfully completed or obtained exemption from the Council for Licensed Conveyancers' examinations and the prescribed practical training. Information about the educational requirements and training for licensed conveyancers is available from the Council for Licensed Conveyancers at Golden Cross house, Duncannon street, London WC2N 4JF.

Leaseholders

Mr. Soley: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects legislation concerning leaseholders to be presented to Parliament.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor announced in June 1988 that the Government had arranged for draft legislation to be prepared at the Law Commission to give effect to the proposals contained in the report of the working group on commonhold (Cm. 179) under the chairmanship of Mr. T. M. Aldridge. That work is taking longer to complete than was originally expected and a number of important issues remain to be resolved. No final decision has yet been taken about the implementation of the report, nor can I give any indication of when legislation on commonhold may be introduced.

Mr. Kevin Taylor

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 13 June to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, whether the Director of Public Prosecutions has yet received a reply to his letter of 19 January to the chief constable of Greater Manchester.

The Attorney-General: Yes. The terms of the reply are confidential between the chief constable and the DPP. The right hon. Member will, however, be aware of the announcement by the chief constable of Greater Manchester that he has decided to ask a senior officer from another police force to investigate the issues raised by the DPP.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what steps have been taken to reduce delays in deciding appeals to the social security commissioners and in notifying claimants of commissioners' decisions and what effect those steps have had or are expected to have on the average length of such delays.

The Attorney-General: The following steps have been taken within the last month by the Lord Chancellor's Department and local management of the office of social security commissioners (OSSC):

(a) The Department is recruiting an additional legally qualified Nominated Officer to assist the Commissioners;

(b) A 'fast-stream' system has been introduced to expedite appeals where both parties agree the lower tribunal erred in law. At present up to 20 cases a week of this sort are being dealt with out of the usual chronological order;

(c) Agency typists and word processor operators are now used to cover for sick and annual leave by full-time staff;

(d) Two new word processors have been installed. A new photocopier will be installed shortly which will significantly reduce the time taken to photocopy case papers and Commissioners' decisions;

(e) Tighter targets have been set for the typing of work, including Commissioners' decisions, to reduce delays; and

(f) Office systems at OSSC's London headquarters have been reviewed and simplified to increase effectiveness and management control. Some sections have been amalgamated.

The Department believes that these measures will start to reduce the average length of delays over the next three months, but it is too early to predict the scale of that reduction.

Divorce

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Attorney-General how much legal aid for divorce cases cost in the latest year for which figures are available; and how much this cost in 1985.

The Attorney-General: The latest year for which figures are available is 1988-89. The cost of full civil legal aid in all matrimonial cases was £116·91 million in 1988-89 and £74·88 million in 1984-85.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Recipients (Growth Rate)

39. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies have been made of the impact of British aid on the growth rate of recipient countries.

Mrs. Chalker: The ODA's own evaluation studies examine the specific impact of our aid projects and programmes. There have been many other studies of the impact of global aid flows on the economies of aid-recipient countries, but I am not aware of any which focused on the relationship between British aid and the growth rate of recipients.

EC Ministers

41. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the last meeting of European Community Development Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: European Community Development Ministers last met on 29 May. We discussed the direction of the Community's aid to Asia and Latin America. I emphasised the importance of focusing on poor countries and poorest sectors of the population. We agreed on a resolution stressing the importance of environmental aspects of development. I gained the support of all partners to my call for reform of the tropical forestry action plan and for further discussion on completion of the review. We also discussed food aid policy; the role of women in development; and evaluation of projects.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Community Council of Development Ministers meeting of 29 May.

Mrs. Chalker: At the European Community Development Ministers meeting on 29 May we discussed the direction of the Community's aid to Asia and Latin America. I emphasised the importance of focusing on poor countries and poorest sectors of the population. We agreed on a resolution stressing the importance of environmental aspects of development, and I repeated my call for reform of the tropical forestry action plan. We also discussed food aid policy; the role of women in development; and evaluation.

Bergen Declaration

42. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he plans to take as a result of the Bergen ministerial declaration; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Bergen ministerial declaration will be helpful in informing the Government's views on the global aspects of implementing sustainable development. Where appropriate we shall be following up in the relevant fora, especially in the preparations for the UN conference on environment and development in Brazil in 1992.

Vietnam

43. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has recently had with representatives of the Vietnamese Government on the subject of aid relief to Vietnam.

Mrs. Chalker: During the visit of my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to Hanoi from 18 to 21 February the possibility of British aid was discussed in the context of a satisfactory overall settlement to the problem of returning all non-refugees from Hong Kong to their country of origin.

44. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to visit Vietnam to discuss with the Government of Vietnam future aid programmes to that country.

Mrs. Chalker: I have no current plans to visit Vietnam.

50. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish a government-to-government bilateral aid programme with Vietnam.

65. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he is giving to establishing a government-to-government bilateral aid programme in Vietnam.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 17 May. The Government have made it clear that the provision of direct bilateral aid would depend on the co-operation of the Vietnamese Government in reaching a satisfactory solution to the Hong Kong boat people and on a continuing commitment to economic reform.

Southern Africa

45. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with non-governmental organisations about aid for people in southern Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have regular meetings with representatives of non-governmental organisations, and aid to southern Africa is often discussed.

AIDS

46. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resources have now been committed by the Overseas Development Administration to help developing countries to combat the spread of AIDS.

Mrs. Chalker: To date we have provided £16·83 million as our contribution to the global programme on AIDS being run by WHO. We have also committed £6·58 million to help finance a number of individual country AIDS control programmes in Africa and the Caribbean; these have been formulated under the umbrella of the WHO global programme.

In addition, we have contributed £2·98 million over six years to the International Planned Parenthood Federation's AIDS programme; and £3 million for AIDS-related research studies in developing countries in a number of key fields by a range of British institutions and experts.

Namibia

47. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to help relieve the debts incurred by Namibia before independence.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) on 14 May.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the application of African, Caribbean and Pacific trade preferences to Namibia was discussed at the meeting of the European Community Development Council on 29 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Namibia's application for accession to the Lomé convention was not discussed at the Development Council. The Commission is in contact with the Namibian Government and will be making proposals for accession arrangements which will cover trade preferences. The United Kingdom Government have told the Namibian Government that we will view their application sympathetically, and we hope their accession will be formalised as soon as possible.

Global Warming

48. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on how his Department is monitoring the impact of Britain's bilateral aid programme on global warming.

Mrs. Chalker: It is not possible to monitor specifically the overall impact of the bilateral aid programme on global warming. The ODA's manual of environmental appraisal guides managers in assessing environmental issues in all bilateral projects and programmes.

Our programmes in forestry and energy efficiency are designed to help developing countries pursue their development objectives while limiting their contribution to global warming.

54. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the current Overseas Development Administration budget is directed towards chlorofluorocarbon and carbon dioxide reductions in developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: We have so far committed over £340,000 to assist developing countries to phase out substances that deplete the ozone layer. This support covered a study of the options open to India for phasing out these substances; funding for an international conference on tropical ozone and atmospheric change which was held in Penang, Malaysia in February; and help to enable developing countries take an active part in international meetings of the Montreal protocol.

It is not possible to monitor specifically how much of the current aid budget is directed towards carbon dioxide reductions in developing countries. However, key programme activities like our tropical forestry initiative and our energy efficiency initiative are designed to help developing countries pursue their development objectives, while limiting their contribution to global warming through reductions in carbon dioxide emissions. During my visit to India last month I announced a new aid package under the energy efficiency initiative which will provide £50 million to improve energy efficiency in India.

Caribbean Bananas

49. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking to protect the livelihoods of Caribbean banana workers when the European single market comes into effect.

55. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what effect he expects the European single market to have on the economies of the main banana-producing Caribbean states.

Mrs. Chalker: The European Commission has not yet come forward with a proposal for the arrangements to apply for bananas post-1992. It is not possible at present to say what impact the creation of the single European market will have on Caribbean banana-producing countries. However, we are encouraging the Commission and other member states to ensure that any new arrangements fulfil our commitments to our Commonwealth Caribbean suppliers, and that they take account of consumer interests and the competition and efficiency objectives of the single market initiative.

Climate Change

51. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the British Government are contributing to the fund to help developing countries participate in the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change.

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration and the Department of the Environment have each contributed £25,000, and the Overseas Development Administration has offered a further £25,000.

Refugees

52. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to discuss the position of refugees; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I met the new High Commissioner for Refugees, Mr. Stoltenberg, in Geneva on 5 June. We had a most useful and wide-ranging discussion, focusing particularly on Mr. Stoltenberg's plans for reorganising UNHCR and improving its operational effectiveness. I also announced new British contributions totalling £5 million which will help UNHCR over its current financial difficulties.

Cambodia

53. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to establish a bilateral aid programme with Cambodia.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain has no relations with the Hun Sen regime. This rules out the provision of normal bilateral aid. We are, however, committed to providing humanitarian assistance inside Cambodia through British non-governmental organisations and UN agencies.

Eastern Europe

56. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect of developments in eastern Europe on the global availability of funds from multilateral institutions.

Mrs. Chalker: OECD member Governments are agreed that assistance to eastern Europe must not detract from the high priority placed on international co-operation with the developing countries; and this was reaffirmed in the declaration by the UN special session on international economic co-operation held from 23 April to 1 May.

European Community aid to eastern Europe has not been at the expense of any other development assistance. Any increase in World Bank lending would be funded from borrowings in the financial markets. Additional funds will be made available for eastern Europe through the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Ethiopia

57. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest information he has on the famine situation in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: Although the situation remains critical, it has so far been possible to avert mass starvation and mass migration of people in search of food. There are some grounds for hope that the threat can be contained, provided that relief operations are not further disrupted by the civil conflict and that there is good rainfall over the coming months.

68. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to ensure that food supplies reach northern Tigray and Eritrea.

Mrs. Chalker: We are providing both food and logistical support for the southern line operation which, by the end of May, had delivered more than 15,000 tonnes of food to the famine-affected areas of northern Wollo and Tigray. We are also providing support for deliveries of relief supplies from Sudan into Eritrea and Tigray, and for the United Nations-organised airlift of supplies for vulnerable groups in Asmara, the besieged capital city of Eritrea. We have also been pressing for the reopening of the port of Massawa and welcome recent reports of the Ethiopian Government's willingness in principle to agree to this.

Romania (HIV-infected Babies)

58. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans he has to make funds available to help HIV-infected babies in Romania.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have already given 1 million disposable syringes and a quantity of HIV testing equipment to Romania; and we have paid for the transport to Romania of disposable gloves, syringes and other supplies generously donated by British companies. We have also asked the World Health Organisation to use for AIDS work a substantial part of the £500,000 we recently gave to the World Health Organisation's programme of aid to the Romanian health services. We have no plans for further aid at present.

Third World Debt

59. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by how much he estimates developing countries have benefited from the Brady plan for third world debt.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 14 May at column 340.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he estimates the benefit to have been to developing countries of the Toronto plan for the poorest indebted countries.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) and for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) on 14 May at column 340.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what proposals the Government have made to the World Bank about the cancellation of debt owed by the poorest developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain has taken the lead in international efforts to assist the poorest debtors. We have cancelled over £1 billion-worth of old aid loans. On other official debt, we proposed concessions which were agreed at the 1988 Toronto economic summit. We regularly review the debt strategy with the management and other members of the IMF and World Bank.

Southern Africa Universities

60. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money was given in aid by the United Kingdom to universities during (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90 in (i) South Africa, (ii) Malawi and (iii) Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures in the table represent the cost of the following activities—

(i) in South Africa scholarships for black students, and advice on strengthening academic support programmes for them;

(ii) in Malawi and Zimbabwe the supplementation from the bilateral aid programme of the salaries of British lecturers and the provision of equipment; and expenditure in these countries from the ODA grant to the committee for international co-operation in higher education.

	1988-89 £	1989-90 £
South Africa	350,000	800,000
Malawi	613,000	760,000
Zimbabwe	264,000	756,000

Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference

61. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British support for SADCC.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 24 May at column 368.

Zambia

62. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what priorities Her Majesty's Government use in their aid programme for Zambia.

Mrs. Chalker: Our main priority is support for Zambia's structural adjustment programme, which is being monitored by the International Monetary Fund, and to which we have pledged £30 million in balance of payments support. In addition we are spending over £14 million per annum, largely on manpower support projects involving some 200 aid personnel in Zambia and training for over 300 Zambians in the United Kingdom; and on the strengthening of institutional capacity at district level in the northern and central provinces.

Amazon Forests

63. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new measures he proposes to take to ensure an integrated and comprehensive approach to aid designed to protect Amazonian forests.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom is supporting the development of effective tropical forestry action plans in the Amazon countries as an important means of encouraging an integrated and comprehensive approach towards protection of the Amazonian rain forests. We are doing this both by seeking reforms of the tropical forestry action plans mechanism in general and by helping in specific countries.

South Africa

64. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British aid to black South Africans.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 19 March to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) at column 431.

Sri Lanka

66. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help has been given during the last 12 months to extend the services of the British Council in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The British Council has not contemplated an extension of its services in Sri Lanka over the last 12 months in view of the security situation in the country. Help for this purpose has neither been sought from, nor offered by the Government. When the security situation permits, further assistance for English language teaching is one of a number of possibilities that we are prepared to consider under our bilateral aid programme to Sri Lanka.

Forestry Projects

67. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans further to assist forestry projects overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration is currently implementing a forestry initiative with the aim to commit a further £100 million bilaterally to assist forestry activities over the next three years.

Animal Conservation

69. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much will be made available by his Department for animal conservation schemes in 1990-91.

Mrs. Chalker: We expect to spend over £2 million. This includes projects jointly funded by the ODA and non-governmental organisations which concentrate on environmental issues and their impact on local communities, but which are expected to have an indirect but distinctly beneficial effect on animal conservation.

Tropical Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he is doing to fund research designed to increase the productivity of tropical forests, particularly non-timber products.

Mrs. Chalker: We are funding 40 projects at a total cost of £6·2 million under the forestry research programme managed for the ODA by the Oxford Forestry Institute. These include projects on, for example, agro-forestry and buffer zones. The Natureal Resources Institute is considering research on the economic potential of rain forest products.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the new projects in preparation which will be financed from the new £100 million for rain forest-related projects.

Mrs. Chalker: As the Prime Minister told the hon. Member on 11 December 1989, at column 459, details of particular projects will be made known when formal agreement has been reached with the country concerned. I summarised recent developments in my speech to the rain forest harvest conference on 17 May.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to strengthen forestry departments of tropical countries, where they are charged with conservation and management.

Mrs. Chalker: An ODA report on forestry projects of November 1989, a copy of which is in the Library, lists ongoing bilateral forestry projects aiming to strengthen forest departments in tropical countries. Many of the projects in preparation also have this as a major aim. I gave examples in my speech to the rain forest harvest conference on 17 May, a copy of which is also in the Library.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the contract with Professor Malcolm Wilkins, regius professor of botany at the university of Glasgow, on the development of space-based monitoring of rain forest.

Mrs. Chalker: Professor Wilkins has recommended that the ODA should contact the European Space Agency and the British National Space Centre. Officials will do this.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Overseas Travel

Mr. Amos: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the airline used and the destination of each of the overseas visits undertaken by the Select Committee on Employment for the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Since April 1989 the Committee has undertaken two visits overseas. The first, in July 1989, was to Copenhagen and Amsterdam, using British Airways flights except for the flight between Copenhagen and Amsterdam (KLM Royal Dutch Airlines) and one Member's return flight to Manchester (NLM Dutch Airlines). The second, in October/November 1989, was to Rome and Bordeaux; the flight to Rome was by British Airways; from Rome to Bordeaux by Air France and Air Inter; from Bordeaux to London by Air France.

Broadcasting

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received from the Royal National Institute for the Deaf concerning sign language inserts on broadcasts of Parliament.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have received no recent representations from the Royal National Institute for the Deaf on the subject of sign language inserts. However, the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House, which I chair, has been examining the issue as part of its monitoring of the experiment, during the course of which evidence has been received from the RNID and other organisations representing the deaf. A closed-circuit trial with the signing of Prime Minister's questions was arranged by the Select Committee during the first two weeks after the Whitsun Adjournment and the relevant tapes were shown in the Division Lobby. The Select Committee's report, which will cover this aspect of the experiment, is expected to be published by about early July.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Romania

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to extend the eastern European know-how fund to Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no plans to do so at present.

Lockerbie

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any offers of help from the Government of Syria with regard to the Lockerbie air disaster.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Prisoners (Turkey)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received calling for his Department to put pressure on the Turkish Government to release Demetrios Leuka and Christalis Savvides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Nineteen. We have made it clear to the parties concerned that neither incursions into territory controlled by the Turkish Cypriots, nor the continued detention of the two youths, contributes to the creation of the right atmosphere for progress towards a settlement of the Cyprus problem.

BBC World Service

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give the reasons for his approval of the BBC's decision to end World Service broadcasts in Japanese and Malay.

Mr. Sainsbury: The BBC and the FCO have jointly reviewed new broadcasting opportunities against the effectiveness of world service output. It was agreed, subject to the outcome of the 1990 public expenditure survey, to increase broadcasts in Russian, Mandarin Chinese and Vietnamese, as well as programmes in English for south-east Asia, the Indian sub-continent and west Europe.

The review identified offsetting savings, including the ending of broadcasts in Japanese and Malay. In both countries, audiences for these services are small and there are many other sources of news and information from Britain, including the world service in English.

COCOM

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department is party to the discussions between the United States Government and central European Governments on relaxations in the COCOM rules.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following an agreement reached at the COCOM high-level meeting on 6 and 7 June, we and other COCOM member Governments will be discussing with certain eastern and central European countries a more favourable application of the COCOM rules. These discussions will build upon earlier soundings carried out by the United States and other COCOM partners.

Israel

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Israel following the gas grenade attack on the United Nations health centre in Gaza city on 12 June; what information he has as to the number and ages of the casualties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We condemn any use of excessive force by the Israeli Defence Force.

HEALTH

Dental Hygienists

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on regrading for dental hygienists in the national health service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The pay and grading of dental hygienists are matters for negotiation in the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council. The management side of the council recently carried out a review of all dental auxiliary grades in order to inform this year's negotiations on pay. I understand that negotiations on the staff side's claim are expected to begin shortly.

Hospital Beds

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of hospital beds available in each of the past five years within the constituency of Norfolk, North-West.

Mr. Dorrell: Information about hospital beds is collected centrally by district health authority, and is not available for individual parliamentary constituencies. The figures for West Norfolk and Wisbech health authority are given in the table.

Average daily available beds, and in-patient cases treated, West Norfolk and Wisbech district health authority, 1984 to 1988-89

Year	Available beds	In-patient cases treated	In-patient cases treated per available bed
1984	841	19,703	23·4
1985	847	20,445	24·1
1986	838	20,382	24·3
1987-88	871	21,949	25·2
1988-89	876	22,462	25·6

Social Workers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of cases prescribed by statute as requiring the attention of social workers which are not currently receiving appropriate attention.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when sections 1 and 2 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 will be implemented.

Mr. Dorrell: No decisions on the implementation of these sections can be taken until we have established their resource and service implications. We are consulting the local authority associations on these issues and are currently awaiting their preliminary assessments as a basis for discussion.

Medical and Dental Education

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the second report of the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The report is published today, and is available in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and I are sending copies of the second report to all interested parties under cover of a message which reads as follows:

The report from the Steering Group on Undergraduate Medical and Dental Education has been prepared in response to the remit which our predecessors gave the Group to consider how the current arrangements for undergraduate medical (and subsequently dental) education can be improved to ensure that the policies and programmes of the bodies concerned are properly co-ordinated and directed. The Group was later invited to assess the implications for these matters of the proposed NHS reforms, and to make recommendations. The present report subsumes the Interim Report which was published in June 1989.

We welcome, and endorse, this new report. We are grateful to the members of the Steering Group, and to the organisations which have been associated with it, for working effectively together to support the common purpose of the NHS and the universities in maintaining and improving standards of undergraduate medical and dental education.

The organisational and financial arrangements must encourage those responsible in both the universities and the NHS to work together to teach students, advance knowledge through research and provide and develop services for patients. These three functions are integral, something as true in the reformed NHS as it is today. That is why the Steering Group has emphasised the essential common purpose of the universities and the NHS in the fostering of medical knowledge and skills, an emphasis which we support. The ten key principles proposed by the Steering Group to underpin jointly agreed working arrangements have already been promulgated with our endorsement. The sense of common purpose will be strengthened by the new provision in the NHS and Community Care Bill regarding university membership of those health authorities and NHS Trusts having significant involvement in medical and dental education.

The Steering Group has given close attention to certain details of finance and management. It has proposed revised procedures for the distribution of the Service Increment For Teaching (SIFT) which again have been promulgated, and are being implemented, with our support. It has made proposals for handling the relationship known as "knock for knock", emphasising the importance of changing only by agreement the balance of expenditure between co-operating institutions. It has also suggested that the flexibility essential to the management of the job plans of clinical academics who are honorary consultants in the NHS might be achieved through a tightly defined package of clinical service commitments, to be delivered by university staff under the management of heads of clinical academic departments in consultation with NHS managers. We endorse these proposals, which encourage an agreed approach to the management of those areas in which the universities and the NHS must engage together in responsibilities which neither can discharge alone.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people on family credit or income support received free eye tests in England (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics prior to 1 April 1989 were not broken down by patient group. Since then, family practitioner committees have collected data on sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services on a six-montly basis. A tota of 530,660 national health service sight tests for adults receiving income support for family credit were paid for in England during the period 1 April to 30 September 1989. This figure is based on a 2 per cent. sample of NHS sight test application forms processed by family practitioner committees. It does not take into account sight tests paid for after 1 April but conducted before that period.

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what method statistics relating to the collection of information on the number of (i) national health service eye tests and (ii) non-national health service eye tests have been collected.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on NHS sight tests is collected from family practitioner committees. The data are obtained from a count of the forms signed by patients at the time of their sight test and forwarded by the optician to the family practitioner committee for payment. Routine statistics on non-NHS sight tests are not collected. The NOP survey, the results of which were made available to the House on 6 June, was commissioned by the Department to provide an independent measure of total volume during the first quarter of 1990.

Allergies

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will consider appointing to the Committee on Safety of Medicines a consultant specialising in allergic diseases, such as hay fever and asthma.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Appointments and reappointments to the Committee on Safety of Medicines and its sub-committees were made as from 1 January 1990: members include specialists in allergic diseases. Additional experts in this or other fields may be consulted or appointed as temporary members as necessary.

Nursing Homes

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from local authorities on the provision of nursing home care; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ministers and officials have frequent meetings with representatives of local authorities at which this and other aspects of community care are discussed.

Community Care

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultation has taken place with local authority organisations on the additional staff required to carry out the necessary assessment for the provision of community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not aware of any specific consultations with local authority organisations on this matter although there have been frequent discussions with local authority associations on the implementation of the proposals in the White Paper "Caring for People". It is for individual local authorities to determine their own staffing needs.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to how many extra social workers and support staff are being appointed; what training provisions have been made to implement the proposed community care programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the number of appointments of social workers and support staff is not collected centrally. The White Paper "Caring for People" recognises that its proposals have implications for the training of staff involved in community care. The social services inspectorate has established a community care training strategy group to identify and address these needs. We have increased this year's training support programme to £19·4 million in grant to local authorities, £2 million of which is targeted towards the training of management staff in social services departments.

GPs, Manchester

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the general practitioner practices in Manchester which have indicated that they wish to become fund-holders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Stepping Hill Hospital, Stockport

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were operational at Stepping Hill hospital, Stockport on (a) 1 June 1979 and (b) June 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of available beds at Stepping Hill hospital, Stockport on 21 June 1979 and 1 June 1989 was 589 and 791 respectively.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) trained and (b) untrained nursing staff were employed at Stepping Hill hospital, Stockport on 1 June 1979 and 1 June 1989.

Mr. Dorrell: The number of trained and untrained nursing staff at Stepping Hill hospital, Stockport on 1 June 1989 was 432 and 116 respectively. Comparable figures for 1 June 1979 are not available centrally.

Water Pollution, Camelford

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to establish whether children in the Camelford area have suffered any intellectual impairment as a result of the water pollution incident there on 6 July 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The report of the Lowermoor incident health advisory group, which was published in July 1989, a copy of which is available in the Library, concluded that no long-term effects on the health of people in the Camelford area were expected. It is for the district health authority to take any further measures it thinks necessary for the health of the population.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance services have expressed an interest in becoming self-governing trusts; and if he will list them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Five ambulance services have expressed interest in NHS trust status including two which are incorporated in other units. The units are:

Northumbrian Ambulance Service
Lincolnshire Ambulance Service
Norfolk Ambulances
Cornwall Community Services
Swindon Health Authority—All District Services

Income Generation

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the income generated from a contract under the National Health Service and Community Care Bill by a district health authority-managed hospital will be credited specifically to that hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes.

Departmental Savings

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanisms exist in his Department for identifying and tracking value-for-money savings in its operations.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The Government's policy is to secure significant improvements in value for money within the NHS through the reforms contained in the NHS and Community Care Bill. The NHS management executive has also established a value for money unit to stimulate—in collaboration with local NHS management—opportunities for improving value for money within the NHS.

The Department has various mechanisms for improving value for money within its own operations. The departmental accounting system, the public expenditure survey and the Department's management plan all place heavy emphasis on value for money and are supplemented by other mechanisms such as internal audit, staff inspection and consultancy.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the value-for-money savings in his Department's operations identified by internal audit and internal efficiency arrangements, and by external audit and by management consultants retained by his Department between 1983-84 and 1988-89; and what is the amount of those savings fulfilled to date.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 June 1990]: I refer to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security on 12 June 1990 at column 166.

Storm Damage

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of total cost of storm damage to health authority property in England and Wales since 1987; and what consideration he is giving to enabling health authorities to insure against future risks of this sort.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 15 June 1990]: No central estimate has been made. NHS property is not covered by commercial insurance and authorities are expected to make provision within their allocations to meet such contingencies. While there are no plans to alter the current policy on commercial insurance, we are seeking powers in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill which would enable us to establish a scheme for meeting the losses and liabilities to health authorities and NHS trusts. However, no decision has yet been taken on when such a scheme would be implemented.

PRIME MINISTER

Economic Policy

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken since 26 October 1989 to improve co-ordination at ministerial level in the formulation and implementation of economic policy.

The Prime Minister: Economic policy is co-ordinated in the usual way at ministerial level with meetings between Ministers, including discussion at Cabinet.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken since 27 October 1989 to ensure the confidentiality of official information relating to the conduct of the Government's economic policies.

The Prime Minister: The normal rules of confidentiality for official information apply to information relating to the conduct of the Government's economic policies.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken since 26 October 1989 to remove obstacles to the efficiency of communication within Government in respect of developments in economic policy.

The Prime Minister: I am entirely satisfied with the degree of consultation and communication between Ministers on matters of economic policy.

Hospitality

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the cost of hospitality given at No. 10 Downing street since 31 March to visitors other than representatives of overseas governments and representatives of official bodies from within the United Kingdom; and if she will list each such visitor and the identifiable costs of associated hospitality.

The Prime Minister: This information is not available in the form requested.

USSR

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister when she hopes to complete her consideration of what role Britain might best play in the ecological research centre the Soviet Union is proposing to establish at Lake Baikal.

The Prime Minister: We are in close consultation on this with interested scientific bodies. We will also be pursuing contacts with the appropriate Soviet authorities in the near future.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister in what capacity, in what role and at whose expense the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster accompanied her on her visit to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and what duties he performed.

The Prime Minister: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster accompanied me for part of my visit to the Soviet Union, and did so as a member of Her Majesty's Government. The principal reason for my right hon. Friend's visit was to attend the opening of the Lord Byron school in Armenia, a gift from the British people following the Armenian earthquake tragedy of December 1988. My right hon. Friend was Secretary of State for Education and Science when the offer to build the school was made. The idea was his.

There was no cost to the taxpayer for my right hon. Friend's visit.

Economic Advisers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her (a) paid and (b) unpaid economic advisers.

The Prime Minister: The provision of economic advice is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and other ministerial colleagues and their staff. In addition, members of my policy unit also provide economic advice. There is no shortage of unpaid economic advice which comes from a wide variety of sources.

Soviet Studies

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her statement of 12 June, Official Report, column 138, concerning the establishment of new lectureships in Soviet studies at British universities, whether any of the lectureships will be established in Bradford university; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The British Council will be given funds for the financial years 1991-92 to 1993-94 inclusive to enable it to contribute to the cost of additional lectureships in Soviet and east European studies in this three-year period. The aim is to establish 10 posts, the costs to be shared with the universities, polytechnics and other sources including the private sector. A committee of leading academics will be set up by the British Council to help decide how the funds should be used.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Contributions

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to ensure that information is provided by his Department when someone returns to employment as to their entitlement to make up full contributions for any missing time.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department writes automatically to relevant groups of contributors following the end of any year in which their contribution record is insufficient to count towards basic retirement pension. Full information is always provided to contributors on request. No change to these arrangements is proposed.

Political Asylum

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to rename income support refugee support in cases where it is awarded to non-British nationals claiming political asylum in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to make such a change.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will raise the level of funding for the independent living fund to £20 million per year.

Mr. Scott: Provision for the fund in the current year was already set at £24 million. Following my announcement to the House on 3 April, a further £8 million is to be made available bringing the provision for the fund to £32 million in 1990-91.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement as to the reasons for the subtraction of the state earnings-related pension scheme from the entitlement of persons in receipt of invalidity benefit when they reach 65 years of age.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Where an invalidity pensioner who reaches pension age—65 for men, 60 for women—chooses not to retire, the amount of invalidity benefit payable is determined by the amount of retirement pension that would have been payable had he retired.

The earnings-related additional pension—AP—element of retirement pension can be paid either by the state or through an occupational pension scheme, which is contracted-out of the state scheme. Persons in contracted-out schemes and their employers pay a lower national insurance contribution and in return the employer is required to provide a guaranteed minimum pension—GMP—to the employee from age 65—or 60. Up to pension age, AP is paid with invalidity benefit, but thereafter the amount of any AP payable is reduced by the amount of the GMP received from the employer. This ensures that people contracted out of the state scheme are not treated more favourably than those who are not.

Income Support

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many refugees from overseas are currently in receipt of income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: People from other countries who have been granted a right of abode in the United Kingdom are not separately identifiable for income support purposes. People arrived in the United Kingdom whose applications for refugee status are under consideration are eligible for income support at a reduced rate. We estimate that there are approximately some 8,000 such claimants at present.

Wath upon Dearne Local Office

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what moneys were provided as grant allowances, pensions or loans through the Wath upon Dearne office of his Department in 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: Information regarding the numbers of and amounts paid as community care grants and budgeting loans for each local office is placed in the Library. I regret that neither information about the numbers of, nor the amount paid to, pensioners residing in a particular locality is recorded.

Private Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances his Department contributes towards the costs of the care of a person in an unregistered private home.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Some independent residential care homes are not required to be registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984. Adjudication officers may decide to treat claimants for income support purposes in such homes in the same way as those in registered homes if the accommodation has fewer than four residents and provides board and personal care and satisfies certain conditions defined by regulation, or is run by the Abbeyfield Society, or is managed or provided by a body set up by Act of Parliament or incorporated by royal charter, or in Scotland is run by a housing association registered with the Housing Corporation.

Attendance and Mobility Allowance

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many doctors are employed by his Department for the purpose of assessing attendance allowance and mobility allowance claims in each region; on what basis they are employed; what salaries or fees they receive; and whether such payments are affected by the number of claimants they see.

Mr. Scott: On average there are between 600 and 700 doctors in each region who carry out examinations in connection with attendance allowance and mobility allowance claims. The work is of a casual nature, the available cases being allocated among the doctors who are available and have been trained in the work. Payment is from a scale of fees agreed between the Treasury and the medical profession's representatives. A fee is paid for each case completed, individual case fees depending on the time taken to deal with that case.

National Insurance

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the fraudulent use of national insurance numbers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department makes every effort to ensure that members of the public have correctly issued national insurance numbers and that others cannot use them to make fraudulent claims to benefit.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the last available year the number of (a) national insurance numbers used by more than one person and (b) credits made by employers to false or non-existent national insurance numbers.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information regarding the misuse of NI numbers is not available. Employers cannot credit NI accounts. Contributions paid by employers on behalf of themselves and their employees are subject to strict accounting controls.

Community Charge

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Lambeth are entitled to community charge rebate based on claims for refund of rebate received from Lambeth council; what percentage of charge payers this represents; and what was the percentage of ratepayers who received housing benefit for rates in 1989-90.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information in the detail requested for community charge benefit is not yet available from the local authority. However, approximately a quarter of domestic ratepayers received rate rebates in 1989-90.

Leaflet Shortage

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department is taking to rectify the shortage of leaflets and benefit application forms in offices; and how widespread and severe this problem is.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We are aware that difficulties have been experienced this year in obtaining bulk supplies of some benefit application forms. The Department has been in discussion with HMSO to remedy this. However, we are satisfied on information available that local offices in all areas have sufficient supplies of benefit application forms and leaflets to meet the needs of our customers.

Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the questions of the hon. Member for Oldham, West of 23 April and 17 May relating to further information pursuant to an answer of 4 April, and to the question of the hon. Member for Oldham, West of 17 May concerning the estimated income rises of the poorest tenth of the population.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to him today and on Thursday 14 June.

Pensioners' Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if, further to his reply of 4 April, Official Report, columns 689-90, he will (a) provide a breakdown of tables 1 and 2 differentiating SERPS as a separate source of income, (b) indicate what is covered in table 2 by related benefits and other benefits, (c) state the average annual percentage increase implied in the last two columns of tables 1, 2 and 3 and (d) provide whatever similar information is available for 1988-89;

(2) if he will set out the actual incomes in pounds sterling and pence which underlie his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 4 April, Official Report, columns 689-90, table 2, which lists the percentage increase in components of pensioners' income from 1974 to 1979 and 1979 to 1987; what is the source of each of these items of data; and if he will list exactly which benefits are covered by RP and related benefits and other benefits;

(3) what are the actual income levels on which table 2 is based in his answer on 4 April, Official Report, columns 689-90, regarding the percentage increase in the components of pensioners' incomes in 1974, 1979 and 1987.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answers 23 April and 6 June 1990]: The source for the figures used in this and the previous reply is the family expenditure survey. The information on SERPS is not available; it is not separately identified from state retirement pension in the source data. Information is not available beyond the latest available family expenditure survey data of 1987.

The term "RP and related benefits" in table 2 refers to the state retirement pension, supplementary benefit and housing benefit. The term "Other benefits" refers to all other social security benefits than those listed above.

The annual average percentages implied in the last two columns of table 1 of the reply given to the hon. Member on 4 April, Official Report, columns 689-90, are set out in table 1; the same figures in respect of tables 2 and 3 are set out in table 2.

The figures requested, which underlie the percentage movements at table 2, are set out in tables 3, 4 and 5.

Table 1
Pensioners' Incomes: 1974, 1979 and 1987—Percentage Increase and Average Annual Increase

Note:
All tables source: Family Expenditure Survey.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 4 April, Official Report, columns 687-92, what information is available on the contribution of state earnings-related pension to the real rise in pensioner incomes since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 17 May 1990]: Information is not available in the family expenditure survey on the state earnings-related pension scheme. However, data from the Department's biannual statistical inquiry of retirement pension and widows benefit[1] shows that between 1979 and 1987 the average amount[2] of net additional component in payment rose from £0·65 to £2·71[3].

Figures from the family expenditure survey show that pensioners' average net incomes rose from £75·90 in 1979 to £99·90[3] in 1987.

[2]Average is for those pensioners receiving an additional pension.

NATIONAL FINANCE

International Monetary Fund

70. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent quota increase for the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Ryder: The interim committee of the board of governors of the International Monetary Fund met in Washington DC on 7 to 8 May and agreed that the present total of fund quotas should be increased by 50 per cent. to SDR135 billion. This decision has to be ratified by the board of governors.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is (a) the monthly market value of North sea oil for the purposes of petroleum revenue tax from 1984 onwards and (b) the number of relevant transactions that were used as the base for each month.

Mr. Lilley: There is no single, overall monthly market value of North sea oil for petroleum revenue tax purposes and I cannot disclose the tax position of individual taxpayers. The other information requested could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

Taxation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions the Inland Revenue has used section 772 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The power at present contained in section 772 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 has only once been formally invoked. Companies almost invariably supply the information in response to informal requests.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the level of manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom in 1979 and 1989 on a constant value basis, by regions;

(2) if he will publish a table, using 1979 at a value of 100, of investment in real terms in manufacturing in the north-west for each of the last 11 years.

Mr. Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 16 May, Official Report, column 442. Constant price estimates are not made because there are no regional price indices.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for each year from 1979 to date manufacturing investment, including leased assets, at 1985 and current prices (a) including and (b) excluding company cars as defined for the purposes of taxation by the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of manufacturing investment from 1979 to 1989 are given in the following table:

Manufacturing investment, including leased assets
(£ million)

Year	Current prices	1985 prices
1979	7,154	11,150
1980	7,309	9,911
1981	6,235	7,735
1982	6,521	7,603
1983	6,822	7,516
1984	8,427	8,934
1985	10,265	10,264
1986	9,982	9,654
1987	11,014	10,142
1988	12,652	11,334
1989	13,920	12,043

Estimates excluding company cars are not available.

VAT

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will remove value added tax on repairs and maintenance and impose zero rating; and impose 15 per cent. value added tax on extensions to listed buildings.

Mr. Ryder: No. Our obligations under the EC sixth VAT directive prevent such extensions of zero rating.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost, in each case, of extending business relief for capital gains tax so that (a) there was no age limit, (b) there was a share qualification of 5 per cent. and (c) there was no limit on the amount of the gain.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that appropriate information on which to base reliable estimates is not available.

ENVIRONMENT

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to control or regulate contractors involved in the disposal of chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will introduce a licensing system for such contractors.

Mr. Trippier: Waste chlorofluorocarbons from industry, commerce or households are controlled waste, the disposal of which already requires a licence from a waste disposal authority. Under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989, persons carrying any controlled waste will be obliged to register. The Environmental Protection Bill will also impose a duty of care on any person who produces, carries or disposes of controlled waste.

Waste into Energy

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of industrial and municipal refuse is currently converted into useful energy by combustion in the United Kingdom, each of the EEC and Scandinavian countries.

Mr. Trippier: The World Health Organisation has made the following estimates of percentages by weight:

Country
United Kingdom	3
Belgium	7
Denmark	30
France	25
Italy	4
Netherlands	30
Spain	4
W. Germany	30
Norway	15
Sweden	40

The United Kingdom's low proportion is partly explained by the ready availability of landfill.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the reduction in greenhouse gas release he expects from combustion of waste into energy projects, as a contribution to the Government's declared target by 2005.

Mr. Trippier: Power generation by waste incineration or the combustion of methane from landfill sites results in no net addition of CO_2 to the environment. Indeed, in replacing power generated by fossil fuel burning, it may actually help to reduce overall greenhouse gas emissions.

Estimates of the contribution of such technologies to reduction in greenhouse gas release are under development. Overall Government strategy to stabilise CO_2 emissions at 1990 levels by 2005 will be presented in the environment White Paper to be published in the autumn.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the incineration plants currently operational in the United Kingdom, identifying those that convert waste into useful heat or electricity; how much such energy is produced: and which incinerators currently meet the agreed proposed EEC pollution standards.

Mr. Trippier: There are 35 incinerators, as follows:

Location	Energy produced (megawatts)
Alloa	—
Altrincham	—
Basingstoke	—
Belfast	—
Bolton	—
Bristol	—
Coventry	40
Derby	—
Dudley	—
Dundee	—
Edmonton, north London	40
Exeter	—
Havant	—
Huddersfield	—
Jersey	3
Lichfield	—
Mansfield	—
Marchwood, Fawley, Hants	—
Nottingham	28
Portsmouth	—
Renfrew	—
Rochdale	—
Scillies	—
Sheffield	24
South Shields	—
Stoke on Trent	—
Sunderland	—
Swindon	—
Teesside	—
Tynemouth	—
Tysley, Birmingham	—
Winchester	—
Wolverhampton	—
Upton-upon-Severn, Worcestershire	—
York	—

None yet meets the standards which will be required in 1996.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the increased proportion of waste he expects will be combusted into useful energy, as a result of the Environmental Protection Bill; and if he will seek to amend the Bill in order to provide stronger incentives or regulation, to achieve the potential.

Mr. Trippier: The waste disposal provisions in the Bill, aimed at improving standards, will undoubtedly have the effect of increasing landfill costs, thus improving the competitiveness of incineration as a disposal option. In tandem with this, the Bill also requires the waste disposal authority, when framing the terms of disposal contracts, to have regard to the desirability of including conditions designed to maximise the recycling of waste under the contract. These measures should have the effect of encouraging energy-from-waste schemes. The Government have no intention of further amending the Bill in the way my hon. Friend suggests.

Questions

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many written and oral questions on pollution and the protection of the environment by the hon. Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) he has answered in the current year.

Mr. Trippier: In this Session the Department has replied to five questions from my hon. Friend on environmental matters.

Greenhouse Effect

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to introduce any United Kingdom legislation in addition to Community regulation 3322/88 relating to chlorofluorocarbons and halons in order to achieve the agreed target for reductions in chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Trippier: Community regulation 3322/88 on chlorofluorocarbons and halons is due to be replaced by the end of the year, to reflect the changes which we expect to be made to the Montreal protocol at the end of the month. Any more stringent action which member states consider can be implemented within the Community.

Common Land

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet made a decision regarding the Government's intention to legislate to protect common land.

Mr. Trippier: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 12 June, Official Report, column 157.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sites of special scientific interest have been established since 1981 and are protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Trippier: I am advised by the NCC that by 30 April 1990 it had notified 5,283 sites under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. This included 3,329 sites which had previously been notified under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 and have now been renotified.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he received (a) from ballots, (b) from opinion surveys made available to him and (c) otherwise, in respect of tenant attitudes towards the proposed designation of housing action trusts in (i) Tower Hamlets, (ii) Lambeth, (iii) Southwark, (iv) Sandwell, (v) Leeds and (vi) Sunderland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In Sunderland, the Electoral Reform Society conducted a ballot on the proposal to designate a housing action trust. In Leeds, Leeds polytechnic ran a ballot for the tenants on the issue of continuing the discussions about the HAT proposal. I am also aware of a MORI poll in Lambeth. In addition, the Department has used consultants, chairmen designate and meetings between Ministers and tenants' representatives to inform themselves of tenants' views.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a statement on his intentions in respect of the housing action trust proposed in Southwark; and what measures he proposes to take in respect of housing within the areas previously considered for housing action trusts in (a) Tower Hamlets, (b) Lambeth, (c) Leeds, (d) Sunderland and (e) Sandwell.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Consultations are continuing with tenants and Southwark council with the intention of proceeding to a ballot later this year. Tenants can then decide whether they want the improvements that a HAT would bring. In the other areas local authorities will doubtless be preparing plans for dealing with their housing problems.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by his Department (a) on consultants' fees and expenses and (b) otherwise, on the proposed housing action trusts in (i) Tower Hamlets, (ii) Lambeth, (iii) Southwark, (iv) Sandwell, (v) Leeds and (vi) Sunderland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Expenditure on those six housing action trust proposals is shown in the following table:

	(a) expenditure related to consultancies	(b) expenditure related to the Department's information material and to ballots
	£000	£000
Tower Hamlets	182	3
Lambeth	182	12
Southwark	933	12
Sandwell	191	17
Leeds	161	13
Sunderland	613	23

Diesel Pollution, Firle

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the Water Supply and Sewerage Services (Customer Service Standards) Regulations 1989 (No. 1159) following the recent diesel pollution incident in Firle.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Secretary of State may amend the regulations only on application from the Director General of Water Services. I understand that the director is considering whether to propose any amendments in the light of the circumstances of the Firle case.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the public inquiry resulting from the site investigations undertaken by Nirex include full consideration of national policy on radioactive waste management.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions have yet to be taken as to the matters to be considered at the public inquiry into Nirex's planned respository for low and intermediate-level radioactive waste. Before the inquiry begins, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will set out the matters which appear to him to be relevant to his consideration of the application based on the information available to him at the time. The inspector appointed to preside over the inquiry will also have discretion to consider any other factors which he feels to be relevant.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require Nirex to implement the recommendations made by the panel on the evaluation of the UK Nirex Ltd. programmes on deep repository post-closure safety research and development and site assessment that met in June 1989.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy gave the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 21 May 1990, Official Report, column 11.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to consider (a) alternative methods of radioactive waste management, and (b) alternative sites, as part of the environmental impact assessment of the proposed Nirex repository.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for UK Nirex Ltd. The requirements for an environmental assessment with which Nirex will need to comply are set out in the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988.

Architects

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when proposals were adopted in the EEC to enable qualified architects to operate in professional practice in other member states, if he has any record of the number of Community nationals who have been accepted to practise in the United Kingdom under these arrangements; and if he has figures on the numbers of United Kingdom architects who have been provided with the opportunity to practise in each of the other member states.

Mr. Tripier: The architects directive was adopted on 10 June 1985. Since that date 230 Community nationals have been registered by the Architects Registration Council of the United Kingdom as qualified to practise under the title architect in the United Kingdom. No figure is currently available for the number of United Kingdom architects registered to practise elsewhere in the European Community.

Energy Use (Government Buildings)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, pursuant to the answer of 6 June, Official Report, columns 648-49, he will list the information collected by the Property Services Agency for its own energy management purposes concerning the use of energy in Government buildings;

(2) if he will list the information which was collected by the Property Services Agency about the use of energy in Government buildings in the period up to 30 March.

Mr. Chope: The information collected by the PSA for its own energy management is the monthly consumption and cost of all fuels and water used in buildings in the United Kingdom where PSA is the major occupier.

Similar information was maintained for the great majority of buildings on the Government civil estate, for which the PSA used to pay the bills. The MOD has always paid its own bills. With the untying of Departments from the PSA, Departments pay their own bills and the PSA no longer has access to this information.

Norman Shaw North (Heating)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington (Sir D. Smith) of 17 May, Official Report, column 513, if he will improve the sensitivity and responsiveness of the central heating system to external temperatures.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 June 1990]: Work to modernise the system in the Palace of Westminster will continue during the summer recess.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the ratio of payment from central funds to the personal community charge in each local authority in England.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The available information for 1990-91 is given in the table. The ratio of central funds to community charge income has been calculated for individual local authority areas since some payments from central funds are made to charging authorities on behalf of both charging and precepting authorities in the area. Complete information for all authority areas will not be available until all authorities' budget returns for 1990-91 have been made to my Department.

Ratio of Payments from central funds to community charge income

Area	Central funds[1]	Community charge income[2]	Central funds plus community charge income
Buckinghamshire	63	37	100
Cleveland	76	24	100
Derbyshire	67	33	100
Devon	70	30	100
Durham	75	25	100
Gloucestershire	64	36	100
Isle of Wight	67	33	100
Kent	70	30	100

Northamptonshire	70	30	100
Suffolk	65	35	100
West Sussex	64	36	100
Wiltshire	69	31	100

Notes:

[1] Payment from central funds comprise Revenue Support Grant including safety net adjustments, special grants, amounts distributed from the NNDR pool and specific and supplementary grants both inside and outside AEF. Community charge benefit and transitional relief payments are included.

[2] Community charge income net of community charge benefit and transitional relief grant.

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of loft insulation jobs completed so far this year and completed in the equivalent periods of 1987, 1988 and 1989; and what were the full-year figures for 1987, 1988 and 1989 for each region and England as a whole.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The information is not available.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of loft insulation jobs completed so far in the current year and completed in the equivalent periods of 1987, 1988 and 1989 for (a) the London borough of Camden and (b) the London borough of Islington; and what were the full-year figures for 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The information is not available.

Homelessness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give an estimate of the current number of homeless in the United Kingdom, and of those how many suffer from (a) alcoholism or drug dependency, (b) AIDS and (c) mental illness.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 15 June 1990]: Latest estimates of households accepted as homeless in England appear in table 1(a) of "Local authorities' action under the homeless provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the fourth quarter 1989. Supplementary Tables", which is in the Library.

My Department has no estimates of how many of those accepted were suffering from alcoholism, drug dependency or AIDS. Estimates, in percentage terms, of those who were accepted because of mental illness appear in table 3 of the same publication.

For information about Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Housing Associations

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the total number of properties being renovated or built by housing associations in the last five financial years.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 June 1990]: The figures for housebuilding starts and completions and dwellings renovated by housing associations in England are as follows:

Thousands

	New dwellings
	Starts	Completions	Completed renovations[1]
1985-86	10·3	10·8	11·5
1986-87	10·4	9·9	13·6
1987-88	9·6	10·4	11·7
1988-89	10·7	9·0	10·9
1989-90[2]	10·9	9·0	10·8

[1] Work funded by grants under specific housing association legislation and local authority loans. Includes improvement for sale but excludes hostels.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cattle Crushes

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have taken place about the introduction of financial assistance in respect of the provision of cattle crushes at each agricultural holding in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: While a number of suggestions have been made to the Department of Agriculture about the introduction of assistance for various items including cattle crushes, no formal discussions have taken place.

Suction Dredgers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the fishing operation of suction dredgers in Strangford lough.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Representations have been received from the National Trust and Queen's university, marine biology station, Portaferry about the presence of a suction dredger in Strangford lough. The Department of Agriculture was approached informally by a number of individuals and organisations including representatives of the fishing industry about this vessel.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action will be taken to prevent suction fishing dredgers from operating within inland waters.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I was appalled by reports that a suction dredger may have entered Strangford lough.

I am determined that there will not be fishing in the lough that would be damaging to its ecology.

The people most at risk from fishing which damages the lough are those in the fishing industry. I am glad that the vast majority of trawlermen agree that damaging the lough is wrong.

The responsibilities of the Department of Environment and the Department of Agriculture will be carried out so that all the interests of the lough, both in the short term and in the long term, are protected.

Schools

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the intake enrolments for September, additional places requested and granted, if any, together with the number of pupils in each of grade one, two, three and four selected according to the respective admission criteria of (a) Laurel Hill school, (b) Lisnagarvey high school, (c) St. Patrick's high school, (d) Friends high school, (e) Wallace high school, (f) Forthill high school, (g) Rathmore grammar school, (h) Hunterhouse college and (i) Dunmurry high school.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Directors

71. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to seek to amend the law relating to company directors who open, close and reopen similar companies with great frequency.

Mr. Redwood: No. The Insolvency Act 1986 and the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 contain provisions concerning the conduct of directors.

Consumer Affairs Council

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what items were discussed at the European Community Consumer Affairs Council on 13 June.

Mr. Forth: The following items were discussed: the package travel directive, the proposed general product safety directive, the system for the rapid exchange of information on consumer products, the European home and leisure accident surveillance system, and the Commission's three-year plan for consumer policy in the EC.

Research

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what procedures his Department uses for determining the priorities for investment in scientific and technological research in Europe;

(2) if he will outline his Department's responsibilities, and the procedures used, for allocating funds from this country for national, European and international research projects in science and technology.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department of Trade and Industry's responsibilities include support of firms through longer-term national collaborative research programmes and EUREKA—and for small firms, through the small firms' merit award for research and technology (SMART). The Department of Trade and Industry also plays a key role in the definition of European Community research and development framework programmes, and other international research programmes of interest to United Kingdom industry.

With regard to resource allocation for support of industrial innovation, the Department consults widely with industry, and with research councils and universities on areas of research and technologies which are likely to be most beneficial, both at the national and international level. Hence during the recent negotiations on the framework programme, careful attention was paid to advice from the Advisory Council on Science and Technology and the Confederation of British Industry, and from industry through our own advisory committees. In this way the Department plays an active role in defining the priorities and objectives of the framework programme and in identifying appropriate areas of national expenditure. However, with a maximum of 50 per cent. support from the Department or the European Community, the key decisions are those of the individual firms participating in the programmes.

The Department's policy is to ensure that expenditure is directed towards well-justified programmes of all types which represent good value for money. Framework programmes should have a clear European rationale and be complementary to national programmes and other international activities.

Inward Investment

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of companies which have announced inward investment projects in the United Kingdom over the past 12 months; and which regions have most benefited from the projects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the latest figures readily available to the Invest in Britain Bureau, in the 12 months ending March 1990, 304 inward investment decisions were made to locate in the United Kingdom. These included the establishment of a new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and do not take into account subsequent developments. The table sets out the number of inward investment decisions broken down on a regional basis.

Bar Codes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce regulations to require that shops using bar code equipment to register the price of goods also ensure that the price is printed on the products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I expect to introduce an order later this year under the Prices Act 1974 as amended implementing an EC directive requiring prices to be shown for goods on sale to private consumers. Having considered views expressed during consultations on the proposed order, my present intention is to allow traders the freedom to indicate prices on the goods themselves, on the shelf edge, or on notices, as they choose, provided that the indication is clear and legible.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice his Department is giving retailers on the use of bar codes following the European Commission's directive.

Mr. Forth: I am not aware of any European Commission directive relating to bar coding.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has sought the views of the National Consumer Council and the Consumers Association about the European Commission's directive on bar codes.

Mr. Forth: I am not aware of any such directive.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he proposes to take to ensure that bar code equipment manufactured or supplied in the United Kingdom is accurate in recording the price charged;

(2) what regulations he proposes to introduce to ensure that bar code equipment used in shops is free from errors in recording the price of items purchased.

Mr. Forth: A trader who gives a misleading price indication commits an offence under the Consumer Protection Act 1987. That and competition between suppliers should be sufficient to ensure that suitable equipment is used.

Personal Computers

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many personal computers his Department estimates are sold annually.

Mr. Forth: There is no agreed definition of personal computers, and official statistics are not compiled on a basis which would enable any departmental estimate of the United Kingdom market to be given. The Department is, however, aware of market research estimates for United Kingdom personal computer sales in 1989, ranging from approximately 500,000 to 1,500,000.

Research and Development

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total of the reduction in his Department's expenditure on research and development achieved by taking advantage of the additionality principle when grants have been awarded to United Kingdom companies by the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to identify the specific impact of European Community support of United Kingdom companies under the various Framework programmes, on the applications for support received by the DTI. However, we ensure as far as possible that European programmes reflect the views of United Kingdom industry, and that they are complementary to national programmes and other international activities and continue to provide good value for money. It is up to companies themselves to judge which activities suit their needs best. Manufacturing industry is now receiving support for collaborative research and development from the Community comparable to that from the DTI, and it is likely that this trend will become more pronounced in future.

Rainham Marshes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what requests he has received for financial assistance in respect of the development of Rainham marshes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department has had discussions with the promoters of this major inward investment project, but I have not received any application for specific financial assistance.

Radio

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he intends to take in response to the recommendations of the review committee which examined civil use of the radio spectrum from 470 to 3,400 MHz.

Mr. Forth: The report of the stage 1 civil spectrum review committee, which was published in April last year, has been widely welcomed as making a major contribution towards our commitment to make more efficient use of the radio spectrum and to provide more information regarding current use.

Since receiving the report, I have had the opportunity to consider the findings in detail and assess the comments of industry and users. The report emphasises that frequency planning ought to maintain a long-term perspective and that in many areas, our freedom for action is limited by international treaty obligations. However, within these confines, the committee found that there remained considerable scope for improvements in the way in which the radio spectrum is managed in the frequency range concerned, and I am pleased to announce today that measures will be taken to follow up all the recommendations. A detailed schedule of the steps being taken to implement each of the recommendations has been published and is available from the DTI's radio communications agency.

I should like to take this opportunity to announce that, in consultation with my right hon. and right hon. and learned Friends the Secretaries of State for Defence, the Home Department and Scotland, I have accepted the Committee's recommendation that the next stage of the review process should be a combined assessment of defence and civil use of the radio spectrum from 3,400 MHz to 30 GHz. I am also delighted to announce that Sir Kenneth Corfield, who chaired the first stage review of defence spectrum usage, has accepted the invitation to become chairman of the combined stage 2 review committee.

The stage 1 civil spectrum and defence spectrum review reports have stimulated widespread discussion of the future requirements and options for the key frequency range of 1-3 GHz and I am confident that this new review will likewise reveal fresh challenges for the United Kingdom to ensure that we continue to lead the field in making effective and efficient use of this scarce natural resource at these higher frequencies.

Industrial Development

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions since the Industrial Development Act 1982 came into force expenditure has been incurred under section 3(2)(a) of the Industry Act 1980 on projects which otherwise fully satisfied the criteria of either section 7 or section 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 15 June 1990]: The sum of £547 million was paid to Rover Group plc on 12 August 1988 under section 3(2)(a) of the Industry Act 1980 as the consideration for a special security ("The Instrument") which formed part of the agreement of 14 July 1988 between the Secretary of State, Rover Group plc and British Aerospace. The cash injection included £78 million in respect of projects in the assisted areas which met the standard conditions set out in section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Community Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his reply of 15 May, Official Report, column 375, to the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) (a) which officers from his Department are involved in the joint examination with the Department of Employment into training and enterprise provision for offenders in the community, (b) whether a report will be produced by his Department presenting the findings of the examination and (c) whether he intends to consult relevant outside bodies during the course of the examination.

Mr. John Patten: There is regular contact and discussion between the Home Office, the Training Agency, the employment service and relevant voluntary organisations, in particular the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and the APEX Trust, about training and enterprise provision for offenders in the community.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of administering community service orders in England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available; how many orders were made per 100,000 of the population in that year; and what was the average cost per order.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the expenditure of the probation service is published in "Probation Statistics England and Wales 1988" (table 12·3). In 1987-88, the probation service cost of administering community service orders was approximately £18 million and the average cost per completed order in that year was estimated at approximately £500. Using a mid-year population estimate of 40·3 million people aged 16 years and over, 87 orders were made per 100,000 of the population in 1988.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on contact between members of police forces in Great Britain and the police in the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus; and if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on visits by police force in London to the Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus in the past four weeks.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Members of British police forces maintain operational contacts with the Turkish Cypriot police among many other forces. Officers from the City of London police visited northern Cyprus on 5 June in connection with the recent theft of securities worth £300 million in London.

Probation Service

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation orders have been made by the courts in England and Wales in each of the last five years; how many orders were made per 100,000 of the population in the latest available year; and what was the cost of administering probation orders in that year.

Mr. John Patten: The number of persons given probation per 100,000 of the population aged 17 or over was 106 in 1988. Information on the expenditure of the probation service is published annually in chapter 12 of "Probation Statistics England and Wales". The probation service cost of administering probation orders in 1987-88 is estimated at approximately £50 million.

Romanian Orphans

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Chelmsford of 30 April, Official Report, column 409, what information he has of the average delay for British couples wishing to adopt an orphan from Romania, from first notifying his Department of their intention and obtaining his Department's approval; what action his Department takes in respect of those couples and the child concerned if the procedure is not followed; and if he plans to review the procedure.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Where a child adopted in Romania is to be brought to live in the United Kingdom an application for entry clearance must be made at the British embassy in Bucharest before the child leaves Romania. The entry clearance officer will first obtain information about the child's background and the circumstances of the adoption. The application is then referred to the immigration department of the Home Office which will normally seek advice from the Department of Health on the welfare aspects of the case and the likelihood of a United Kingdom court granting an adoption order before deciding whether to grant the application. The time taken to complete the necessary inquiries depends on the individual circumstances, but in the four recent cases where applications for Romanian children have been referred to the Home Office approval has been given in three weeks or less. Children adopted in Romania who are brought to the United Kingdom without entry clearance are liable to be refused admission and removed to Romania. The immigration officer, however, has discretion to admit them temporarily while further inquiries are made. We are reviewing the procedures for dealing with overseas adoptions to see whether they can be streamlined further while continuing to provide proper protection for the children involved.

Prison Conditions

Mr. Tony Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 421, how many hours on average each week prisoners spend on regime activities.

Mr. Mellor: In 1989-90 each prisoner spent on average 20·87 hours per week on structured regime activities such as work, education, training courses and physical education. The calculation excludes time spent on other out-of-cell activities, for example, exercise, visits and association, of an essentially personal or recreational kind.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the voluntary organisations to which he has given headquarter grants in each of the last three years; what percentage the grant is of each body's total expenditure; and what percentage the Government grant is in relation to the funds received from private sources.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not immediately available centrally for the 400 or so voluntary organisations which the Home Office funds. I will, therefore, write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Kevin Taylor

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester about the action he intends to take subsequent to the Director of Public Prosecutions' letter to him of 19 January about the outcome of the trial of Mr. Kevin Taylor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. These are matters for the chief constable who has asked an independent senior officer from another police force to investigate the issues raised by the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Sunday Trading

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in view of recent cases over Sunday trading when he proposes to bring forward a Bill to align United Kingdom legislation with the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Mellor: Although a European Court judgment last year has presented the courts with questions of interpretation, it did not find United Kingdom legislation to be in breach of the treaty of Rome. Nevertheless, the Government continue to hold the view that the Shops Act 1950 is in need of reform and are prepared to consider any practicable proposal from interested parties if they can reach agreement on a way forward which is likely to command parliamentary support.

Tear Gas

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what regulations and guidelines he issues governing the use of tear gas in cases of civil disorder;

(2) what information he has as to which constabularies hold supplies of tear gas and as to what standing orders govern its use.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: For guidance on the use of CS by the police in situations of serious public disorder I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary to a question from my hon. Friend for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 19 May 1986 at columns 15-16. This explained that revised guidelines on the use of CS and baton rounds to deal with serious public disorder had been issued to all chief officers of police in England and Wales and that they covered the following points:

CS or baton rounds are to be used only with the express authority of the chief officer of police (or in his absence his deputy) under the direction and control of a designated senior officer, and by police officers who have been trained in the use of the equipment and know its characteristics.

CS or baton rounds are to be used only as a last resort where conventional methods of policing have been tried and failed, or must from the nature of the circumstances be unlikely to succeed if tried; and where there is risk of loss of life, or serious injury (or widespread destruction of property such that there is, or is judged to be, a sufficiently serious risk of loss of life or serious injury to justify the use of baton rounds or CS); and where the use of CS and baton rounds is judged as necessary because it is likely to reduce the risk. An oral warning is to be given to the crowd to disperse before CS or baton rounds are used. Once the use of baton rounds has begun the need to continue use is to be assessed continuously. Particular caution is to be taken over the use of baton rounds for offensive purposes.

If a chief officer is not present at the scene, he must be satisfied from reports that the criteria for use set out above have been met. In such circumstances, before the chief officer's authority for use is put into effect, a designated senior officer should satisfy himself at the scene that the criteria are met.

After each operational firing of baton rounds, a report on the circumstances of the incident in which they were fired is to be made to the Home Secretary.

Only CS equipment and baton rounds and launchers of a type authorised by the Home Office are to be used for these purposes.

Nothing in the guidelines affects the principle, to which section 3 of the Criminal Law Act 1967 gives effect, that only such force as is reasonable in the circumstances must be used. The degree of force justified will vary according to the circumstances of each case.

These guidelines remain in force.

I understand that the following police forces in England and Wales hold CS for public order purposes:

Avon and Somerset
Bedfordshire
City of London
Cleveland
Derbyshire
Durham
Dyfed-Powys
Essex
Greater Manchester
Gwent
Hertfordshire
Humberside
Kent
Lancashire
Leicestershire
Merseyside

Energy Costs

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 April, Official Report, columns 399-402, if he will give for each of the 21 buildings, for the 21 buildings all together, and for his Department as a whole, the spending on (a) electricity, (b) gas, (c) solid fuel and (d) oil in the latest available year.

Mr. Waddington: For expenditure in each of the 21 buildings I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 10 May at columns 197-98. The total spent in these buildings in 1989-90 was as follows:

Gas	155,147
Electricity	1,169,570
Oil	231,490
Solid fuel	186,098

As I said in my reply to the hon. Gentleman's question on 30 April at columns 399-402, the information requested for the Department as a whole is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will abolish the use of the primary purpose rule in considering applications for entry clearance to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. We believe that the primary purpose rule continues to be necessary.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants over 18 years, supporting their applications with positive DNA results, have (a) been granted entry clearance to the United Kingdom and (b) been refused entry clearance since June 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since June 1989, when my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary announced the circumstances in which we would be prepared to waive the normal requirements of the Immigration Rules and admit reapplicants aged over 18 who could now establish their relationship by means of DNA evidence, entry clearance has been authorised in 34 such cases and refused in 76.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet a deputation from Bangladesh Porishad, at Bradford, accompanied by hon. Members from Bradford, to discuss the matters contained in a letter to him from Bangladesh Porishad, dated 11 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The president of Bangladesh Porishad accompanied the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) and the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) to discuss immigration issues with my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) in June 1989. Bangladesh Porishad has been offered a further meeting with officials.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for all individual cases of entry clearance refusal submitted by Bangladesh Porishad in its letter to him of 11 June to be urgently considered.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Those cases where an entry clearance application is outstanding will be considered and decided as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what charges will be made to Hong Kong residents seeking to take advantage of the provisions in section 1 of the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Bill; and if he intends to give guidance to the Governor on what his powers to fix charges will be.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The level of fees would be a matter for the Governor. Detailed work on the administration costs has yet to be completed, but on the basis of a preliminary estimate, the Hong Kong Government expect that the fees would not differ substantially from those currently prescribed in regulations under the British Nationality Act 1981—that is, £10 for application and £50 for registration.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the entitlement to United Kingdom benefits of Portuguese nationals from Macau coming to the United Kingdom after 1 January 1993.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

Portuguese nationals from Macau coming to the United Kingdom after 1 January 1993 will have the same social security benefit rights, and be subject to the same eligibility conditions, as other EC nationals coming to the United Kingdom taking account, where appropriate, of regulation (EEC) No. 1408/71—co-ordination of EC member states' social security schemes for migrant workers and their families moving within the EC.

ENERGY

Waste into Energy

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the waste combustion into energy proposals submitted to date for the initial renewable energy tranche and their proposed output.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The details of individual proposals submitted for inclusion within the non-fossil fuel obligation are commercially confidential.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the increase in the proportion of waste likely to be converted into useful energy by combustion as a result of proposals being submitted for consideration under the renewable energy tranche.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This information will not be available until the number of waste projects to be contracted within the non-fossil fuel obligation has been established.

Offshore Installations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list his sources of independent expert advice on the design and removal of oil and gas rigs and their related undersea installations.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Secretary of State has appointed six certifying authorities to carry out independent assessments of both the design and method of construction of offshore installations before certificates of fitness are issued. No installation can be operated on the United Kingdom continental shelf without a certificate of fitness.

An abandonment programme for the removal of an offshore installation on the United Kingdom continental shelf requires the approval of the Secretary of State under the Petroleum Act 1987. Those required to submit an abandonment programme will be asked to include independent advice from a certifying authority as to the safety and feasibility of the programme to assist the Secretary of State in his assessment of the programme.

The six certifying authorities are:

Lloyd's Register of Shipping
Det Norske Veritas
Bureau Veritas
American Bureau of Shipping
Germanischer Lloyd
Offshore Certification Bureau.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his funding plans for research into wave power for the financial years 1990-91 to 1992-93.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Provision for wave energy research is currently £200,000 per year. Future funding will depend on the results of the review of wave energy being carried out by the Department and on the progress of the Department's wave energy project on the island of Islay in Scotland.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to increase the cap on the premium price for renewables entering the non-fossil fuel obligation from 6p per unit per kilowatt hour, to 8p per unit.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The terms on which projects are contracted within the non-fossil fuel obligation (NFFO), including the level and timing of payments, are a matter for the public electricity suppliers (PES). However, I am confident that the legislation provides the public electricity suppliers with a fair degree of flexibility which will allow a significant number of renewables projects to be included within the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he proposes to take to protect the development of renewable energy sources after the removal of the fossil fuel levy after 1998; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government do not expect to take a view on the future of the non-fossil fuel obligation beyond 1998 until the time of the nuclear review in 1994. The strategy for research and development into renewable energy was published as Department of Energy paper No. 55.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made an assessment of the implication for the viability of renewable energy development of the European Community decision to limit the future of the fossil fuel levy to eight years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 18 April to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) at column 853.

Bradwell Power Station

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what steps are being taken to prevent a recurrence of the incident that took place at Bradwell nuclear power station on 30 March or any of the other Magnox stations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the quantity of carbon dioxide released during the incident at Bradwell nuclear power station on 30 March; to what extent this gas was radioactively contaminated; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what was the source of the carbon dioxide that was released during the incident at Bradwell nuclear power station on 30 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The quantity of carbon dioxide which was released from the leak in the reactor's gas circuit was estimated to be no more than 250 kg and was well within operating limits. No radioactive contamination was detected as a result of the incident.

The source of the leak was traced to an incorrectly set valve in the gas circuit blowdown room, which is a closed area containing equipment for reducing reactor pressure. The leak was isolated and the carbon dioxide was cleared from the area.

Nuclear Electric has taken corrective action to prevent a recurrence by tightening control procedures. The investigation into the incident is almost complete and the results will be made known to the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Hinkley Point C

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive the inspector's report on the public inquiry into the Hinkley Point C proposed pressurised water reactor nuclear power station.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 14 June 1990 at column 287.

Hawkshurst Moor (Coal Mine)

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any responsibility in relation to the planning inquiry on the proposal for a new coal mine at Hawkshurst moor in Berkswell near Coventry.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now set a maximum operational life for the Magnox reactors.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the operators, subject to the safety requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

DEFENCE

Cruise Missiles

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on any negotiations he has entered into with regard to the future control of cruise missiles on board United States warships and submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have entered into no such negotiations.

Trident

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the study ordered by the United States Energy Secretary, Mr. James D. Walters, on the cost and feasibility of redesigning the Trident W88 warhead in order to enhance its safety; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Alan Clark: The study which the United States Energy Secretary, James D. Watkins, has ordered is an internal matter for the United States.

Polaris

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the British Polaris nuclear warheads use insensitive high explosives.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish on 14 June, Official Report, column 325.

Nuclear Warheads (Transport)

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the recently published report by Large and Associates on the safety and risks involved in the transport of nuclear warheads in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I understand that the report was commissioned by the national steering committee of "nuclear free" local authorities; it contains no contribution by the Ministry of Defence. We have obtained a copy.

Short-range Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to prohibit the deployment in, storage in or transit through or over the United Kingdom of W69, W79 and W88 warheads until such time as faults in them have been thoroughly investigated and eliminated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We neither confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons at particular places and times. We do, however, maintain regular contact with the US Government on safety matters and are satisfied with US assurances on the safety of their nuclear weapons.

Military Ranges, Pembrokeshire

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on any proposals he has to privatise the organisation, maintenance or administration of the Penally, Manorbier and Castlemartin ranges in Pembrokeshire.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are presently no plans to contractorise the administration of any of these ranges. However the MOD is constantly exploring options to increase efficiency, and such a course could not be ruled out if it could be demonstrated to offer better value for money.

Arms Sales, Iraq

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide details of the value of arms sales by the United Kingdom to Iraq for each of the years from 1980 to 1989 inclusive in the same form as that provided in his answer to the hon. Member for Eccles (Miss Lestor) on 19 June 1989, Official Report, column 59.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the normal policy of successive Administrations not to provide details of arms sales to specific countries as this is a commercially confidential matter between the customer and the supplier. I see no reason to make a further exception in this case. However, since the beginning of the Iran-Iraq conflict in September 1980 the United Kingdom has refused to allow the supply of any lethal equipments to Iraq in accordance with the guidelines applying to the export of such equipments to both countries.

WE177 Free-fall Bomb

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the WE177A B and C nuclear warheads use insensitive high explosives.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 14 June, Official Report, column 325.

Royal Ordnance Factory, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has with the royal ordnance factory at Nottingham.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department currently has an order of 300 direct and indirect contracts with the royal ordnance factory at Nottingham, mainly for guns and small arms and their spares support.

Military Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) of 26 February, Official Report, column 75, if he will list where this military training takes place; on which training sites live firing is permitted; and what is the range of the weapons involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Military training takes place at the following locations which are in Ministry of Defence ownership:

Region and Location
Central Cambusbarron
Grampian
Blackdog[1]
Rosehearty

Highland
Cape Wrath and Garvie Island[1]
Fort George[1]
Kinlochleven
Tain

Lothian
Dreghorn[1]
Kirknewton

Strathclyde
Dundonald
Garelochhead[1]

Tayside
Arbroath
Barry Buddon[1]
Rannoch Forest
Tighnablair[1]

Western Isles
South Uist[1]
St. Kilda

[1] Locations at which live firing takes place.

Military training also takes place at the following locations over which the Ministry of Defence has training rights:

Region and location
Dumfries and Galloway
Galloway

Grampian
Auchallater
Blackdog

Highland
Tain

Lothian
Dreghorn

Strathclyde
Dundonald

Tayside
Barry Buddon
Tighnablair

Western Isles
South Uist

It would not be possible to give details of the ranges of all the weapons involved in training in Scotland, some of which are classified. In any event the practice of live firing of weapons can constitute a danger at distances greater than would normally be the range in combat use. The theoretical range of a particular weapon can, if considered alone, give a misleading impression of the practical implications of firing live rounds. All service weapons have an associated safety template which governs the minimum requirement for land where live rounds are to be fired. These templates also take account of the design of the range concerned and the topography of the surrounding land and therefore vary. Live firing is permitted only in locations where sufficient land is available to accommodate the safety templates in full.

WALES

Health Service

12. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from health authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I receive many representations from health authorities in Wales on a wide variety of issues.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department refused to allocate capital resources for any projects submitted by Gwynedd health authority in 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: In common with other health authorities in Wales Gwynedd health authority submitted bids for the central funding of a number of capital developments in 1988-89. Of the seven bids submitted by the authority, three were successful and four were rejected.

In addition a request from the chairman of Gwynedd health authority in July 1988 that consideration be given to the development of a new hospital for Ynys Môn under the Secretary of State's programme for the valleys initiative was turned down since the initiative was restricted to a defined geographical area in south Wales.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 10 May, Official Report, columns 193-94, what information he has on the reasons why Gwynedd health authority's level of capital expenditure in 1988-89 comprised 4 per cent. of the Welsh total for district health authority capital spending.

Mr. Grist: I would refer the hon. Member to my reply of 10 May at columns 193-94, which identified the levels of virement between district health authorities' revenue and capital allocations in the period 1985-86 and 1988-89, which influence both the respective levels and proportions of their capital expenditure in each of these years.

Private Water Supplies

14. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many private sources of water supply in Wales will be subject to licensing by the National Rivers Authority after September.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are at present more than 4,000 licensed abstractions in the National Rivers Authority's Welsh region. It is not possible to predict how many applications for new licences will be made in the next few months.

Education (Mid Glamorgan)

15. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the director of education in Mid Glamorgan to discuss education in Mid Glamorgan.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of Mid Glamorgan education committee, accompanied by the assistant director for further education and the deputy county clerk, on 4 June.

Community Councils

16. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce legislation to protect local democratic representation through elected community councils in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Present legislation already confers such protection, as each individual community is entitled to decide whether to have a council or not.

Project 2000

17. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to enable the health service in Wales to meet the original 1990-91 deadline for implementing the Project 2000 nurse training initiative.

Mr. David Hunt: My policy is to ensure that Project 2000 is implemented in Wales as soon as resources and planning considerations allow.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. David Hunt: On May 10 1990 the number of unemployment claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 4,446, 13,136 and 81,194 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis which enables a valid comparison to be made.

Employment Training

19. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the reduction in employment training funding in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Individual budgets are still being discussed but the fall in unemployment means that Government funding at previous levels is no longer required.

National Curriculum

20. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress on the implementation of the national curriculum within Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have made good progress in the implementation of the national curriculum in Wales commencing with mathematics, science and primary English in autumn 1989; to be followed this year by secondary English, technology and Welsh in schools where Welsh is taught already. In preparation for the introduction of history and geography in 1991 I have published recently my proposals for geography in the national curriculum and the report of the history committee for Wales.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what provision he is making within the national curriculum for teaching Welsh history in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The report of the history committee for Wales was published on 12 June. The report sets out recommendations for the history course for pupils from age five to 16 in schools in Wales and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

We will publish proposals for attainment targets and programmes of study for history within the national curriculum in the schools of Wales in due course.

Argoed High School

21. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received against the proposed closure of Argoed high school.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Some 140 letters have been received since March 1990 about the proposed closure of Argoed high school.

Floods (Compensation)

22. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now make an assessment of the total contribution which the Government will have made to compensate individuals and local authorities for losses caused by the flooding in February; and what calculation he has made of the additional community charge which will be payable in Colwyn and in Rhuddlan in 1991 as a direct consequence of the floods.

Mr. David Hunt: I acknowledge the speed with which the authorities concerned are undertaking all the work arising from the emergency. The Government, too, responded swiftly. We immediately activated the Bellwin arrangements and contributed to the funds established by the mayors. Subsequently we set up a working party to co-ordinate the Government's efforts in support of the local authorities and the people affected. Throughout, my Department has been in close touch with the local authorities concerned. Priority has been given to restoring confidence especially through ensuring the provision of the best possible sea defences.

An early estimate based in part on information provided by the local authorities is that the total Government contribution could exceed £4 million. The local contribution to the community charge to expenditure arising from the emergency should not be significant.

Local Government Finance

23. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the effect of the poll tax on young people on low incomes in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received various representations about community charge, some of which have been about the position of young people.

NHS Reform

24. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the implications of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill for the future role of East Dyfed health authority and the other health authorities in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The implications of the Bill for all health authorities are explained in the Welsh Office National Health Service directorate's paper, "Developing Roles in NHS Wales", published in April 1990, copies of which were sent to all Welsh Members and placed in the Library of the House.

Opencast Coal

25. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on present planning procedures as they affect Welsh opencast coal sites.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Procedures for handling mineral planning applications, including opencast coal sites, are set out in the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 (S.I. 1988, No. 1813). Advice on handling specific development proposals is given in minerals planning guidance note No. 3, "Open Cast Coal Mining", issued in May 1988.

Ophthalmic Services

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his reply of 15 May, Official Report, column 371, regarding glaucoma cases, when he expects to provide the information.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my letter of 18 June 1990, a copy of which is also in the Library of the House.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people on family credit or income support received free eye tests in Wales (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: The data requested were not collected centrally prior to 1 April 1989, since when they have been collected on a six-monthly basis. The available information is given as follows:

	Estimated[1] number of sight tests paid for by family practitioner committees in the six months ending
	30 September 1989	31 March 1990
Adults receiving family credit or income support	33,420	35,700

[1] Estimates based upon a 2 per cent. sample of all such sight tests.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how the amount of the financial allocation for the new system of home improvement grants for the financial year 1991-92 will be determined.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter to be determined in the current public expenditure survey.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the new system for home improvement grants will come into operation.

Mr. Grist: The new area renovation arrangements and minor works assistance were introduced on 1 April this year. The remainder of the new renovation grant system will be brought into effect on 1 July 1990.

Housing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he proposes to have on the housing needs of the elderly in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Department is currently consulting statutory and voluntary bodies on the future of home improvement agencies in Wales. The housing needs of elderly people will also be considered by Welsh district councils and officials in the context of authorities' housing strategies for 1991-92.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will call for a report from the chairman of Tai Cymru on its supervision of the financial affairs of Corlan Housing Association;

(2) when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry instituted under the Housing Association Act 1973 into the financial difficulties of Corlan Housing Association;

(3) if he will publish the report of the inquiry into the financial affairs of Corlan Housing Association; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether he has any plans to issue new guidelines to Tai Cymru on the supervision of the financial affairs of Welsh housing associations.

Mr. Grist: Under the Housing Associations Act 1985 Housing for Wales has various powers and responsibilities in respect of registered housing associations and under section 28 of the Act has instituted an inquiry into the affairs of Corlan Housing Association. A report is expected within about six weeks. Housing for Wales will then decide what further action needs to be taken in the light of the inquiry's findings. My right hon. Friend and I are, of course, in touch with the situation.

The board of Housing for Wales is already considering the wider implications of the situation and will be discussing these with me.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consideration he has given to the independent technical report prepared for Newport borough council by Ove Arup, consulting engineers, on the structural soundness of houses at Ringwood hill, Newport, Gwent;

(2) if he will vary or revoke the designation of properties at Ringwood hill, Newport, Gwent, as being defective within the terms of section 528 of the Housing Act 1985;

(3) if he will now reply to a letter dated 9 May from the hon. Member for Newport, East concerning the designation of houses at Ringwood hill, Newport, Gwent, as being defective within the terms of section 528 of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Grist: I have not received any recent correspondence from the hon. Gentleman about houses at Ringwood hill, Newport. However, we have very recently written to Newport borough council to say that my right hon. Friend is not prepared to revoke or vary the designation of Hawksley SGS houses under section 528 of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the policy outlined in his reply of 11 June, Official Report, column 25, applies to properties owned by Douglas Haig Memorial Homes.

Mr. Grist: As a landlord body, Douglas Haig Memorial Homes will be able to apply for financial assistance under the renovation grant being introduced from 1 July.

Communicators for the Deaf

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on future funding for the Communicators for the Deaf course at Barry college.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Training Agency funded the course on a 12-month contract which ends in July. There are no plans to extend funding.

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he proposes to provide training for communicators for the deaf in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department recognises the need for and value of training in this field. A three-year grant was awarded to the Wales Council for the Deaf in 1989-90 to set up a pilot project with the aim of increasing the number of people with advanced qualifications in sign language.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 June, if he will make it his policy to provide the financial resources necessary to fully implement the display of information on water quality at all bathing beaches in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave him on 13 June at column 226, to which there is nothing that I can add.

Engineering

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will call for a report on the supply and demand for engineering skills and training facilities in Wales arising from (a) new investment projects and (b) existing firms, including small enterprises.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A labour market assessment covering the whole of Wales is undertaken annually by the Training Agency for Wales. In addition, the Training Agency carries out specific research exercises such as the "Valley Skills" study. At a local level the developing training and enterprise councils are undertaking local labour market research for their corporate and business plans. The supply and demand for engineering skills and training feature as subjects in these studies. Known inward investment projects are taken into account and firms of all sizes are considered.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what public funds have been made available towards the cost of a regional freight terminal linking Welsh industry and commerce with the channel tunnel.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No specific amount has been set aside for freight terminals. British Rail is proposing to spend over £1 billion to enable freight and passenger services to be in place when the tunnel opens. This includes expenditure on freight terminals. British Rail is currently negotiating to obtain the best commercial deals on terminals in partnership with the private sector.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has undertaken on the demand for a regional freight terminal in south Wales to link with the channel tunnel.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. This is a matter for British Rail, which has identified south Wales as a possible location for a major terminal for channel tunnel freight services.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make an assessment of the demand in Wales for regional freight terminals to link with the channel tunnel.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. British Rail has already assessed the demand in Wales for freight terminals in drawing up its published plan for channel tunnel services. It is now up to businesses in Wales to consider their requirements and make these known to British Rail.

TRANSPORT

M6 (Road Works)

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of occasions when major road works have taken place on the M6 motorway between junction 8 (M5 Ray Hall) and junction 9 (Bescot), (b) the type of work carried out and (c) the total cost of such work since that portion of the M6 motorway was completed.

Mr. Atkins: Since the M6 opened, there has been one major road maintenance scheme on this section, in 1979, when major reconstruction and resurfacing of the carriageways between junctions 8 and 10 was undertaken at a cost of £3 million. Further major maintenance works between junctions 8 and 9 will start this month. In addition there is an ongoing programme of structural maintenance to the viaducts themselves.

Bedford Bypass

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to publish Her Majesty's Government's recommendations about the line of route for linking the projected southern relief road at Elstow in the county of Bedford with the A428.

Mr. Atkins: Such a link would form a western bypass of Bedford. The Department is discussing its preferred inner route with the local authorities, which favour alternative proposals further to the west. Technical analyses of traffic data will take a number of months to complete and I do not expect to make any announcements before the autumn.

Dial-a-Ride

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are made to fund dial-a-ride and similar services for disabled people outside London; if he will list the amounts paid in support of such services in shire county and metropolitan areas in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Shire councils and passenger transport authorities and executives in the metropolitan areas have a duty to have regard to the transport needs of members of the public who are elderly or disabled, and may fund dial-a-ride and other special needs services. We do not have comprehensive figures on local authority spending in this area, but a recent assessment by the local authority associations put provision by the PTAs in the metropolitan areas at £4·4 million in 1988-89 and £8·2 million in 1989-90.

East London Rail Study

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what representations he has received concerning the release of any economic evaluation of the east London rail study; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish any cost/benefit analysis of the east London rail study commissioned by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A small number of representations have been received about the release of details of the economic evaluation of the Jubilee line extension including some from hon. Members. This material was not released at the time the east London rail study report was published last July as it might have prejudiced negotiations with developers about their contributions to the cost of the line. However, now that agreement has been reached about the level of these contributions, I can now release this information. The cost benefit analysis which lay behind the ELRS report was as follows.

Present value of costs and benefits for the Jubilee line extension from Green Park via (inter alia) Waterloo, Canary Wharf and Greenwich Point to Stratford

1988-89 prices discounted to 1989

	£ million
Capital costs	(690)
Operating cost	(90)
Additional revenue	290
Funding gap	(490)
Passenger benefits	730
Road user benefits	200
Net benefit	440
Benefit: cost ratio	1·56:1

London Underground

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received advocating the extension of the London underground to Thamesmead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has received a small number of representations in support of an extension of the Jubilee line to Thamesmead. The east London rail study showed that the capital costs (estimated at £420 million in 1989 prices) and operating costs would greatly exceed the revenues and benefits.

Channel Ferries (Fire Drills)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 7 June, column 696, what fire drill practice passengers on cross-channel ferries undergo on each voyage; and what fire drill information they are given in case of fire.

Mr. McLoughlin: Fire drills are directed at the crew and passengers are not required to participate. A fire in a space used by passengers should be detected by automatic fire detection systems or by fire patrols required by the SOLAS convention. This will activate the measures provided on the vessel for fighting a fire—including the provision of trained crew. In the event of a fire passengers would be instructed on the public address system to muster at specified positions on the vessels in the same way as in any other emergency. These instructions are also required to be posted in cabins and in other spaces used by passengers.

SCOTLAND

Lead Contamination

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research his Department has conducted into the effects of lead in water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department has provided funding for a number of long-running major projects over the past 18 years:

Studies in Environmental and Industrial Lead Intoxification.

Studies on the Biological Effects of Lead and Cadmium in the Environment.

The Evaluation of Certain Aspects of Lead and Cadmium Exposure in Terms of Biochemical Effects and Consideration of Bio-Analytical Indices of Exposure.

Developmental Behavioural and Neurochemical Aspects of Lead Exposure in Man and Experimental Animals.

Neuropsychological Function in Children Exposed to Low Levels of Lead in the Environment (in conjunction with the Medical Research Council).

Community Service Orders

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of administering community service orders in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available; how many orders were made per 100,000 of the population in that year; and what was the average cost per order.

Mr. Rifkind: The gross expenditure incurred by local authorities in the financial year ended 31 March 1989 in respect of community service schemes was estimated to be £3·2 million. There were 3,492 orders made during the same period, representing 69 per 100,000 population. On the basis of these figures, the average cost per order was about £920.

Security Firms

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the private security firms presently employed by his Department, the buildings at which they operate and the date of expiry of each contract.

Mr. Rifkind: The information relating to the Scottish Office and associated departments is set out in the table:

Company	Location	Expiry date of contract
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.	Middleton Hall, by Gorebridge	13 July 1990
Wackenhut (UK) Ltd.	Marine Laboratory, Aberdeen	1 December 1990
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.	Brandon Street, Edinburgh	31 March 1992
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.	Saughton House, Edinburgh	31 March 1992
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.	Jeffrey Street, Edinburgh	31 March 1992
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.	Supreme Courts, Edinburgh	31 December 1991
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.	Edinburgh Sheriff Court	31 December 1991
Burns International Security Services (UK) Ltd.	Glasgow Sheriff Court	25 April 1992
Group 4 Total Security Ltd.	Ladywell House, Edinburgh	[1]—
Group 4 Total Security Ltd.	GRO Building, Station Road, Edinburgh	[1]—

[1] These buildings are covered by an ongoing contract which may be terminated following one month's notice.

Probation Orders

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many probation orders have been made by the courts in Scotland in each of the last five years; how many orders were made per 100,000 of the population in the latest available year; and what was the cost of administering probation orders in that year.

Mr. Rifkind: The number of persons placed on probation in each of the past five years for which figures are available is published in the Scottish Home and Health Department statistical bulletin No. 1/1990, "Criminal Proceedings in Scottish Courts, 1988", which is available in the Library.

In 1988, 68 persons per 100,000 of the population aged eight or over were placed on probation. (If a person is placed on probation more than once in the same year, each occasion is counted separately.)

Local authorities are unable to identify separately within the social work budget the cost of supervision of persons subject to probation orders.

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. Rifkind: Comprehensive records of all studies for the period requested are not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost. Details of contract costs cannot be disclosed because of commercial confidentiality. The following information is readily available:

Urban Aid

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures showing total urban aid funding disbursed to new projects in the area of the Govan Initiative in 1988-89 and 1989-90; and how much of this went to projects submitted through the Govan Initiative.

Mr. Lang: There were 11 additional urban programme approvals in 1988-89 for the area of the Govan Initiative amounting to £1·340 million in total capital and annual running costs of which £1·311 million was for nine new projects. Three of this number, representing £0·264 million of the total, were submitted through the Govan Initiative.

There were 11 additional urban programme approvals in 1989-90 for the area of the Govan Initiative amounting to £0·682 million in total capital and annual running costs of which £0·537 million was for six new projects. Four of this number, representing £0·490 million of the total, were sponsored by the Govan Initiative.

The additional approvals in 1989-90 brought total approved expenditure for the Govan Initiative area for the year to £1·708 million on 28 projects.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, when considering urban aid allocations to economic initiatives in Strathclyde, he treates this aid as supplementary to the urban aid disbursed to non-initiative projects, and therefore not prejudicial to the non-initiative applicants.

Mr. Lang: In arriving at the dedicated urban programme budgets which have been offered for Castlemilk, Drumchapel and Easterhouse in Glasgow and for Ferguslie Park in Paisley, account was taken of each area's share of the worst deprivation, and its track record of success in securing urban programme resources.

The budgets offered for Castlemilk and Ferguslie Park also took into account the fact that urban programme resources had been increased in order to allow additional priority to be given to urban partnerships areas without reducing the Government's commitment to other eligible areas. There is therefore no reason to believe that the provision of dedicated budgets should cause other areas to lose out.

Community Service Orders

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many community service orders have been made by the courts in Scotland in each of the last five years; and if he will break down the figure in the last available year according to the number of hours of service specified in the order.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is set out in the tables.

Community Service Orders made by Courts

Year	Number of Orders
1985	2,889
1986	3,453
1987	3,508
1988	3,590
1989	4,190

Number of Hours of Service Specified in the Order 1989

Number of Hours	Number of Orders
40-95	802
100-140	1,429
150-190	991
200-240	968
Total	4,190

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Forestry Commission land was sold in each of England, Scotland and Wales in the 12 months to 1 April; and how much of this land was subject to agreement securing future public access.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows. The figures given are provisional at this stage.

Area of Forestry Commission land sold in the year to 31 March 1990

	Hectares
England	1,699
Scotland	4,689
Wales	1,276

None of the land was subject to specific agreements concerning future public access.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what policies he has adopted to secure continuing public access to Forestry Commission land sold to the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are concerned that the general public should continue to enjoy access to those forests to be disposed of by the Forestry Commission in a way which is compatible with their management for forestry and other purposes. We are giving careful consideration to ways of achieving this objective, but a number of complex issues is having to be addressed. In the meantime, the commission is deferring the sale of woodlands that are particularly sensitive from the point of view of public access, except in those cases where the sale is to an environmental body under the sponsorship arrangements.

Secondary Education

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is able to announce the membership of the committee which he has established to review courses and examinations in the fifth and sixth years of Scottish secondary education.

Mr. Lang: I am glad to be able to announce that the following have accepted my right hon. and learned Friend's invitation to serve on the committee to be chaired by Professor John Howie:

Mr. David Alexander, Depute Director of Education, Strathclyde Regional Council.
Mr. Richard Bisset, Headteacher, Kemnay Academy, Aberdeenshire.
Mr. Thomas Burness, Principal, Glenrothes and Buckhaven Technical College, Fife.
Mr. Ronald Crawford, Academic Registrar, University of Strathclyde and Executive Secretary, Universities of Scotland Standing Conference.
Mrs. Dorothy Dalton, Chief Executive, Scottish Community Education Council.
Dr. John Gow, Secretary General, The Royal Society of Chemistry.
Mrs. Deirdre Hutton.
Professor Ian Lockerbie, Department of Educational Policy and Development, University of Stirling.
Mr. James McVittie, Headteacher, St. Ninian's High School, Eastwood, Renfrewshire.
Professor Ian Marrian, Director of Education, Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland.

Mr. David Meek, Assistant Headteacher, Boclair Academy, Bearsden.
Mr. Robert Nimmo, Rector, High School of Dundee.
Mrs. Jennifer Rees, Head of Management Studies Department, Scottish College of Textiles, Galashiels.
Mr. David Semple, Director of Education, Lothian Regional Council.
Mr. James Thompson, Principal Teacher of Mathematics, High School of Stirling.
Sir John Thomson, former member of Her Majesty's Diplomatic Service.
Dr. Gordon Wilson, Principal, Craigie College of Education.
Professor John Woodward, Vice Principal, Paisley College of Technology.

HIV

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in Scotland the number of persons infected with HIV; and if he will separately distinguish these numbers by age.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The following table gives a breakdown by health board area of the total number of positive HIV antibody test results in Scotland which have been reported to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit up to 31 March 1990. Where the total number of results in each board area is under 10, the figure, in accordance with established practice, is not published so as not to jeopardise medical confidentiality.

Health board	Number of positive results
Argyll and Clyde	14
Ayrshire and Arran	[1]
Borders	[1]
Dumfries and Galloway	13
Fife	26
Forth Valley	60
Grampian	40
Greater Glasgow	278

Orkney	Nil
Shetland	[1]
Tayside	233
Western Isles	Nil
TOTAL (SCOTLAND)	1,769

[1] Under 10.

The age distribution of results by health board area is not readily available and could not, in any event, be given where the number involved is under 10. The age distribution, where known, of the total number of results is shown in the table.

Age	Number of positive results
Under 14 years	116
15 to 24 years	723

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the correlation coefficient between the incidence of HIV infection and the incidence of tuberculosis in Scotland over the period 1980 to 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 7 June 1990]: As the respective relevant data on HIV antibody positive results reported to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit and on the notification of tuberculosis in Scotland are not compatible, any attempt at a correlation coefficient using the data would not be valid. No evidence exists of a correlation in Scotland between the incidence of HIV infection and the incidence of tuberculosis, although tuberculosis has occurred in a small proportion of persons with AIDS.

The annual number of positive reports of HIV infection and notifications of tuberculosis in Scotland from 1980 to 1989 inclusive are given in the following table:

	HIV positive results	Tuberculosis
1980	0	1,138
1981	2	972
1982	9	902

Farm Pollution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details about steps taken by his Department in order to quantify the damage to health and safety of people and environment caused by cases of farm pollution in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 June 1990]: The Scottish farm waste liaison group compiles records of pollution incidents and publishes information on the numbers and types of such incidents. The group, which was established in 1981, comprises representatives of river purification boards, the Scottish agricultural college and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

Reports on specific incidents are made in the annual reports of the river purification authority concerned. There are very few recorded cases of direct damage to health arising from specific farm pollution incidents.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement regarding the role of his Department in the care and protection of the health and safety of the Scottish people and environment from farm pollution.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 June 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 8 June, Official Report, Vol. 173, column 737. The Government aim by a policy of education, regulation and enforcement to reduce farm pollution at source in the interests of safeguarding public health and protecting the environment.

The Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, together with other Departments, keeps the use and effectiveness of pesticides under review. Where it is justified on scientific grounds action is taken to ban substances whose continued use is found to be unacceptable. The Department was associated with the preparation of a code of practice for the safe use of pesticides on farms and holdings published earlier this year. Guidance has also been issued on the operation of intensive livestock units and on the control of slurry spreading.

The safeguarding of public health is one of the objectives of the Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989, a measure introduced recently to protect the environment, and in particular the soil, when sewage sludge is used in agriculture.

The Scottish Development Department sponsors the seven Scottish river purification boards which, along with the three islands councils, are responsible under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 for controlling pollution of the water environment. Their powers were recently improved and strengthened in the Water Act 1989. Where pollution of water occurs, whether from farm or other sources, it falls on these authorities both to take action to safeguard health by notifying water authorities and the public likely to be affected and to assemble evidence against the possibility of offenders being prosecuted.

All employers and the self-employed, including farmers, have a general duty under section 3 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to ensure, so far as reasonably practicable, the health and safety of persons who may be affected by their work activities.

The specific obligations relating to the protection of employees' health imposed on employers by the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations also extend so far as reasonably practicable to non-employees both on and off the employer's premises.

Disabled People

Mr Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people with disability are on employment training placements with employers; and what percentage this is of placements for people with disabilities.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The information requested is not collected by the Training Agency. However, I can say that 2,822 (3·5 per cent. of the total) disabled people joined employment training in Scotland in the period end September 1988 to March 1990 and that overall within that period 22 per cent. of all employment training placements have been with employers.

Hepatitis B

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of medical and nursing staff in Scotland who have contacted hepatitis B in each of the last 10 years; and how many medical nursing staff have died from contracting hepatitis B in these years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 June 1990]: This information is not held centrally. National statistics about the incidence of hepatitis B do not separately identify particular occupational groups.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total expenditure by the Scottish Home and Health Department over the past 10 years in advertising risks to medical staff of contracting hepatitis B as a result of their work.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 15 June 1990]: The Scottish Home and Health Department does not incur specific expenditure on advertising the occupational risks of hepatitis B to medical staff. The Department does, however, issue to health boards the memorandum "Immunisation against Infectious Disease", which is prepared and regularly revised for the health departments by the joint committee on vaccination and immunisation. The memorandum, the latest edition of which has just been sent to health boards, identifies the occupational groups, including medical staff, particularly at risk from hepatitis B and gives advice on those to whom vaccination should be offered. Further advice is contained in "Guidance for Clinical Health Care Workers: Protection against Infection with HIV and Hepatitis Viruses". This booklet, which was issued by the Department to health boards recently, contains guidance on measures for the protection of health care workers in hospital and the community against occupational infection with HIV and hepatitis viruses.

The occupational health services within health boards will also give advice to medical staff about the risks of contracting hepatitis B and on the protective measures which can be taken.

Salmon

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to publish the results of the inquiry into the east coast salmon fishery.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 June 1990]: The analysis of scientific data is almost complete. Once this is submitted, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will then have to consider the implications. A report to both Houses will be submitted as soon as possible thereafter.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Capital Allocations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the 1990-91 capital allocations to each local education authority, indicating in each case the bid submitted and the allocation as a percentage of the bid and indicate which local education authorities have made representations for additional resources.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information requested on annual capital guidelines for education is set out in the table. Local education authorities are free to augment their annual capital guidelines within the flexibilities of the capital finance system by the use of capital receipts and other sources of income. The following LEAs have made formal representations for additional resources:

Notes:—All figures are in £000's and in cash terms.

Students

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of (a) undergraduate and (b) postgraduate students studying in universities in England and Wales; and what are the estimated targets for undergraduate and postgraduate student numbers for each year up to 1995.

Mr. Jackson: Information published by the universities statistical record for the 1988-89 academic year, shows that there 223,311 undergraduates and 82,713 postgraduates studying at universities in England and Wales.

Future levels of admissions are for individual universities to decide.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of (a) undergraduate and (b) postgraduate students in the university of Wales; and what targets have been set for (i) undergraduate and (ii) postgraduate numbers for each university college in each year up to 1995.

Mr. Jackson: Information published by the universities statistical record for the 1988-89 academic year, shows that there 17,618 undergraduate and 5,549 postgraduate students in the university of Wales. Future levels of admissions are for the individual constituent colleges to decide.

Teacher Training

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will instigate an experimental period of payment for teachers who undertake training during holiday periods.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend agrees with the interim advisory committee's view that it would not be helpful to distinguish training which takes place within the 1,265 hours from training which takes place outside directed time.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate the increase in cost of paying teachers for holiday training periods during the 1990-91 school year.

Mrs. Rumbold: If such payments were made available, the cost would depend on a variety of factors including the amounts of holiday training undertaken and the extent to which it replaced the training currently undertaken in directed time, as well as rates of pay. Given these variables, an estimate is impossible.

Assessment

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he circulated to the teacher unions for consultation the draft document entitled the Education (National Curriculum) (Assessment Arrangements in English, Mathematics and Science) Order 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: Copies of the draft document were dispatched to relevant teacher associations on 18 May with the exception of two of the associations which, by error, were not sent copies. The Department has since sent copies to these two associations.

Community Work Training

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what plans he has for the future of community work training;

(2) what representations he has received about the future of community work training; and if he will place them in the Library.

Mr. Alan Howarth: On 5 April my right hon. Friend announced that from 1 April 1991, he would channel funding to the national level youth service bodies through a single national youth agency. The agency will be based on the existing youth service bodies, in particular the National Youth Bureau (NYB) and the Council for the Education and Training of Youth and Community Workers (CETYCW). One of the functions of the agency will be the development, endorsement, accreditation and, in some circumstances, the provision of youth and community worker training and I shall look to the agency to build upon the work currently undertaken by CETYCW.

My right hon. Friend has received a number of general representations about the establishment of the agency.

School Buildings (Access)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he gives to local education authorities on the standards of access for people with disabilities for new designs for and adaptations to school and college buildings; and whether he will consult interested parties regarding statutory provision for standards of access for new school and college buildings.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Guidance to those responsible for making educational buildings accessible to disabled people and for adapting ordinary school buildings for pupils with special needs is given in design note 18 (1984) and building bulletin 61 published by DES architects and building branch. The design note is based on the recommendations of a working party including representatives of Her Majesty's inspectorate, local authorities and interested central Government Departments.

Access for disabled people to new school and college buildings is required to be confirmed under the arrangements for obtaining the Secretary of State's approval to capital building projects.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many nursery, primary and secondary schools are fully accessible to pupils and teachers with disabilities; what are these figures as percentages of the total number of schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not held centrally.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what specific funding has been available to local education authorities to enable access to school and college buildings for pupils and teachers with disabilities in each of the last 10 years; and if he has any plans to make specific grants available to local education authorities to carry out necessary capital works to facilitate physical access for people with disabilities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: None. It is for local education authorities to decide their priorities for capital expenditure on schools and colleges, taking account of their responsibilities under section 8 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Special Educational Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals were received under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 by each local education authority; and what were the decisions taken by the appeals tribunal for each of the years from April 1983.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Appeals under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 are made directly to my right hon. Friend. Appeals to local appeal committees are made under section 8(2) of the 1981 Act. Information concerning the number and outcome of such appeals is not collected centrally.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals were received under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 by each local education authority; and what were the decisions taken by the appeals tribunal for each of the years from April 1983.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Appeals under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 are made directly to my right hon. Friend. Since April 1983 he has received 164 such appeals. The following table lists by year the number of such appeals and the number of appeals under section 5(6) which resulted in my right hon. Friend directing the LEA to reconsider its decision not to make a statement of special educational needs.

Year	Appeals received	LEA directed to reconsider
1984	19	0
1985	19	1
1986	21	3
1987	31	6
1988	17	3
1989	12	7

There are 42 such appeals upon which my right hon. Friend has yet to reach a decision.

Student Teachers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the number of students with disabilities who have entered initial teacher training for each of the last 10 years; and what percentage of the total number of student teachers this represents.

Mr. Alan Howarth: These data are not available centrally.

Research and Development

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total of the reduction in his Department's expenditure on research and development achieved by taking advantage of the additionality principle when grants have been awarded to United Kingdom universities by the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: None. The European Community's requirements in respect of additionality arise in relation to the structural funds rather than to research and development, and the principle applies to the setting of levels of expenditure by public bodies, including Government Departments, rather than to universities which are private sector bodies.

EMPLOYMENT

National Insurance Credits

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been disallowed national insurance credits for not being available or not actively seeking work in each quarter since January 1987; how many have appealed against those disallowances and with what result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage change in employment in manufacturing industry for each region of the United Kingdom from 1979 to the latest figures available.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest employment estimates are for December 1989. The information is as follows:

Employees in manufacturing in the United Kingdom

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage change in the north-west of employment in (a) the service sector, (b) self-employment and (c) manufacturing industry between 1979 and 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: Latest employment estimates are for December 1989. In the north-west region, between June 1979 and December 1989, employment in the service sector rose by 10 per cent., self-employment rose by 50 per cent. and employment in manufacturing industries fell by 29 per cent.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing a ward-by-ward breakdown of the numbers of unemployed in the constituencies of (a) Burnley and (b) Pendle for the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The following table shows a ward-by-ward breakdown of unemployment in the constituencies Burnley and Pendle as at May 1990, the latest available date. The figures are not seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently in work in (a) the east midlands and (b) Derbyshire; and how many people were in work in these areas in 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: Information relating to counties is available only from censuses of employment. The latest data relate to September 1987 and the earliest comparable to September 1981.

The available estimates are as follows:

(a) EAST MIDLANDS
Civil work force in employment
December 1979 1,687,000
December 1989 1,850,000

(b) DERBYSHIRE

Employment Protection

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to seek to change the law so that women with less than two years' service have the same protection against dismissal for pregnancy as women with a minimum of two years' full-time service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: We have no plans to reduce the qualifying periods of service for unfair dismissal on grounds connected with pregnancy. To do so would add to the burdens of employers and thereby threaten employment opportunities.

Wages Councils

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research he has commissioned into the effectiveness of the wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: The councils are empowered to set minimum rates of pay in certain industries. The extent of compliance with these rates is regularly assessed by reference to information collected by wages inspectors. This information shows that compliance with wages council orders is running at a very high level.

Local Offices

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 13 June, what period is given to any hon. Member who is informed of the possible closure of a local part-time employment office to make representations regarding the proposal; by what mechanism such representations are considered; and whether the chief executive of the Employment Services Agency requires ministerial approval for a closure decision.

Mr. Eggar: It is not the practice to undertake a consultation process as part of considering the closure of a part-time local employment service office.

Any plans that the employment service has to close a full-time local office which involves the withdrawal of its services from a local community are subject to a consultation process in which the views of the appropriate hon. Members, local authorities, civil service trade unions and any other interests are sought and taken into account.

I refer the hon. Member again to section 6 of the agency framework document which sets out the terms under which the chief executive has the authority to manage the employment service office estate.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many part-time benefit signing offices were operative in 1985; and what is the most recent figure available, giving the figures on a regional basis.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Member.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he intends to introduce legislation for a minimum wage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so. A national minimum wage would raise employers' costs and destroy jobs.

Youth Training

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the relationship between youth training allowances and the community charge following the meeting between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West on 6 June.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 11 June 1990]: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations about the relationship between liability to pay a proportion of the community charge and the minimum level of training allowance to young people aged 18 years or over who are on youth training. These representations have been referred to the Secretary of State for the Environment, who is reviewing the operation of the community charge to see if there are any anomalies which need to be addressed.

TVEI

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list, by local education authority, the amount of money made available or planned for the technical and vocational education initiative in 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 June 1990]: Below is a table showing by LEA the budgets available or planned for TVEI extension in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

The additional information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the relative advantages which follow from the practice of requiring inspection of slaughterhouses by prior arrangement with the proprietor as against unannounced inspections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Local authorities (district councils) are responsible for the enforcement of hygiene and welfare legislation in slaughterhouses. Visits made by officers of the state veterinary service are for the purpose of providing advice to the local authority and are made in the company of local authority personnel. It is usual for visits to be arranged with the plant concerned as their purpose is served best if representatives of plant management are present. Unannounced visits may be made, however, in response to reports of problems at a plant.

Countryside Premium Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many landowners have entered the agricultural set-aside scheme; and how many are receiving additional payments under the countryside premium scheme.

Mr. Maclean: Almost 3,100 farmers in the United Kingdom have entered the set-aside scheme. Of these, 115 have been accepted into the premium scheme run by the Countryside Commission in the seven eastern counties of England.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to which areas he has considered extending the countryside premium scheme beyond the existing pilot area in the east of England to other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

The countryside premium scheme was launched by the Countryside Commission in June 1989 and initially covers seven counties in eastern England. Arrangements are in hand for monitoring the effectiveness of the scheme. It is too early yet to consider extending the scheme to other areas in England. Decisions on application of the scheme in other areas of the United Kingdom rest with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions exist to help ensure that land entered into the set-aside scheme, but not attracting countryside premium payments, is managed to a satisfactory standard of husbandry.

Mr. Maclean: On land set aside to fallow under the scheme, a green cover crop must be established and maintained throughout the set-aside period, and must be cut at least once a year. Though there is a general prohibition on the use of pesticides, certain herbicides may be used with the permission of Agriculture Departments to cope with difficult weeds. The use of fertilisers is not permitted except in specific circumstances, and the land may not be used as a dumping ground for any kind of organic or inorganic material. We are considering in the light of the operation of the scheme so far whether the management requirements are adequate.

Crabs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the numbers of crabs identified as showing levels of toxic contamination from the current shellfish closure area on the north-east coast; and if he will give the levels registered and the origins of the crabs concerned.

Mr. Maclean: Of the 190 crab samples from the north-east coast tested up until 8 June, 16 showed levels of paralytic shellfish poison toxin. These are as follows:

Units of toxin per 100g in brown meat (digestive gland) of crabs

In addition, trace levels of toxin were found in a further eight of the 190 samples tested.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures are in force to ensure that bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected material is not fed to mink and foxes.

Mr. Maclean: There have been no recorded cases of spongiform encephalopathies in foxes or, in this country, of mink. All carcases of known or suspected cases of BSE are burned or buried.

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. Maclean: The management consultancies, excluding computer consultants, engaged by my Department since 1984-85 are listed in the table. The annual costs have been aggregated so as to preserve commercial confidentiality.

Earth-banked Slurry Compounds

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement outlining the effect of BS 5502 on the future use of earth-banked slurry compounds;

(2) whether he has any plans to prohibit the use of earth-banked slurry compounds.

Mr. Curry: The Government have no plans to prohibit the use of earth-banked slurry compounds. The proposals for regulations issued by the Department of the Environment would set minimum constructional standards for new earth-banked compounds and other effluent containment facilities (which the National Rivers Authority could, by notice, extend to include existing facilities where there is a significant risk of pollution). These standards would be based on BS5502 which is a British standard code of practice for the design of buildings and structures for agriculture including earth-banked compounds. The effect of the proposed regulations should be that the facilities are designed and constructed to a standard which minimises the risk of pollution.

EC Surplus Food

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the names of the organisations in the Normanton constituency which are involved with the distribution of European Community surplus food;

(2) what organisations are involved with the distribution of European Community surplus food in the area of the Wakefield metropolitan district council.

Mr. Curry: More than 500 applications to participate in the 1990 EC surplus food scheme have been received from charitable and other non-profit-making organisations throughout the United Kingdom. These applications are currently being considered and I will make a statement once a decision has been reached.

Ewe Premium

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he hopes to pay the ewe premium; and if he will explain the reasons for the delay in making this payment to farmers.

Mr. Curry: We cannot make payments of sheep annual premium until the rates are published in the Official Journal of the European Communities. The final rate of premium in respect of the 1989 scheme was published on 19 May 1990 and we have paid over 98 per cent. of claims received. The small number of outstanding cases are those for which our administrative checks have not been completed.

Suckler Cows

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any plans to raise the premium on suckler cows.

Mr. Curry: Ministers are currently considering the rate of suckler cow premium which should apply in the 1990-91 scheme year and will make an announcement in due course.

Flood Relief Scheme, Maidenhead

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in implementing the flood relief scheme for Maidenhead.

Mr. Curry: The proposed scheme is planned to commence in mid-1992, although consideration is being given to ways of bringing this date forward. The National Rivers Authority (NRA) Thames region is currently consulting interested parties with the aim of reaching agreement prior to seeking planning approval early in 1991. This timetable has been agreed with the planning authorities. Detailed design of the scheme will be completed once planning consent has been obtained. The NRA also proposes to apply for grant from the Department towards the costs.

Salmonella

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will obtain a copy of the report by the Institute of Economic Affairs, "Chickengate—an independent analysis of the salmonella in eggs scare"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) has kindly sent me a copy of the book "Chickengate" and I have noted its contents. The Government's policy in relation to salmonella in eggs and poultry has been set out in evidence provided to the Agriculture Select Committee.

Pigs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by county, for each week, the number of pigs slaughtered as a result of contaminated feed since the present incident was first discovered.

Mr. Maclean: This information on a week-by-week basis is not readily available.

North-east Drift Net Fishery

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has yet received the report of the inquiry into the north-east drift net fishery; and when he now expects to publish this report.

Mr. Curry: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply that I gave him on 26 April at col. 317.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what specific research was considered by the Southwood committee into the transmissibility of BSE to household pets through pet food;

(2) what specific research further to that considered by the Southwood committee into the transmissibility of BSE to household pets through pet food (a) has been undertaken, (b) was in progress and (c) was under consideration by his Department (i) before the first suspected case of BSE-related disease in a cat and (ii) since.

Mr. Maclean: No specific research into the transmissibility of BSE to household pets through pet food was considered by the Southwood committee. No such research has been undertaken or is planned by my Department. Investigations are being carried out into the cause of the recent cases in cats. This includes the cats' breeding and feeding history. There is no evidence at present that the source of the recent cases of spongiform encephalopathy in cats was pet food or that the disease is related to BSE.

TRANSPORT

M1/M6 Junction

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the consultants' reports on the proposal to add an extra lane in each direction to the M1 immediately north of its junction with the M6.

Mr. Atkins: The study I announced last December was of existing conditions and the feasibility, in general terms, of a range of widening options.

The next step will be the appointment of consultants to prepare and design a scheme for particular lengths of the motorways to be widened.

Bids have been invited for a design commission covering the section referred to by my hon. Friend. I hope that that will enable us to publish firm proposals during the summer of 1991.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been published in each year since 1980 by his Department identifying means of (a) transport for passengers and (b) manufactured goods from Britain to Europe by the least environmentally damaging means; and what specific criteria have been used in order to make such assessment.

Mr. Atkins: We have not published any specific studies on the movement of people or goods from Britain to Europe by the least environmentally damaging means. However, a number of Government publications include information on the environmental aspects of different modes of travel.

Bus Companies (Subsidies)

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present annual cost to public funds of subsidies to bus companies.

Mr. Freeman: In 1988-89 fuel duty rebate of £157 million was paid to operators of local bus services, and rural bus grant of £13 million to operators of rural services (this grant has now been phased out). In addition, support for London bus services and local authority support of individual local services outside London came to £345 million.

Automobile Fire Risks

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is able to make any assessment of the fire risk in automobiles and as to whether lead-free petrol is safer or less safe in the event of such incidents.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The difference in fire risk between leaded and unleaded petrol is negligible. The performance of certain fire-fighting foams can be affected by the amount of alcohol used in either type of fuel. Petrol blended in the United Kingdom does not contain any added alcohols. Small quantities of imported petrol may contain alcohol up to the levels permitted in British standards. They pose no problems for the current generation of fire-fighting foams.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the road research laboratory has undertaken research into the possible relationship between different forms of fuel, including lead-free petrol, and post-accident fires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The transport and road research laboratory's work on car fires has concentrated on their immediate causes, such as electrical systems. There is no evidence to suggest that the severity of these fires is dependent on whether the fuel is leaded or unleaded.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will take steps to ensure that British Rail assess all new investment schemes for external benefits which would attract funding by Government grant;

(2) whether any of the approved investment by British Rail will be met by Government grant in recognition of benefits to the users of improved services.

Mr. Freeman: InterCity no longer receives subsidy from the taxpayer. Its investment programme and that for channel tunnel services will be determined by normal commercial criteria.

As far as provincial and Network SouthEast are concerned, there is no case for subsidy for investment for which passengers are willing to pay and which meets the normal financial criteria. However, the new objectives for British Rail set out in my right hon. Friend's letter of 19 December to the chairman make it clear that where investment to increase the capacity of the system cannot meet the normal financial criteria, a cost-benefit analysis should be carried out so that a decision can be taken on whether capital grants would be justified on wider social and economic grounds, such as relief of road congestion. The majority of the provincial sector's investment is like for like renewal which is not required to earn any return and is effectively met from revenue grant.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to ensure that, in the period after the channel tunnel is opened and before a high speed rail link is constructed, there is no reduction of local rail services in south London owing to inadequate track capacity.

Mr. Freeman: This is an operational matter for British Rail. British Rail gave an undertaking to Parliament during the passage of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 that existing domestic rail services would not be curtailed in consequence of the need to find capacity for through channel tunnel services. I understand that British Rail stands by its undertaking.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the construction of the road links to the channel tunnel, an assessment has been included for the cost of increased congestion and accidents resulting from greater volumes of traffic on other roads.

Mr. Atkins: The assessment of all trunk road schemes includes an appraisal which takes account of costs associated with delays—that is congestion, accidents and changes in vehicle operating costs, for the road in question and the surrounding network.

Assessments have been made of the extra traffic expected to arise from the opening of the channel tunnel. This extra traffic is expected to be quite small when compared with the forecast growth of traffic generally. For appropriate schemes, such as those on the M20, relevant channel-related traffic has been added to predictions of general traffic growth.

Disabled People (Railway Station Access)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with British Rail the provision of station access for disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: The provision of facilities for disabled people at stations is the responsibility of British Rail. They pursue an active policy of making rail travel as accessible as possible to all who wish to use it. I shall be meeting the board's adviser on disability on 26 June.

Traffic Area

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has reached any decisions regarding the future of the Traffic Area organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Extensive consultations have been held with interested parties about the future number and pattern of Traffic Area offices and Traffic Area boundaries.

In view of the reducing workload for the organisation, I have decided that the Traffic Area offices in London, Nottingham and Newcastle should be closed, and that the following changes should be made to the present Traffic Area boundaries:

The North Eastern Traffic Area will be extended to include Nottinghamshire and will be administered from the existing Traffic Area office in Leeds.

The North Western Traffic Area will be extended to include the whole of Derbyshire and will be administered from the existing Traffic Area office in Manchester.

The Eastern Traffic Area will lose Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire and will be extended to include Buckinghamshire, Hertfordshire and the whole of Essex. It will be administered from the existing Traffic Area office in Cambridge.

The Western Traffic Area will be extended to include Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Hampshire and the Isle of Wight and will be administered from the existing Traffic Area office in Bristol.

The remainder of the present South Eastern Traffic Area will be combined with the remainder of the Metropolitan Traffic Area to form a new Traffic Area consisting of London, Surrey, Kent and Sussex. The new area will be administered from the existing Traffic Area office in Eastbourne.

There will be no changes to the West Midlands, South Wales or Scottish Traffic Areas and offices.

These changes will yield worthwhile savings and improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the organisation as a whole.

I have been particularly concerned to create opportunities for staff in the offices being closed. I have agreed that staff in the Traffic Area offices at Newcastle and Nottingham will be given the opportunity, so far as practicable, to transfer to the new posts being created in those cities by the Driving Standards Agency.

The Department will consult those concerned about the implementation of these changes and the transitional arrangements. We will aim to complete the bulk of the work by the middle of 1991.

As required under sections 3(2) and (4) of the Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981 my right hon. Friend will in due course lay an order before the House setting out the Traffic Area boundary changes.

A1/M1

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he now expects that each stage of the A1/M1 road in Northamptonshire and Cambridgeshire will be opened;

(2) when he expects to let the contract for each of the remaining stages of the A1/M1 road in Northamptonshire and Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Atkins: The following is the information requested. Start of work on contracts 2, 3, 5(N), 8 and 9 is dependent upon the outcome of outstanding statutory procedures.

	Actual Start of works	Programmed Start of works	Programmed completion
Contract 1: Catthorpe Interchange:	February 1990	—	Summer 1990

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much expenditure was envisaged under the Government's expenditure plans in each of the years from 1988-89 to 1992-93 on housing action trusts; how much expenditure has been incurred to date; and what are the latest estimates of likely expenditure over the current and next two financial years on housing action trusts.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details of planned expenditure were given in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper (Cm 288-11). These were revised in the 1990 public expenditure White Paper (Cm 1008) in the light of the Housing Act 1988 requirement for tenants to be balloted. No expenditure has been incurred so far.

Radioactivity (United Kingdom Coast)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Greenpeace concerning radioactivity around the United Kingdom coast.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has received no such representations from Greenpeace this year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make an order under section 106 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 confirming the charge caps on those local authorities which neither accepted the caps he proposed nor put forward alternative amounts within the statutory period of 28 days of their being designated for capping.

Mr. Chris Patten: I cannot make an order under section 106 of the 1988 Act unless a draft of it has been laid before and approved by resolution of the House of Commons. I have today laid before the House a draft section 106 order confirming the caps of the three authorities which did not respond to the caps which I proposed. As required by the statute, the amount of the cap is the same as that which I proposed for each of the authorities concerned. The authorities and the caps are as follows:

	£	Implied reduction in budget £ million	£ per adult
Basildon	23,700,000	4·2	35
Bristol	56,600,000	7·6	26
Doncaster	178,500,000	11·6	53

This will be welcomed by the charge payers concerned.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities and other interested bodies regarding (a) the new requirement for debt payments from capital receipts and (b) advanced leasing arrangements.

Mr. Chope: Since publication in July 1988 of the Government's proposals for a new system of local authority capital finance my Department has received numerous representations from local authorities and other interested bodies on many aspects of the new system. No detailed analysis is available of all the points raised.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority, the cost of collecting the community charge per individual.

Mr. Chope: I have today arranged for the available information on budgeted costs for 1990-91, as shown on returns made by local authorities, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the overall increase in rateable values in the 1990 rating valuation list as compared with the rateable values previously in use for the categories of (a) shops, (b) factories, (c) hotels and boarding houses, (d) offices and (e) mines and (i) in total for England and (ii) by economic regions.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Revaluation factors indicating the increase in rateable values shown in the lists deposited with local authorities on 20 December 1989 for the property types requested are given in the table.

Region	Property type Shops	Factories	Hotels and boarding houses	Offices	Mines
Northern	8·89	5·31	12·75	6·69	11·16

South West	11·10	7·18	10·90	9·80	5·96
West Midlands	7·22	4·53	12·91	6·47	18·22
North West	8·36	5·17	12·31	6·61	14·59
England	9·52	6·10	12·85	7·47	16·81

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the overall increase or decrease in the total rates paid by non-domestic rate payers in each local authority in England, by authority, between 1989-90 and 1990-91 (a) including the effects of transitional arrangements and (b) excluding the effects of transitional arrangements.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Estimates of the information requested by my hon. Friend, based on the rateable values shown in the lists deposited with local authorities on 20 December, have been placed in the Library today.

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the relationship of community charge to rates in both gross and net terms in each band of equivalent net income in (a) pounds per week and (b) as a proportion of net income in each band of equivalent income in 1990-91.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 June 1990]: The table provides the information requested on the same basis as the figures placed in the Library on 15 February 1990. Equivalent income has been calculated using the McClements scale factors.

Ranges of 1989-90 equivalent net household income (£ per week)

1. Rates are 1989-90 actuals.
2. Community charges are 1990-91 settlement assumed charges.
3. Equivalent net household income is calculated using the McClements scale.

Double-Glazing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning proposals to make double-glazing a requirement in the planning of all new houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Double-glazing is one of the thermal insulation measures which can be used to satisfy the requirements relating to the conservation of fuel and power in the amended Building Regulations which came into force on 1 April 1990. My Department receives many representations concerning the conservation of energy in new houses and some of these call for the installation of double glazing to be made a mandatory requirement under the Building Regulations. But we consider that the designer and builder should be given the flexibility to choose the most appropriate insulation to suit the particular circumstances.

Right to Buy

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to review the right-to-buy provisions of the Housing Act 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The right-to-buy legislation is kept under constant review; there have been a number of changes to it since its introduction in 1980.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in 1990 prices the level of funding for the Leeds Development Corporation for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Moynihan: The actual amount of grant in aid provided to Leeds development corporation was £2·743 million in 1988-89 and £8·75 million in 1989-90. £14 million is available in 1990-91.

Langland Bay

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available the results of the epidemiological study carried out in 1989 at Langland bay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Today I have placed in the Library copies of a comprehensive report prepared by the Water Research Centre on the findings of studies to test methodologies for assessing the risks of contracting illnesses from sea bathing. The report is based on research carried out at Langland bay last summer with the assistance of Swansea district council.

Two types of study were carried out. The first study involved interviewing bathers who were on the beach of their own volition, and obtaining information of any perceived symptoms by means of a questionnaire and, subsequently, by telephone.

The second study used two groups of healthy volunteers. One group was asked to swim in water meeting EC standards while the other group did not swim. The volunteers were examined medically both before and after the day at the beach. Ethical clearance was obtained for this work which is the first of its kind to examine participants medically so as to provide an objective assessment of symptoms.

Water quality during the studies was good and well within European standards. As found in previous surveys higher proportions of bathers reported ear and throat symptoms than non-bathers but unexpectedly fewer bathers reported gastro-enteritis than non-bathers. No significant association was found between reported symptoms and clinical diagnosis.

The studies demonstrate that both approaches with minor modification appear capable of yielding statistically reliable conclusions if carried out at a larger scale.

The contract with the Water Research Centre will be extended to provide for further studies in the coming summer.

Insulation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of (a) dwellings completed under the energy conservation programme and (b) grants paid under the homes insulation scheme in (i) the London borough of Camden and (ii) the London borough of Islington for each year from 1979, including the current year so far.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 12 June 1990]: Figures for the number of grants paid under the homes insulation scheme and the number of local authority dwellings benefitting from works under the energy conservation programme are published in "Local Housing Statistics" (Nos. 66, 70, 74, 78, 82, 87 and 90) for the years 1979 to 1988. In 1989 the London borough of Camden reported two grants paid and Islington reported nil.

Homelessness

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current rate of growth of homelessness in the United Kingdom per annum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 15 June 1990]: Between 1988 and 1989 the estimated number of households accepted by housing authorities under homelessness legislation increased by about 8 per cent. It should be stressed that there are people for whom accommodation has been found.

City Grants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total allocation for the current financial year of money for city grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The total resources available for city grant in 1990-91 are £49 million, including expenditure on previously approved urban development grant and urban regeneration grant schemes. Payments made in any year relate mainly to projects approved in previous years.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses, and of what type and anticipated rents, he has requested to be incorporated into the West End Development scheme application for city grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 June 1990]: It is not our practice, for reasons of commercial confidentiality, to reveal details of developers' proposals.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what stage has been reached in the consideration of the application for city grant by 3Ds Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 June 1990]: 3Ds Ltd has submitted details of its proposals for the West End development scheme and discussions continue with the Department on what further information may be needed.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the largest grant so far made of city grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The largest city grant approved so far is £6·3 million for a project at St. Helens to reclaim a derelict and contaminated 50 acre site.

M2 Widening

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the proposed widening of the M2 motorway in Rochester, Kent; and what was his response.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 June 1990]: None.

Hawkshurst Moor (Coal Mine)

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received the inspector's report on the planning inquiry on British Coal's Hawkshurst moor proposal for a new coal mine in Berkswell near Coventry.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Yes. The report has recently been received and I shall announce a decision in due course.

County Hall, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make an announcement on the future of the County hall, London SE1.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 21 May Official Report, Volume 173, column 28.

Football (Arrests)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the 92 Football League clubs together with the total season's attendance for football league matches, total number of arrests made at such matches and the number of arrests as a percentage of the total attendance, for the seasons 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the total attendance at Football League matches in England and Wales, the total number of arrests at such matches, and the number of arrests as a percentage of the total attendance, accurate to four decimal places, for the seasons 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply and will do so shortly, when figures for the 1989-90 season become available from the Association of Chief Police Officers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

VAT

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of value added tax refund claims under Customs and Excise notice No. 719, "Refund of VAT to Self Builders", processed during the fiscal year 1989-90.

Mr. Ryder: The total number of claims processed under this relief during the fiscal year 1989-90 was 9,817.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new businesses registered for value added tax in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 June 1990]: On the basis of Customs and Excise data on registrations, the number of businesses registered for value added tax in the 12 months ended 31 March 1990 was 266,084.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 11 June, Official Report, column 21, if he will publish a table showing the number of loans made by the European investment bank to companies and to other bodies, respectively, in the United Kingdom in each of the past five years; and if he will further indicate how many of these loans, in each year, were guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government and by other bodies, respectively.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 June 1990]: A table listing this information follows:

Table: Number of EIB loans, per year since 1985, to companies and other bodies, with breakdown by Her Majesty's Government or other guarantee.

	Number of loans
	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
Companies
with Her Majesty's Government guarantee	3	5	3	3	0
with other form of guarantee	10	16	6	23	47
Sub-total	13	21	9	26	47
Other bodies
with Her Majesty's Government guarantee	8	16	16	1	0
with other form of guarantee	27	25	34	1	0
Sub-total	35	41	50	2	0
Total number of loans	48	62	59	28	47

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will discuss with the Governments of France and West Germany the means of continuing taxonomic support for teams working in Malaysia and Cameroon in the light of staff reductions at the natural history museum;

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications of reductions in the Heteroptera section of the natural history museum for work sponsored by his Department (a) in Surinam on shield-bugs as transmitters of agricultural diseases and (b) coccid research and its agricultural implications for United Kingdom supported agricultural development programmes.

Mrs. Chalker: I am investigating the possible implications for our programmes of the planned staff reductions at the natural history museum and will give a full reply as soon as I have the information.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power Stations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what decommissioning cost the Government have approved for British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.'s present plant; and if he will give a breakdown of this expenditure as between the plants at Sellafield, Springfields and Capenhurst.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of the cost of decommissioning British Nuclear Fuels plc's plant are matters for the company.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.'s investment in the next 10 years is planned to be financed by debt; and whether this debt will be guaranteed by the Government.

Mr. Baldry: I understand from British Nuclear Fuels plc that it is envisaged that between 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. of the company's currently projected capital investment programme over the next 10 years will be financed by additional borrowing. The majority of these loans are likely to be supported by Government guarantee.

THORP

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the latest expected cost of the THORP reprocessing plant at Sellafield in 1989-90 prices; and whether this capital sum is inclusive of the costs of waste effluent discharge plant, and any other ancillary constructions that arise as a consequence of building the THORP plant;

(2) what is the capital cost of planned investment in reprocessing and waste management at Sellafield other than that which is required for the THORP plant.

Mr. Baldry: The expected capital cost of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield is some £1·8 billion making due allowance for future inflation. This capital cost includes the receipt and storage facility and an appropriate share of the facilities for converting highly active wastes into vitrified form. The other facilities used in association with THORP include storage ponds that have already been constructed, and facilities for the treatment of less active wastes and effluents. The capital costs of these supporting facilities are estimated at some £0·9 billion.

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy during his visit to North America this month, what proportion of his time he intends to devote to the promotion of the nuclear and oil industries, and what proportion of time to the energy conservation and renewable fuels industries.

Mr. Wakeham: I visited Canada and the United States from 5 June to 13 June. My visit to Canada was mainly to support the United Kingdom offshore oil and gas industry in its attempts to win business in Atlantic Canada, particularly offshore Newfoundland. I met senior members of the provincial government and oil industry representatives. In Washington, my talks were concerned primarily with energy policy in the context of climate change; that concerns all our energy-related industries. I signed a memorandum of understanding on collaboration in energy research and development, covering non-nuclear energy R and D, with Admiral Watkins, United States Secretary for Energy. While in Washington I opened the offices of BNFL Inc.—the United States subsidiary of British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Electricity Prices, South-West

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the increase in the price of electricity supplied to domestic householders by the South Western electricity board in each of the last five years.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for South Western Electricity.

Diatoms

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research his Department has undertaken into the importance of diatoms in maintaining the world's atmosphere, through their production of oxygen.

Mr. Peter Morrison: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the effect of the reductions made in the diatom and palaeo-botany sections of the natural history museum on the international deep sea drilling project and research into petroleum and other fossil fuels.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department no longer maintains an interest in the international deep sea drilling project. I do not believe that our interest in the other matters will be affected by the reductions at the natural history museum referred to.

PRIME MINISTER

United Nations

Q10. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will visit the United Nations for the general assembly in September.

European Parliament

Q61. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit the European Parliament.

The Prime Minister: During the British presidency of the Community in the second half of 1992.

Commercial Fishermen

Q146. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to provide compensation for commercial fishermen when they are prevented from landing and selling their catches because of health requirements initiated by local authorities or Her Majesty's Government; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The recent warnings against the consumption of shellfish from the north-east coast of Britain were in response to the threat to public health posed by the natural and temporary phenomenon of algae blooms. Such blooms have been known to occur periodically along this stretch of the coast for many years.

It is in the interests of fishermen that the public is properly protected. Their present and future receipts depend upon public confidence in the quality of British fish products.

Global Warming

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters she has received in the past four weeks on the dangers of global warming, ozone depletion and associated matters; and if she will make a statement on any further initiative the Government is considering taking with regard to these issues.

The Prime Minister: I have received numerous letters on both these and other environmental issues in the last four weeks. I announced on 25 May 1990 the part that the United Kingdom is ready to play in international action to tackle global warming. At the meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol in London next week we will urge all countries to join the protocol and press for strengthening of its terms. We will be publishing a White Paper this autumn on the whole range of environmental issues.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what discussion she has had with President Gorbachev on article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty during her visit to the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister: The question of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty did not arise during my talks with Mr. Gorbachev, but our discussions included a number of arms control issues such as the talks on conventional forces in Europe (CFE) and the conference on security and co-operation in Europe (CSCE).

North Sea

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Prime Minister what actions have so far been taken by the United Kingdom to develop a programme to end sewage sludge dumping, promised at the North Sea Conference at the Hague on 7 to 8 March 1990.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked the water companies concerned to submit to him by the end of the year their detailed plans and programmes of work for phasing out disposal of sludge to sea.

Film Industry

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals she has for the British film industry; and if she will make a statement on her proposals to meet leaders of the film industry.

The Prime Minister: I met leading figures from the film production industry on Friday 15 June to discuss their proposals for taking advantage of the opportunities now facing the industry. The Government agreed to provide £5 million over the next three years to provide pump-priming finance to support European co-production; the Department of Trade and Industry would set up a working party to examine the structure of the industry and how to attract greater private sector finance into film production, and to report back in the autumn; the industry would explore what changes it suggests to the tax regime for film production and report to Treasury Ministers over the next few months; we would continue discussions in Europe on how best to support the film production industry, notably through the media programme; we would study proposals from the industry for a films commission to improve the promotion of British films in the United Kingdom and overseas.

Islington (Official Visit)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the involvement of Vallin Pollen International in the arrangements for her official visit to Islington.

The Prime Minister: None for which the Government have responsibility.

German Unification

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the procedures for incorporating a united Germany within the EEC; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I expect this subject to be discussed at the European Council in Dublin on 25 to 26 June.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals she has to promote (a) indentification programmes for scientific and popular use, (b) the development and management of the European plant data base and (c) the British plant data base and other research based at the natural history museum of relevance to the study of climatic change.

The Prime Minister: These activities flow from the priorities and objectives set out in the natural history museum's corporate plan 1990-95, which was unanimously approved by the museum's trustees in April. The Government increased the museum's grant-in-aid by 16·5 per cent. this year to over £25 million.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 June.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 19 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including the Director General of the International Atomic Agency and the Foreign Ministers of Angola, Bangladesh and Somali. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with Mr. Attali, president-elect of the new European Bank for Reconstruction and Development who has his headquarters in London.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Film Production

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Government will provide initial financial support as seed money to enterprises to simulate the growth of transnational film production, training and distribution within Europe.

Mr. Forth: We announced on Friday 15 June that the Government would provide £5 million over three years to provide pump-priming finance to help support European co-productions. We also announced that we would pursue discussions in Europe on how best to support the film production industry, notably through the MEDIA programme. The Economic Community's proposals for this programme include assistance for trans-national training and distribution.

Enterprise Scheme

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies in Lancashire have been helped by the enterprise scheme; and if he will provide a statistical breakdown on the types of help provided.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Assistance to companies in Lancashire under the enterprise initiative since its inception in January 1988 comprises:

Consultancy Initiative
Business Reviews conducted 1,313
Consultancies commissioned 1,288
(of which completed as at 31 May 1990) 419
Regional Initiative
Regional Selective Assistance: 143 projects assisted; grants paid £14·39 million, 2,685 jobs created and 823 jobs safeguarded.
Regional Enterprise Grants (wef 1 April 1988)
For Investment: offers made: 47 (£354,043)
For Innovation: offers made: 6 (£140,815)
Research and Technology
SMART awards: 1988 Round, Stage 1:1
1989 Round, Stage 2:1

Enterprise and Education
The three advisers in Lancashire have contacted 1,226 local employers, resulting in 3,893 offers of work experience for pupils and 716 secondment opportunities for teachers.
Export Initiative
Approximately 1,000 companies are in regular contact with DTI-NW staff providing export assistance. Four hundred and twenty-one company representatives attended 13 export-related seminars.

EC Legislation

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the short title of each of the 86 legislative Acts for which European Community member states must take national implementing measures by 31 December 1989; and what action each state has taken by 1 June in relation to each.

Mr. Redwood: The short titles of the 86 legislative acts for which European Community member states must take national implementing measures by 31 December 1989 are set out in the answer to your question of 9 January 1990, Official Report columns 600-8. Information on the action taken by each member state by the end of June is not available. However, the latest report on the implementation of single market measures is to be found in the European Commission's fifth progress report on completion of the internal market. This lists the measures due for implementation by end February 1990, and sets out the action taken by each member state. I am glad to say that the report shows that the United Kingdom has the best record on implementation, with only nine measures out of 90 remaining unimplemented. I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Instant Coffee

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to complete its report on instant coffee prices.

Mr. Redwood: The Commission has been asked by the Director General of Fair Trading to report on the supply of soluble coffee in the United Kingdom by 8 January 1991.

Limited Liability Status

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions a request for registration as a company with limited liability status was rejected in each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood: The number of applications which were rejected in 1987, 1988 and 1989 were respectively 11,300 (estimated), 9,846 and 7,953.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the amount of regional assistance in 1989 per head for (a) Scotland, (b) north-east England, (c) north-west England, (d) the west midlands, (e) east midlands, (f) south-west England and (g) south-east England.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The amount of regional preferential assistance per head in the most recent year for which figures are available is as follows:

Expenditure per head of civilian working population, 1988-89

(a) Scotland	61·4
England—Regions
(b) Northern	92·3
(c) North West	27·7
(d) West Midlands	9·6
(e) East Midlands	4·5
(f) South West	7·0
(g) South East	nil

Export Credits

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning his Department's adoption of the portfolio management system in assessing the Export Credits Guarantee Department cover.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 June 1990]: My right hon. Friend has received many representations from both Parliament and the exporting community about ECGD's portfolio management system. We will be giving these representations careful consideration before the portfolio management system is introduced.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the current premiums charged by the export credit agencies of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, including the premiums levied by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The export credit agencies of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development members do not as a rule publish the premiums which they charge. Premium rates are determined on a case-by-case basis by most agencies. Although the agencies periodically exchange details of their premium rates for individual countries, this is done on a strictly confidential basis. It is not practicable to try to list all the premium rates of all the OECD countries.

Industrial Development

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions since 1980 expenditure has been incurred under section 3(2)(a) of the Industry Act 1980 to acquire securities of a company; and if he will give, for the last five occasions, the name of the company concerned, the sum of money involved, the date of the payment and the nature of the security acquired.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 15 June 1990]: Since 1980 section 3(2)(a) of the Industry Act 1980 has been used to purchase securities on 13 occasions. The last five occasions were:

Company	Sum £ million	Date of payment	Nature of Securities
BL plc	80	17 December 1982	Ordinary shares of 50p each
BL plc	110	28 March 1983	Ordinary shares of 50p each
BL plc	90	1 November 1983	Ordinary shares of 50p each
Rover Group plc	680	30 March 1987	Ordinary shares of 50p each
Rover Group plc	547	12 August 1988	Special security ("the Instrument")

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will provide a list showing those members of the Financial Reporting Council who have any connections with the accountancy firms or their successors sued by the Government for negligence.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 June 1990]: So far as I am aware, none of the members of the Financial Reporting Council has any such connection.

WALES

Special Educational Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many children in each local education authority in Wales were placed in a non-residential special school following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year;

(2) how many children in each local education authority in Wales were placed in a special unit following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year;

(3) how many children in each local education authority remained in mainstream schools following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year;

(4) how many children in each local education authority in Wales were placed in a residential special school following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No information is held centrally on the number of children who are newly statemented each year by type of placement.

Dyslexia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he intends to undertake to help dyslexic children in the schools of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The benefits of the national curriculum, which has now been introduced into schools, will apply to all children, including, as far as is practicable, those with dyslexia.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many dyslexic children are educated in each of the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many specialist teachers of dyslexic children there are in each of the local education authorities of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally. The Education Act 1981 abolished the categorisation of children by particular disability.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many children aged under 16 years received free eye tests in each county in Wales (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90;

(2) how many people on family credit or income support received free eye tests in each district health authority area in Wales in each quarter of 1988-89 and in each quarter of 1989-90;

(3) what percentage of children aged under 16 years received free eye tests in each county in Wales (a) in each quarter of 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: Estimates of numbers of sight tests for different types of patient are based on a 2 per cent. sample. This sample is not sufficient to make robust estimates by patient types within county or district health authority areas.

Housing

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he intends to take with respect to the problem of housing in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Department has announced a number of initiatives directed to the problems of housing in Wales. In particular, last autumn we announced for the current year a 40 per cent. increase in the provision for Housing for Wales, a 15 per cent., increase in the gross local authority provision for housing and generous provision to support home renovation grants. Details of current policies and plans for housing programmes are given in chapter 4 of "Public Expenditure in Wales: 1990-91 to 1992-93 A Commentary by the Welsh Office."

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 June, on bathing beaches, if he will extend the testing of water quality to all bathing beaches in Wales by including those which are not currently subject to European Community designation.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the National Rivers Authority.

GP Budgets

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners or general practitioner practices have expressed an interest in becoming practice budget holders within each authority in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Health authority	Number of general practitioners	Number of GP practices
Clwyd	34	6
East Dyfed	15	4
Gwent	12	3
Gwynedd	6	2
Mid Glamorgan	59	10
Pembrokeshire	11	2
Powys	14	3
South Glamorgan	26	5
West Glamorgan	47	9

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the names of the general practitioners or practices which have expressed an interest in becoming practice budget holders in Wales.

Mr. Grist: It would not be right to reveal the names of individual general practitioners or practices which have expressed an interest in practice fund holding. There is in any event no commitment on either side at this stage.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners and general practitioner practices will be eligible to become practice budget holders within each health authority in Wales.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner practices are now eligible to become budget holders; how many have expressed an interest in budget holding; if he will name those practices.

Mr. Grist: It is not possible to place a figure on the number of practices meeting the eligibility criteria for fund-holding status. While each practice fund will require a minimum of 9,000 patients, smaller practices are enabled to group together to attain this number. In addition to its patient list size, each practice will need to demonstrate its ability to manage a practice fund.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Family Law

Mr. French: To ask the Attorney-General if he will introduce legislation to provide for indexing of maintenance payments in divorce proceedings to the retail price index.

Mr. Patten [pursuant to the Attorney-General's answer, 2 February 1990, c. 400]: Our review of the wider arrangements for assessing collecting and enforcing maintenance payments is still in progress. It is, however, clear that measures to improve the ability of the courts to ensure that payments ordered are received, are practicable and desirable. We accordingly intend to bring forward legislative proposals when an opportunity permits which would give the courts in England and Wales power to prescribe the method by which maintenance payments are made and to order the attachment of earnings without having to await evidence of arrears or default.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Turkey

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Turkish Government on behalf of prisoners of conscience on hunger strike in Turkish prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We understand that the hunger strike referred to by the hon. Member ended earlier this month.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations through the European Community for the repeal of articles 141 and 142 of the Turkish penal code; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Turkish Government are aware that we expect them to adhere to the human rights conventions to which they are a party. They are now actively reviewing the future of articles 141 and 142.

Western European Union

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been done to examine the potential of the Western European Union as a vehicle for assessing possible threats to member countries and for research into the prospects of an all-European security area in respect of (a) defining a sufficiency threshold in defence matters, (b) analysing the concept of shared security and (c) developing means of arbitration, confidence-building measures and disarmament.

Mr. Waldegrave: We believe that NATO remains the right place in which to assess threats to WEU member states. The question of future security arrangements in Europe, together with arms control and confidence-building issues, have been extensively discussed within the WEU. The need for sufficiency rule is part of the western position in the CFE negotiations.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government will be making to the Western European Union Assembly's proposals that the Western European Union Council should (a) use the modified Brussels treaty as a juridical basis for the presence of forces of member states on the territory of other member states and (b) convene regular meetings of chiefs of staff of member countries to examine European armaments requirements.

Mr. Waldegrave: Formal responses to recommendations in reports of the Western European Union assembly are the responsibility of the WEU permanent council. We have no plans to make a separate response.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the date on which a member country can use the right fixed by article XII of the Western European Union treaty to give notice to the depository government of its desire to cease being a party thereto.

Mr. Waldegrave: After 25 August 1998—that is, 50 years after the date on which the Brussels treaty entered into force—each of the high contracting parties has the right, under article XII of the modified treaty, to cease to be a party thereto, provided that it has previously given one year's notice of denunciation to the Belgian Government.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to use the Western European Union to guarantee the permanency of member countries' frontiers and to ensure respect for the commitments entered into by its members in the context of agreements limiting forces or armaments or the non-production of certain weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: The inviolability of the frontiers of WEU member countries among others is affirmed by the Helsinki final act, of which all WEU member countries are signatories. We are confident that all WEU member countries respect, and will continue to respect, their international commitments.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the consequences of a devolution of the Federal Republic of Germany's commitments to a unified Germany for the application of the Western European Union treaty with regard to (a) co-operation between the Western European Union and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation under article IV, (b) military assistance under article V, specified in paragraph III.4 of the Hague platform, (c) article VII and (d) implementation of article VIII, paragraphs 2 and 4 and protocols Nos. II, III and IV.

Mr. Waldegrave: We remain in close touch with the Federal German Government and other allies on these and other aspects of future European security.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on how many telephones were disconnected for non-payment in each of the last five years on the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am told that records go back only as far as October 1989 when the new telephone network came into operation. Thirty telephones were cut off in that month. The number fell sharply in ensuing months and in May only two were cut off.

German Reunification

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been done to ensure that countries participating in the conference on the external aspects of German reunification are fully informed of the guarantees offered by the modified Brussels treaty for the security of both Germany and its neighbouring countries and for the establishment of a new peaceful and secure order in Europe; and what has been the response of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Waldegrave: The modified Brussels treaty is a public document. We are not aware of any recent Soviet statements relating to it.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it is Her Majesty's Government's policy that the commitments entered into by the Federal Republic of Germany under the modified Brussels treaty shall also be valid for a unified Germany.

Mr. Waldegrave: We support the principle, mentioned in the Helsinki final act, that participating states have a right to be or not to be parties to treaties of alliance. We welcome the FRG's intention to go on playing a full part in western security arrangements. We support the expressed view of both German Governments that a unified Germany should be a member of NATO. The two German Governments have yet to express their views on WEU membership.

Hong Kong (Vietnamese Refugees)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the status determination procedures used to decide whether or not Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong shall be returned to Vietnam; and how many and what percentage of people submitted to such procedures have been (a) screened in as refugees and permitted to stay and (b) screened out, so that they must return to Vietnam.

Mr. Waldegrave: Hong Kong's status determination procedures were designed, in conjunction with UNHCR, to apply the criteria of the 1951 convention and the 1967 protocol relating to the status of refugees as follows:

(a) all new arrivals are briefed on the screening process on arrival in Hong Kong;

(b) under the Statement of Understanding between the UNHCR and the Hong Kong Government, the UNHCR accepts responsibility for providing legal advice and assistance to asylum seekers at all stages of the screening and review procedure. UNHCR has unrestricted access to the asylum seekers for this purpose;

(c) asylum seekers are interviewed by immigration department staff to record their personal data and their claim to refugee status. The interviews follow a questionaire designed in agreement with UNHCR. Interpreters are provided by the Hong Kong Government. Legal counsellors of the UNHCR have unrestricted access to all screening interviews;

(d) the first instance decision on the claim to refugee status is notified to all persons after screening. If refugee status is granted, the person concerned is moved immediately to a refugee camp to await resettlement. If refugee status is not granted, the person concerned is advised that he or she has a right to seek review of the decision;

(e) at the same time as the asylum seeker is notified of the first instance decision, a copy of the immigration department file, including a record of the interview and the reasons for the decision, is given to the UNHCR, with a separate copy to the legal consultants who on behalf of the UNHCR will assist asylum seekers in applying for a review of the decision. An asylum seeker must apply for review to the refugee status review board within 28 days of being notified of the first instance decision;

(f) the refugee status review board is headed by a former judge, and comprises four panels of two members each, drawn from both the civil service and the community at large. Their task is to review the facts of the case and the immigration department's decision, in the light of the asylum seeker's claim as recorded at the original interview, and any further representations made to the review board. The board may, where it considers it necessary, interview either the asylum seeker or the immigration officer conducting the interview;

(g) the decision of the review board on the application for review is notified to the asylum seeker as soon as possible after it is made.

As at 11 June 1990, the director of immigration had completed screening for 13,647 people, of whom 1,460 were screened in (10·7 per cent.) and 12,187 screened out (89·3 per cent.). The RSRB has considered 9,872 cases. The director of immigration's decision was upheld in 9,026 cases and overturned in 846. This gives an overall post-appeal total of 2,306 screened in (16·9 per cent.).

EC Enlargement

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning further enlargement of the European Community.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received no formal representations concerning further enlargement of the EC in recent months.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek compensation from the Government of the Republic of Ireland for the damage caused to the economy of the United Kingdom as a result of the 48-hour restriction on shoppers visiting the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. But we are at present considering the implications of the European Court of Justice judgment in the 48-hour rule case and whether other action may be necessary.

Poland

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom is a signatory to the treaty setting out Poland's present frontiers; and whether Poland's western frontier will be discussed within the four plus two talks on German unification.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Potsdam protocol contains provisions relating to Poland's borders, but the United Kingdom is not a party to any of Poland's treaties with its neighbours concerning borders. The Polish Foreign Minister has been invited to attend the two plus four ministerial meeting in Paris on 17 July, when borders will be discussed.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Identity Cards

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which Council of Europe states identity cards are (a) compulsory and (b) voluntary.

Mr. John Patten: Identity cards are compulsory in Belgium, Cyprus, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Iceland, Luxembourg, Malta, Spain and Turkey; and voluntary in Austria, France, Italy, Liechtenstein, Portugal and Switzerland.

There is no system of identity cards in Denmark, the Republic of Ireland, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden or the United Kingdom.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which European Community states identity cards are machine readable; and how much information can be contained on the cards of the states which use machine-readable cards.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the identity cards issued in the Federal Republic of Germany are machine readable. They contain details of the bearer's name, birth, description, address and nationality, together with the date and place of issue of the card, its number and its expiry date.

Data Protection

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which countries have acceded to the Council of Europe convention on data protection.

Mr. Mellor: Austria, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Ireland, Luxembourg, Norway, Spain, Sweden and the United Kingdom.

Police Statistics

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police force areas in rank order according to the number of notifiable offences of violence against the person per 100,000 population in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the following table:

Football Matches

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the total charge made to the 92 Football League clubs for police attendance at league matches in England and Wales during the 1989-90 season; and what is the change, in percentage terms, from the 1988-89 figure.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on charges made to Football League clubs by the police are not collected centrally by the Government. I understand that the Football Trust has published a figure of £4,136,000 for the season 1988-89, but has not yet published a figure for the season 1989-90.

Immigration

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the application for British citizenship, Home Office reference S444754/5(S), is still unresolved; when he expects a decision to be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to make a decision in this case soon.

National Lottery Bill

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received concerning the National Lottery Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Between 18 April, when the current private Member's Bill to make provision for a national lottery for the benefit of the arts, sport and the environment was introduced, and 18 June, we received a total of six letters about the Bill, all from the same member of the public, who in that period also copied to us other correspondence about his support for the measure.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 12 June to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North, what consideration he has given to Commander Monk's speech on child abuse; and if he will make a statement on action which he will institute in the Department arising from it.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering Commander Monk's speech and will take his views into account in the development of our strategy for the treatment of sex offenders.

British Refugee Council

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what public assistance is given to the British Refugee Council.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office has agreed to pay grant of £685,400 to the refugee council in the current financial year. The council also receives significant income from other public sector sources including the employment training scheme, the European social fund and the hostel deficit grant system.

Livestock Thefts

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes were reported in 1988 and 1989 involving the theft of farm livestock.

Mr. John Patten: The information collected centrally does not enable thefts of farm livestock to be distinguished from other thefts.

Mrs. Pat Dale

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the result of police investigations into the claim of Mrs. Pat Dale of Middlesex that she and her family had been subjected to harassment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 June 1990]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that all incidents reported by Mrs. Dale to the police have been fully investigated. The police have found no evidence to substantiate the allegations or on which to base further inquiries.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many children in each local education authority were placed in a special unit following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year;

(2) how many children in each local education authority were placed in a residential special school following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year;

(3) how many children in each local education authority were placed in a non-residential special school following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year;

(4) how many children in each local education authority remained in mainstream schools following the completion of a statement of educational needs for each year since April 1983; and what this is expressed as a percentage of (a) the total number of children with statements in the local education authority and (b) the total number of statements made by the local education authority in that year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not available in the form requested.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total cost to public funds of the Student Loans Company to date; and what is his estimate of the total cost for the whole of the current and the next financial year.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend will make a statement shortly on the administrative costs of the student loans scheme.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assistance his Department or the Student Loans Company has enlisted from consultants in (a) management, (b) information technology, (c) advertising, (d) marketing and (e) public relations, in respect of the student loans scheme in the current year; and at what cost.

Mr. Jackson: Relationships between the Student Loans Company and its suppliers are commercially confidential. The Department has not separately received consultancy advice on the student loans scheme in the current year.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will estimate how long after application students can expect to wait until they receive a loan from the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company's objective will be to make the great majority of loan payments within 21 days of receipt of correctly completed eligibility certificates and application forms. The company's success in meeting that objective will depend upon the speed with which students return the loan agreement forms which they will be sent once their application forms have been processed.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what communications will take place between the Students Loans Company and the bank branch holding an individual student loan applicant's current account; and for what purpose.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company will make loan payments into students' bank or building society accounts by electronic transfer, through the bankers' automated clearing services and will receive repayments by direct debit from borrowers' accounts. The company will have no other contact with banks or building societies holding students' current accounts.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (a) the banks which have participated in any discussions with the Student Loans Company in the current year, (b) those banks which have not yet participated and (c) those banks which have refused to participate.

Mr. Jackson: Discussions between the Student Loans Company and other financial insitutions are strictly and mutually confidential.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if a student in agreeing to the terms and conditions of a student loan authorises the Student Loans Company to make future searches on their income, via employers and banks.

Mr. Jackson: The terms and conditions of a loan agreement will not authorise the Student Loans Company to investigate borrowers' incomes through their employers or banks. Borrowers wishing to defer repayments will be required to produce evidence that their income falls below 85 per cent. of national average earnings.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultations his Department has had with the National Union of Students in respect of administration of the student loans scheme.

Mr. Jackson: The National Union of Students has been kept informed of developments in the student loans scheme. Officials will be meeting shortly to discuss the scheme.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how the Student Loans Company proposes to ensure that student loan applicants' referees maintain regular contact between the Student Loans Company and the student over the repayment period;

(2) if a student loan applicant who fails to find a referee will be refused a loan.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company will not ask loan applicants to nominate referees. The company will ask applicants to nominate on the applications form two individuals, one of whom should be a relative or guardian, who can be contacts in the event of the company losing touch with the borrower. If the application forms are not fully completed, applicants will not receive a loan.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has yet agreed a system of student certification for the purpose of a student loan application with institutions of higher education.

Mr. Jackson: The duties of academic institutions are set out in regulation 10 of the Education (Student Loans) Regulations, laid before Parliament on 13 June. Representatives of the Student Loans Company and the Education Departments will be holding a nationwide series of meetings with the higher education institutions in the next two weeks to help the institutions prepare for their role in the scheme.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department will be reimbursing the total administrative cost of student certification for the purpose of a student loan application; and if he will estimate that cost in the current and the next financial year.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company will make a payment to academic institutions of £3·50 for each eligibility certificate which is correctly completed on its first submission to the company. The total administrative cost will depend upon the number of students who seek certification of eligibility and on the number of correctly completed certificates.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the itinerary of visits to be undertaken by the three higher education liaison officers appointed by the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Jackson: The role of the academic liaison officers is to help institutions fulfil their responsibilities under the legislation governing the student loans scheme. To that end, the liaison officers have already visited a wide range of institutions; are meeting representatives of institutions at regional meetings in the next two weeks; and will, on request, visit any institution with eligible students.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guarantees have been offered to staff of the Student Loans Company in the event of a change of Government policy on student finance.

Mr. Jackson: None. Staff of the Student Loans Company are employed under arrangements which reflect current practice in the commercial sector.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when students can start to apply for a loan from the Student Loans Company.

Mr. Jackson: Students will be able to apply for a loan as soon as they have been certified as eligible by their academic institution.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when is the deadline for application for a loan from the Student Loans Company; and whether students who apply for a loan which is less than that to which they are entitled can later apply for the remainder.

Mr. Jackson: For the academic year 1990-91, the Student Loans Company will issue loans in respect of loan agreements received by the company by 31 July 1991. Eligible students may make one application for a loan each academic year; they may draw down the loan in up to three instalments.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions the Student Loans Company has had with the clearing banks in respect of the payment and repayment of student loans.

Mr. Jackson: The Student Loans Company will make loan payments and receive repayments through the bankers' automated clearing services. These arrangements have been discussed with the company's bankers.

Mr . Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his latest estimate of student take-up of the student loans scheme.

Mr. Jackson: For planning purposes, the Government continue to assume an 80 per cent. take-up rate of student loans.

Access Funds

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he plans to publish details of how institutions of higher education will administer access funds.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffihs) on 21 May 1990, Official Report, column 46.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will have any power to alter the criteria adopted by an institution of higher education in respect of access fund disbursement.

Mr. Jackson: Provided that an institution of higher education complies with the conditions of payment under which it receives an allocation from the access funds, the determining of criteria to be adopted for the disbursement of money from the funds to students is entirely a matter for the institution itself.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if individual students refuse an access fund award by their institution will be able to appeal against the decision.

Mr. Jackson: Institutions will be entirely responsible for the administration of their share of the access funds including the handling of appeals from individual students.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he will be issuing to institutions of higher education in respect of the disbursement of access funds; and what will be the nature of any such guidance.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 21 May 1990, Official Report, column 46. I understand that the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council will be issuing guidance to the institutions for which they are responsible by the end of June.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if students will have any powers of appeal in respect of the criteria adoped by an institution of higher education for the disbursement of access funds.

Mr. Jackson: It will be for the higher education institutions themselves to decide what criteria to adopt for the disbursement of the access funds and whether to consult their students about those criteria.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he is giving to institutions of higher education in respect of disabled students' needs when access funds are distributed.

Mr. Jackson: The Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council will be responsible for giving guidance to institutions in their sectors on the distribution of the access funds. Paragraph 1 of the conditions of payment of the access funds to the two funding councils (a copy of which was placed in the Library on 21 May) make it clear that physical and other disabilities are among the possible reasons for financial difficulties which the access funds are intended to address.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account will be taken of variations in regional housing costs in respect of the distribution of access funds to institutions of higher education.

Mr. Jackson: It will be for the two funding councils to determine how the access funds are to be distributed to institutions in their sectors. The factors which my right hon. Friend has invited the funding councils to take into account are set out in paragraph 5 of the notes of guidance for the UFC and the PCFC a copy of which was placed in the Library on 21 May. One of the factors is

"the particular needs of students in private accommodation in areas where the cost of accommodation is especially high, eg London and the South East."

Universities and Polytechnics (Funding)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the figures for the revenue and research monies received by each individual university and polytechnic, expressed in terms of funding per student.

Mr. Jackson: Information on universities' incomes and student numbers are contained in tables 1 and 12 respectively of volume 3 "University Statistics—Finance" published by the universities statistical record.

Available data on polytechnic expenditure and students are published by the Department in table D15 of "Statistics of Education—Finance and Awards".

Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

HEALTH

Adoption

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures exist to enable adults, adopted early in life, to make contact with siblings.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Adoption Act 1976 gives adopted adults the right, after counselling where required, to the information which will enable them to obtain a certified copy of their original record of birth. Some adopted people may wish to use this information as a starting point in an effort to trace the whereabouts of their natural relatives and sometimes to contact or meet them. The Registrar-General is usually prepared to note on a person's adoption record that there is a natural relative, including a sibling, who would welcome contact; and, if the adopted person applies for information about his birth record, to tell him about his relative's wishes. The Children Act 1989 provides for an adoption contact register to formalise these arrangements; we plan to implement the Act next year.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the costs of the consultancy management team study of waiting lists in Newcastle, Durham and East Cumbria referred to in the reply given to the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin), Official Report, 20 March, column 555; where such costs are accounted for in national health service budgets; what conclusions this study reached; what actions have been taken as a result; and if he will place a copy of the consultancy team's report in the Library.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Waiting lists in these three districts are among 100 specialty lists being investigated by Inter-Authority Comparisons and Consultancy (IACC) in 1990-91. The costs are not separately identified by district, but amount to £420,000 for the national programme of studies and are met centrally from the waiting list fund.

The aim of the studies is to investigate why waiting times for treatment are so long, and to draw up contracts with the districts for agreed workload levels and reductions in waiting time in return for additional funding. A total of £12 million from the waiting list fund has been earmarked to fund the recommendations of the studies. So far £45,000 has been allocated to Durham to reduce the number of patients waiting over a year on the general surgery/urology list, and £121,000 to East Cumbria to reduce the wait for general surgery. Newcastle's plastic surgery list is still under consideration.

A copy of IACC's summary report "Examining some of England's longest waiting lists" is in the Library. This describes IACC's work in 1989-90, which by March 1990 had resulted in a reduction from 29,580 to 15,042 in the number of patients waiting over a year in 43 key specialties. A full-year report is in preparation.

Family Planning

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to improve the family planning service provided by (a) general practitioners, including women doctors and (b) health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The day-to-day management of family planning services is a matter for individual health authorities since they can best judge local circumstances and priorities. The Government continue to regard family planning as an important preventive service. Guidance issued by the Department of Health makes clear that health authorities should ensure that full use is made of family planning services and that a proper balance is struck between services provided by specialist clinics and those provided by GPs. This guidance was recently reiterated in a letter to regional general managers by the director of operations and planning on the NHS management executive. The Government also remain committed to encouraging and helping women doctors to enter general practice. The new contract which came into force from 1 April 1990 benefits women doctors in a number of ways:

—capitation-based system encourages partnerships to offer the patients the choice of both men and women doctors.

—women doctors will be particularly attractive to partnerships if they offer one of the specialties for which the new fees are being paid, for example, minor surgery, child health surveillance.

—arrangements for part-time working and job sharing are being formalised.

—qualifications for locum cover during confinement have been eased.

Head Lice

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has received linking lindane, or gamma benzene hexachloride, to leukaemia and kidney damage; and if he will consider taking action to prevent them being used in head lice treatment.

Mr. Dorrell: Lindane, also known as gamma benzene hexachloride, is an insecticide which has been available for a number of years in low concentrations in licensed medicinal products for external use. The Committee on Safety of Medicines has received no reports of leukaemia or kidney damage associated with lindane treatment.

Lindane is an effective treatment for scabies. As a consequence of the emergence of resistance it is no longer commonly used for the sole treatment of head lice. Low concentrations of lindane when used topically and as recommended have a good safety record over many years of extensive use.

Community Health Councils

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding of community health councils in England and on the role of his Department in ensuring adequate levels of funding for individual community health councils.

Mr. Dorrell: The expenses of community health councils are met by and form part of the total expenditure of the health authorities concerned. It is for health authorities to decide on the level of funding that they provide to community health councils.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of toxic shock syndrome there have been in each of the past five years; of those cases, how many proved to be fatal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Information received by the public health laboratory service (PHLS) indicates that from 1984 to 1989 there were around 15 confirmed cases a year of toxic shock syndrome in the United Kingdom and that around three cases a year proved fatal.

Transplant Service

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where the new special health authority to manage the United Kingdom transplant service is to be situated; what staff and budget it will have; and when it will be operational.

Mr. Dorrell: We will take decisions on these questions in the light of the implementation study to which I referred in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 11 June at column 35.

Optician Services

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the most recent impact of prescription charges on the take-up of opticians' services (a) nationally and (b) by national health service region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The independent survey of sight tests, carried out by NOP and commissioned by the Government, considered demand on both a national and standard region basis. The information was not, however, analysed by national health service region. The survey found that sight test uptake during the first three months of 1990 was well in line with projected trends over the 10 years up to 1987. It implied that there was no evidence to suggest that people were being deterred from visiting their optician because they now had to pay a modest private charge. Copies of the full NOP report along with an analysis of the findings by the Government statistical service have been placed in the Library.

Larynx Cancer

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has conducted or commissioned any research into cancer of the larynx resulting from asbestosis, explosives or industrial substances.

Mr. Dorrell: No such research has been commissioned by the Department. The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made on each of the projects of research on child abuse listed in his answer of 27 January 1989, Official Report, column 798.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The current position on the projects on research on child abuse listed in the reply that my hon. and learned Friend the then Minister for Health gave the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 27 January 1989 at column 798 is as follows:

Intervention in child sexual abuse: project extended to 30 September 1990.
Normal sexual knowledge in children: continuing.
A study of co-ordination in child abuse: continuing.
Decision making intervention and outcomes in respect of children at risk of abuse: continuing.
Parental perceptions in child abuse: commissioned. Period of support, 1 October 1989 to 30 September 1992.
Feasibility of prevalence study: under consideration.
Parental participation in child protection case conferences: commissioned. Period of support, 1 October 1989 to 31 March 1992.
A study of the patterns of use of child protection registers: commissioned. Period of support, 1 October 1990 to 31 December 1992.
Computer-based techniques in diagnosis: pilot study commissioned. Period of support, 1 January 1990 to 30 April 1990.
Evaluation of inter-disciplinary training: under consideration.
Perpetrators of child sexual abuse: under consideration.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people on family credit or income support received free eye tests in each district health authority area in England in each quarter of 1988-89 and in each quarter of 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics prior to 1 April 1989 were not broken down by patient group. Since then family practitioner committees have collected data on sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services on a six-monthly basis. District health authorities do not collect such information. The table gives estimated numbers by patient group and regional health authority for the period in question:

NHS sight tests paid for during April-September 1989

Regional health authority	Adults (IS-FC)
Northern	40,000
Yorkshire	39,360
Trent	51,880
East Anglia	16,050
North West Thames	34,030
North East Thames	34,980
South East Thames	39,010
South West Thames	23,510
Wessex	29,390
Oxford	13,510
South Western	46,310
West Midlands	74,690
Mersey	27,810
North Western	60,160

These figures are based on a 2 per cent. sample of NHS sight test application forms processed by family practitioner committees. They do not take into account sight tests paid for after 1 April 1989 but conducted before that period.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with glaucoma and diabetes received free eye tests in England (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 13 June 1990]: Statistics prior to 1 April 1989 were not broken down by patient group. Since then family practitioner committees have collected data on sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services on a six-monthly basis. A total of 114,210 NHS sight tests for diabetes and glaucoma sufferers were paid for in England during the period 1 April to 30 September 1989. This figure is based on a 2 per cent. sample of NHS sight test application forms processed by family practitioner committees. It does not take into account sight tests paid for after 1 April 1989 but conducted before that period.

Abortion

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions, under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, in the Sheffield health authority area for each of the last three years for which figures are available; how many of these abortions were performed (a) on ground four and (b) ground five; and how many of these abortions were notified in the national health service sector, and how many in the private sector.

Mr. Dorrell: Abortion data by district of termination are not released on grounds of confidentiality; data for usual residents of Sheffield district health authority are shown in the table:

Number of abortions performed under statutory grounds (a) four and (b) five of the Abortion Act 1967, and by category of premises, usual residents of Sheffield district health authority, 1987, 1988 and 1989[1]

Year	Statutory grounds		Total	Category of premises
	Four	Five		NHS	Non-NHS
1987	28	—	1,485	814	671
1988	15	—	1,507	901	606
[1]1989	12	—	1,503	889	614

[1] Provisional
Statutory ground 4: there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped.
Statutory ground 5: to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which managerial and administrative posts in the Oxfordshire health authority attract performance-related pay; what proportion of their pay is determined by performance; how frequently performance is reviewed; and who is responsible for undertaking the official assessment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Oxfordshire health authority for the information he seeks.

General Practitioners Budgets

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners or general practitioner practices have now expressed an interest in becoming practice budget holders within each health authority in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The programme "Funding General Practice" issued to all GPs in England in December invited practices that were interested in fund holding to return a form to their regional health authority. By the end of February over 850 practices had expressed an interest in this way and others have done so subsequently. The table sets out the position in each region:

Region	Number of practices expressing an interest February 1990
Northern	65
Yorkshire	64
Trent	57
East Anglian	36
NW Thames	78
NE Thames	58
SE Thames	61
SW Thames	58
Wessex	55
Oxford	61
South Western	85
West Midlands	70
Mersey	51
North Western	55
Total	854

Of these 854 practices, around 150 had to be rejected simply because they did not meet the size criterion and did not wish to join with another practice, around 400 are likely to undertake preparatory work to enable them to become fund holders in 1991 and over 150 have indicated that they wish to consider becoming fund holders in 1992.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the names of the general practitioners or practices which have expressed an interest in becoming practice budget holders.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners and general practitioner practices will be eligible to become practice budget holders within each health authority in England.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The criteria for participation in the practice funding scheme will be set out in regulations made under clause 14 of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill currently before Parliament. However, as indicated in the programme "Funding General Practice" issued last December, copies of which are available in the Library, practices which have over 9,000 patients (or group together to meet this criterion), can demonstrate the ability to manage a fund and are adequately computerised are eligible to participate. It is not possible to state how many practices meet all these criteria.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners practices are now eligible to become budget holders; how many have expressed an interest in budget holding; if he will name those practices; and if he will give the information by region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my replies today to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy).

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications of the reduction of the Heteroptera sub-section of the natural history museum for research related to bed bugs, as vectors of diseases.

Mr. Dorrell: None. We are not aware of any new problems which would necessitate the Department sponsoring research in this area.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications of any reduction of research work on fossils and fossil plants at the natural history museum for medical research.

Mr. Dorrell: None. The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the Government's main agency for the promotion of medical and related biomedical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions have been issued by his Department or the national health service management board in relation to the vocabulary or terminology used to promote, describe or present, "Working for Patients" and the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

NHS Reform

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes have been made since November 1989 to the list of 79 units preparing for self-governing trust status; and if he will give an up-to-date list of those making plans for 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 25 April at columns 217-18. An up-to-date list is as follows:

Northern Regional Health Authority
Freeman Hospital
Newcastle Mental Health Services

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether a unit applying for self-governing trust status will be allowed to withdraw their application (a) after it has been submitted to the regional health authority, (b) after consultation with the regional health authority and (c) after it has been submitted to him.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Applications may be withdrawn at any time before my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State signs the order establishing that particular trust.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the criteria he will use when making decisions about an application to establish a self-governing trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will consider applications for national health service trust status individually in the light of all relevant information. We will expect them to meet the criteria set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Health Authority Chairmen

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities and family health services authorities there are in each of the three bands for remuneration of chairs; and if he will list the district health authorities and FHSAs in each of the bands.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: For the remuneration of district health authority and family practitioner committee chairmen the number of authorities in each band is as follows:

Band	District health authority	Family practitioner committee
1	50	15
2	98	61
3	42	14

A list of the district health authorities and family practitioner committees in each band has been placed in the Library.

West Berkshire Health Authority

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of beds, broken down by acute and non-acute, in West Berkshire health authority in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table:

Average daily available beds West Berkshire health authority

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987-88	1988-89
Acute	1,068	1,021	1,012	1,013	1,021	977	967	946	897	846
Non-acute	1,919	1,799	1,746	1,691	1,605	1,512	1,457	1,389	1,306	1,241

The numbers of patients treated in all specialties rose from 44,000 to 50,000 between 1979 and 1987-88. Figures for 1988-89 patient activity are still provisional.

AIDS

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in the United Kingdom were born with AIDS in 1989; what were the figures for the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 15 June 1990]: There are no reports to the public health laboratory service communicable disease surveillance centre or to the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit of children being born with AIDS. The cumulative total of reports of children born with HIV antibody, to end 1989 is 144. Most of these children are not infected but acquired HIV antibody from their mother. If the child is not itself infected this maternal antibody disappears within the first 18 months of life. There have been 23 reports of children developing AIDS, whose parents were HIV-infected or at risk of infection.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom will be infected with the AIDS virus by the year 2000 if the current rate of growth is maintained.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 15 June 1990]: It is not possible to predict how many cases of AIDS or HIV-infected individuals there will be by the year 2000. The Day report "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome in England and Wales to end 1993", published in February 1990, projected that there would be 4,980 cases of AIDS at the end of 1993, and up to 46,450 people infected with HIV by the end of 1990.

The Day report made it clear that predictions beyond 1993 are subject to great uncertainty. A copy of it is available in the Library.

Gamete Intra Fallopian Transfer

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to seek the views of the President of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists on the procedure known as gamete intra fallopian transfer which may result in higher order multiple births; and what reply he has received.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 14 May I wrote to Sir George Pinker KCVO FRCOG FRCS (Ed) the President of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. I am publishing as follows the text of my letter and of his reply of 15 June. This makes it clear that the council of the college does not favour the statutory regulation of such procedures. Instead, it proposes to issue professional guidance to fellows and members about procedures which may result in higher order multiple births once the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill is enacted.

Dear George,

MULTIPLE PREGNANCY RESULTING FROM INFERTILITY TREATMENTS

Now that continuation of research on the early human embryo has been agreed by a Committee of the whole House of Commons, the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill is being considered in detail by a Standing Committee in the usual way. At its first session the Standing Committee discussed an amendment which, if accepted, would have brought the GIFT procedure under the control of the Statutory Licensing Authority.

The view of the Council of your College, which you kindly provided for me last month, was made available to members of the Committee. There was a lengthy debate which, of course, was reported in Hansard (copy enclosed). You will see that the concerns expressed about GIFT related entirely to the possibility that it can result in triplets or higher order multiple births, just as could IVF, if too many eggs are replaced. However, as I explained, such multiple pregnancies also result from the use of superovulatory drugs alone in the treatment of infertility. To introduce legislative control of GIFT for this reason would thus point to a need to regulate superovulatory therapy in general which would indeed take us well on to the slippery slope of wider regulation of medical practice—something which in the long run would not, it seems to me, to be to the advantage of patients or doctors.

As you will see, the Committee rejected the amendment, but in view of the concerns expressed about the difficulties which may be experienced by women carrying and giving birth to triplets or more, I promised to write to you to ask that the College give consideration to ensuring that its Fellows and Members are fully aware of the Parliamentary concerns about high multiple pregnancy. The problems associated with this have been well documented in recent research by Frances Price of the Child Care and Development Group in Cambridge, whose research has been supported by the Department and which will be published by HMSO soon.

Clearly it would be most reassuring to those members of Parliament who have expressed concern about triplets and higher order multiple pregnancies resulting from infertility treatments if the College were prepared to convey this concern, perhaps with some advice, to its Fellows and Members.

Yours ever
Virginia

15th June 1990

Dear Mrs. Bottomley

Re: Multiple Pregnancy Resulting from Infertility Treatment

Thank you very much for your letter of 14th May regarding the concern of the Members of Parliament about procedures such as GIFT resulting in higher order multiple births.

As you know, the Council of the College has on occasions discussed this and felt that regulation of procedures such as GIFT will not only set a precedent in terms of regulating medical practice but also that, as these forms of treatment are still evolving, any framework regulating the current practices may restrict further development. Therefore we feel that GIFT and similar procedures should not be included in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill. I think your point that legislative control of GIFT could also lead the way to regulating other treatments for infertility, such as the use of gonadotrophins for ovulation induction, is extremely important.

We have in the past relied on the ILA, which as you know evolved from the VLA set up by the RCOG and the MRC, to issue guidelines to those of our Fellows and Members involved in the management of infertility patients where treatment such as IVF and GIFT were provided. The College would certainly be willing to reinforce this advice by circulating guidelines to Fellows and Members. We are now working on these and they will cover the following areas: counselling, the use of gonadotrophins in induction of ovulation, number of embryos or eggs to be transferred and other matters relating to the practice of GIFT. Once the Bill receives Royal Assent these will be put in their final form and circulated.

I look forward to receiving as soon as possible a copy of Frances Price's paper.

Yours sincerely,
George D. Pinker.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Violent Deaths

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of deaths caused by violence in Northern Ireland in the years (a) 1984, (b) 1985, (c) 1986, (d) 1987, (e) 1988, and (f) 1989 respectively, and how this was subdivided by the number of (i) Catholics, (1) civilian, and (2) Irish Republican Army or paramilitary groups (ii) Protestants (1) civilian, and (2) Ulster Defence Regiment or other paramilitary groups (iii) security forces (1) local or (2) British and (iv) others.

Mr. Cope: A total of 427 deaths arose from the security situation in Northern Ireland during the period 1984-89. The data collated do not differentiate between Catholic and Protestant, or civilians or paramilitary groupings. The table sets out the available information:

Deaths in Northern Ireland arising from the security situation

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989
RUC	9	23	12	16	6	9
Regular Army	9	2	4	3	21	12
UDR	10	4	8	8	12	2
Civilians[1]	36	25	37	66	54	39
Total	64	54	61	93	93	62

[1]category includes known or suspected terrorists.

Condoms

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make representations at a meeting of the Anglo-Irish ministerial conference to have the present prohibition on the sale of condoms in the Virgin Megastore in Dublin removed.

Mr. Brooke: The matter is not one which it would be appropriate to raise at a meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference.

Replacement Dwellings

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to introduce conditions requiring the demolition of the building to be replaced to be attached to grants of permission for replacement buildings.

Mr. Needham: No. Each application is treated on its merits.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average size of approved replacement dwellings in amenity areas of special control in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensioners' Christmas Bonus

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to increase the Christmas bonus for pensioners in December 1990.

Mr. Needham: I have no plans to do so.

Beef Premium

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many farmers applied for special beef premium between 1 April 1989 and 31 March 1990; and, of these, how many were accepted and payment made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Between 3 April 1989 (the commencement date of the scheme) and 31 March 1990, 23,375 farmers submitted 37,595 applications for beef special premium. Of these, 36,761 have been accepted and paid to date; 337 applications have been disallowed.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reasons were given for disallowing claims in respect of special beef premium between 1 April 1989 and 31 March 1990.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The reasons for disallowance of claims were:

(a) Failure to comply with the on-farm retention requirement.
(b) Inclusion in claims of animals on which premium had previously been paid.
(c) Inclusion in claims of female cattle.
(d) Inclusion in claims of animals below the minimum eligible age of 8 months at date of lodgement of the claim.
(e) Producers making more than three claims (the maximum permitted) in a calendar year.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland receive reduced earnings allowance; and what were the total sums paid out in Northern Ireland during the last two financial years for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: At 8 May 1990 4,191 persons in Northern Ireland were receiving reduced earnings allowance.

Over £13 million was paid in benefits (including reduced earnings allowance) under the industrial injuries scheme in Northern Ireland in each of the 1987-88 and 1988-89 financial years. Separate figures are not available for reduced earnings allowance.

Teachers

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total amount of teaching time taught by part-time teachers and in the form of additional hours for full-time teachers in the North Eastern education and library board area additional hours budget, broken down by college.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The hours taught by part-time teachers and the additional hours taught by full-time teachers vary throughout the year depending on demand. However, all FE colleges make a standard return each year to the Department of Education in respect of the position in the third week of October. In the week ending 20 October 1989 the following hours were worked in colleges in the North-Eastern Board area.

	Part-time hours	Additional hours
Antrim	209·9	27·4
Ballymena	376·42	130·50
Coleraine	169·5	100
Larne	109	13
Magherafelt	129·07	68·68
Newtownabbey	489·96	44·46
North Antrim	85	55
Northern Ireland Hotel and Catering College	41·16	2·66

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of part-time lecturers employed in each further education college in the North Eastern education and library board area, broken down by college.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The use of part-time lecturers is reported to the Department of Education annually to show the position in the third week of October. In the North-Eastern Education and Library Board area the following numbers of part-time lecturers were employed in the week ending 20 October 1989.

	Number
Antrim	48
Ballymena	78
Coleraine	40
Larne	24
Magherafelt	23
Newtownabbey	140
North Antrim	28
Northern Ireland Hotel and Catering College	5

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Department of Education has approved the 24 redundancies announced by the North Eastern education and library board.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The North-Eastern Education and Library Board has assessed the number of full-time lecturers which each of its further education colleges will require to deliver the youth training programme courses under the new block funding arrangements and has decided that the existing number of full-time YTP posts should be reduced. The revised number of YTP posts has been agreed with the Department of Education.

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what specific measures have been taken by the North Eastern education and library board to avoid redundancies.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The board has examined the possibility of redeployment within each college and to other colleges and schools in its area. It has also identified a number of full-time lecturers who wish to take early retirement. These steps have reduced the number of compulsory redundancies to a minimum.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken by the North Eastern library board to avoid religious discrimination against Catholics in further education colleges.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The North-Eastern education and library board has published an equal opportunities policy statement indicating its commitment to the principle of equal opportunity in relation to both persons seeking to be employed by the board and persons already so employed. The board has recently made its statutory monitoring return to the Fair Employment Commission and will be reviewing its current position to determine if any corrective action is required to redress any imbalances that might be shown to be present.

Training

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the staff/student ratio for each YTP course in the North Eastern education and library board area.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The information requested is not available in respect of each individual YTP course. However, the staff/student ratio in respect of the YTP provision in each college in the North-Eastern education and library board at 31 December 1989 was as follows:

	Ratio
Antrim	7·7
Ballymena	13·7
Ballymoney	6·6
Coleraine	7·7
Larne	10·1
Magherafelt	11·1
Newtownabbey	8·5

SOCIAL SECURITY

Bishopbriggs Resettlement Unit

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will provide a breakdown by age of the residents in the Bishopbriggs resettlement unit in the last full year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will provide a statistical breakdown of the length of stay of residents in the Bishopbriggs resettlement unit in the last year for which figures are available;

(3) what was the total number of people who used the Bishopbriggs resettlement unit in the last full year for which figures are available;

(4) if he will list the agencies which have referred individuals to the Bishopbriggs resettlement unit in the latest 12-month period for which figures are available, and the number of individuals referred to each agency.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is not available.

The resettlement agency does not collect detailed statistics of individual residents because resettlement unit residents, who by definition are a transient population, are often resentful of detailed questioning. When admitting people the aim is to provide warmth, shelter and food and to restrict questions and statistics to the absolute minimum.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of bed spaces available for use at the Bishopbriggs resettlement unit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of bed spaces available at Glasgow resettlement unit (Bishopbriggs) is 77.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing unemployment benefit, including earnings-related supplement, as a percentage of average earnings for the years (a) 1972, (b) 1979, (c) 1982, (d) 1987 and (e) 1989 for a single person and a married man with two children, both on average earnings.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is in the table.

	Single person			Married man with 2 children
Year	1 Average weekly earnings (£)	2 Standard rate unemployment benefit[1] (£)	3 Benefit as a percentage of net income[3]	4 Average weekly earnings[2] (£)	5 Standard rate unemployment benefit[1,2] (£)	6 Benefit as a percentage of net income[2,3]
October 1972	39·70	13·75	47·7	40·60	22·10	68·0
November 1979	114·10	31·79	39·8	122·10	54·64	59·7
November 1982	160·60	25·00	23·3	172·30	52·75	42·5
April 1987	224·00	31·45	20·2	238·50	65·35	36·8
April 1989	269·50	34·70	18·1	284·00	70·60	33·1

[1] Earnings-related supplement is included with the rate of unemployment benefit up to and including November 1979.
[2] The amounts at columns 4, 5 and 6 include family allowance/child benefit.
[3] Net income used in columns 3 and 6 is income after deduction of tax and national insurance contributions.

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will be making extra staffing available for social fund duties to improve the rate of unprocessed applications.

Mr. Scott: Compared with the year 1989-90, the share of the total staff resources allocated to social fund increased by 1,615 posts for the year 1990-91. These resources, available to local offices from April 1990, reflect the ongoing review of resource requirements carried out by the Department. Both the resource needs and organisation of the social fund in local offices will continue to be kept under review by departmental officials.

National Insurance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps are being taken by his Department to improve the collection of outstanding national insurance contributions from employers and employees; and what are the specific staffing, computerisation and time resources committed to collection.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) on 21 May at columns 80-81 about improving the collection of national insurance contributions.

At present some 1,600 inspectors are employed. There will be better training for these inspectors and in the first instance there will be 100 more of them to perform the tasks.

A fully computerised national insurance records system is used for recording contributions and providing information in relation to benefit claims. It also identifies potential underpayment and non-payment of contributions in relation to employed people and employers. It is the intention to develop further the information technology support available, to record such contributions and to assist the inspectorate.

Student Benefits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received concerning the proposals to remove students from income support, unemployment benefit and housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Representations have been received from a number of individuals and organisations, including the National Union of Students and other organisations representing students' interests, the all-party disablement group, the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, the British Dyslexia Association and the Dyslexia Educational Trust.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the circumstances in which he would consider reinstating student entitlement to housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government's view is that students should generally be supported by the educational maintenance system and not social security benefits, although students in vulnerable groups will retain eligibility for housing benefit and income support. The introduction of student loans and the creation of the access funds will result in an increase in student support of well over £100 million in the 1990-91 academic year. The operation and adequacy of these new funding arrangements will be kept under review.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to monitor the impact the withdrawal of entitlement to housing benefit will have on the income of students attending institutions of higher education in areas of high-cost rented accommodation.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government are considering a further survey of students' income and expenditure following the introduction of student loans and withdrawal of benefits from most full-time students. In addition, we will be monitoring the operation and adequacy of the access funds.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Social Security Advisory Committee reports on Government proposals to withdraw student entitlement to social security benefits are to be published; and when the Government plans to respond to the reports.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We are giving careful consideration to the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on draft regulations to implement our policy on students' benefit entitlement. The report will be published when that consideration has been completed.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what external advice his Department has received on the legal status of his proposals to withdraw entitlement to unemployment benefit for students who have made national insurance contributions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We are satisfied, following legal advice, that we have the necessary statutory powers.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to publish the regulations cancelling student entitlement to housing benefit and social security.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We are currently considering the implications of amendments to the Social Security Bill carried in the House of Lords, and we will make an announcement about timing of regulations in due course.

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cost to the national insurance fund of incentives to take up contracted out personal pension plans in the financial years 1989-90; and if he will provide estimates for 1990-91 and succeeding years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The cost to the national insurance fund in 1989-90 of the 2 per cent. incentive payments to personal pensions was about £680 million; this represented payments of incentives in respect of both of the years 1987-88 and 1988-89.

By the end of the year 1989-90 a little over 4 million personal pensions were in force. Assuming that the number in force remains constant through to 1992-93 the estimated cost in 1990-91 is £500 million (relating to year 1989-90) and in the years 1991-92 to 1993-94 (relating to years 1990-91 to 1992-93) the estimated cost can be expected to rise in line with general increases in earnings.

Family Credit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the latest figure of the number of people claiming family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest information about the family credit caseload, to include backdated awards, is a provisional figure for the end of March 1990 of 308,000.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend mobility allowance to children under five years of age.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

SCOTLAND

Animal Cruelty

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will seek to extend the sentencing provisions of the Protection of Animals (Penalties) Act 1987 relating to the penalties for those found guilty of animal cruelty and in particular those involved in dog fighting, so as to cover Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government intend to seek to increase the maximum fine available to the Scottish courts in respect of offences of cruelty to animals at the next suitable legislative opportunity.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of bovine spongiform encephalopathy cases which have been confirmed, by covenient geographical area within Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy was made notifiable on 21 June 1988. Records kept from November 1986 to 8 June 1990 show 456 confirmed cases have been recorded in Scotland. The incidence by region is as follows:

	Number
Borders	15
Central	17
Dumfries and Galloway	79
Fife	30
Grampian	104
Highland	29
Lothian	14
Orkney	6
Shetland	2
Strathclyde	125
Tayside	35
Western Isles	—

Estate Agents

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to regulate the activities of estate agents in Scotland.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

The Estate Agents Act 1979 and its subordinate legislation already regulates the activities of estate agents in Scotland, as elsewhere in the United Kingdom. I announced on 19 April my intention to make, and lay before Parliament, orders under section 3 and regulations under section 18 of the Act to deal with malpractices by some estate agents and to add to the list of offences which can trigger banning action (Official Report, columns 1009-10). Drafts of the orders and regulations, which will apply throughout the United Kingdom, were sent out on 18 June for consultation. It is also the Government's intention, as soon as legislative time is available, to amend the Trade Descriptions Act 1968, which applies to Scotland, to cover misdescription of property.

Drugs

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which organisation will be responsible for paying drug addicts to attend drug dependency units when general practitioners have their own budgets.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Drug addicts are not paid to attend drug dependency services. The introduction of general practitioner practice funding will have no detrimental effect on health care provision for drug misusers. A general practitioner fund will take account of factors such as the profile of the practice list, previous hospital treatment and prescribing patterns, and the number of potentially "high-cost" patients. There will therefore be no financial or budgetary disincentive to general practice fund holders taking on drug misusers as patients and referring them to hospital or community-based services when necessary. In their assessment of the health needs of their resident population and of the range of provision required, health boards will be able to ensure that the needs of potentially vulnerable groups such as drug misusers are properly taken into account.

Handicapped Prisoners

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether there is any extra provision of services and support for prisoners who are physically or mentally handicapped; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Physically and mentally handicapped prisoners are assessed by the medical officer on arrival at prison regarding their general condition, mobility and awareness of their situation. Prison establishments seek to meet the needs of these inmates on an individual basis. The medical officer ensures continuation of any medication in addition to referral, as required, for psychiatric and psychological opinion.

Students

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of community charge students in Scotland who pay 20 per cent. of the community charge where they are studying, pay on their own property which is not classified as their sole or main residence, or is empty for three months or more.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Regulation 4 of, and paragraph 4 of schedule 2 to the Standard Community Charge (Scotland) Regulations 1989 prescribe a standard community charge multiplier of 0 (that is, no charge payable) in respect of a dwellinghouse.

(a) in respect of which the standard community charge is, or would be, but for the regulations, payable by a person who is undertaking a full-time course of education or nursing education within the meaning of section 8 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended; and

(b) which was the sole or main residence of that person immediately before he undertook that course.

Bathing Beaches

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the beaches that meet the blue flag award standards, and those which fail to match the criteria of the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The blue flag award scheme is organised under the patronage and sponsorship of the European Commission. The criteria for the award of a blue flag relate both to water quality and to the management of the beach and its general facilities. It is for local authorities to decide whether they wish to apply for such awards for beaches in their areas. I understand that currently no Scottish beaches hold a blue flag award.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the implications of reduction in the Homoptera section of the natural history museum for Scottish agriculture and horticulture.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No implications for Scottish agriculture and horticulture as a result of restructuring within the natural history museum are anticipated.

Fishing Industry

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the self-decommissioning plans submitted by one of the United Kingdom's fishing vessel agencies; and whether such a plan would be eligible for European Community aid.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The success of such a scheme would be dependent on the support of the industry itself. When my right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on 8 May he encouraged them to let him have their views on the proposals but they are still considering the matter. The question of European Community aid is a matter for the Commission in the first instance.

Methane Discharges

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he first learnt of the intention by the operators of St. Fergus gas terminal to release a quantity of methane into the atmosphere; if his approval was sought; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Shell UK Ltd. approached HM industrial pollution inspectorate for Scotland in January 1990 to discuss its plans for depressurising the main gas line in order to permit it to comply with the requirements of the Off-shore Installations (Emergency Pipeline Value) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989/1092) introduced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy following the Piper Alpha disaster. The plans included a proposal for venting a quantity of methane to atmosphere.

A consent from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy is required under section 12 of the Energy Act 1976 for any discharge of methane into the atmosphere.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in respect of treatment of methane discharges resulting from pipe replacements at gas terminals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Gas terminals are scheduled works under the terms of the Health and Safety (Emissions into the Atmosphere) Regulations 1983. Section 5 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 places a duty on the owners of such works to use the best practicable means to prevent the emission into the atmosphere of noxious or offensive substances and for rendering harmless and inoffensive such substances as may be so emitted. This duty applies to the control of hydrocarbon discharges arising from pipe replacements.

All discharges whether by flaring or releasing unignited natural gas into the atmosphere require the consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy under section 12 of the Energy Act 1976.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to require the 14,000 tonnes of methane anticipated to be released in the process of pipe work at the St. Fergus gas terminal to be flared off; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Following discussions with Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate, Shell UK Ltd has undertaken to dispose of any gas which cannot be utilised by burning it at the St. Fergus terminal in facilities provided for that purpose. The quantity of gas requiring disposal by this means is not expected to exceed 5,400 tonnes.

There is provision on site to safely vent the gas to atmosphere via an elevated stack but flaring the gas is the preferred environmental option.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made an assessment of the environmental implications resulting from the release of a large quantity of unflared methane from the St. Fergus gas terminal; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Assessments of the environmental impact of venting methane at the St. Fergus gas terminal have been made on behalf of the company and these have been considered by Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate.

Mr. Saied Ebrahimi

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information was given to the Crown Office about an incident on 5 June on flight PA61; what action was subsequently taken in relation to Mr. Saied Ebrahimi; and what were the circumstances under which the legal action against him was abandoned.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The full information given to Crown Office by the procurator fiscal at Ayr about an incident on flight PA61 is confidential. As has been stated by Crown Office, Crown counsel instructed the release of Mr. Saeid Ebrahimi from custody. The reasons for Crown counsel's decisions are not disclosed.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fur Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he takes to satisfy himself as to the proper dispersal of mink remaining in fur factory farms which close.

Mr. Maclean: Farmers disposing of their mink must inform the local MAFF office, which issued their licence. They must also inform recipients of the mink of the obligation to obtain a licence. Deliberately releasing mink into the wild is an offence.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many mink fur factory farms there are in environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many chinchilla and fitch fur factory farms there are in the United Kingdom; and in which counties they are.

Mr. Maclean: Farmers do not need licences to keep these animals, and we do not collect this information.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has given to fur farmers in the light of current market conditions.

Mr. Maclean: It is for the fur industry to decide how to respond to market conditions.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will take steps to ensure that the Council of Europe's welfare standards for animals on fur factory farms which are currently under discussion will take full account of articles 3 and 4 of the European Convention for the Protection of Animals kept for Farming Purposes 1976.

Mr. Maclean: Any welfare standards agreed by the Council of Europe will be adopted as recommendations under article 9 of the convention. As such, their purpose is to set out detailed provisions for the implementation of the general principles contained in articles 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the convention.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences for fur factory farms on the Isle of Wight he has issued.

Mr. Maclean: One mink farm has been licensed annually on the Isle of Wight since 1986.

Mink

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there is a feral wild population of mink on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Maclean: There have been reports of feral mink on the Isle of Wight, but none confirmed.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to which species of native fauna aleutian disease may be transmitted by mink.

Mr. Maclean: I am not in a position to confirm the native fauna to which aleutian disease can definitely be transmitted from mink. However I am aware that the disease has been found in ferrets and polecats and that a disease similar to aleutian disease has been observed in otters.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his officials take once aleutian disease is discovered in mink on farms.

Mr. Maclean: No statutory action is taken once the disease is discovered in mink on farms.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of mink in farms are infected with aleutian disease; and how many farms this affects.

Mr. Maclean: Since aleutian disease in minks is not a notifiable disease, no official statistics are available on its incidence in mink farms.

Arctic Foxes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the incidence of feral Arctic foxes in the United Kingdom; and whether his Department has planned any response.

Mr. Maclean: There is no evidence of feral Arctic foxes in the United Kingdom.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he proposes to implement the EEC ban on beef exports from herds which have had an incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; whether the ban applies to herds in which were raised and sold cattle subsequently fallen to bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Beef will be exported from the United Kingdom to other European Community member states in accordance with European Community Decision 90/261 of 8 June 1990 and be certified as such. Bone-in beef for export must be derived from cattle which have not come from holdings in which bovine spongiform encephalopathy has been confirmed during the previous two years. Beef derived from cattle from any holding can enter into intra-Community trade in boneless form.

Advisory Committee on Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether members of the advisory committee on pesticides have to declare any interest or connections with agrochemical industries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to how many members of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides act as paid consultants to companies which produce or market pesticides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Members of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides sign a declaration that they have no commercial or financial interest which would be likely to prejudice their work on the committee.

ADAS

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 6 May, Official Report, column 468, if he will provide information for the South Western and Wales regions not included in the table; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The information on regional training on wildlife and landscape conservation for the South Western region and Wales is as follows:

	1987	1988	1989	[1]1990
South Western	2	1	1	1
Wales	—	1	—	2

[1] Planned.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of national training courses on wildlife and landscape conservation that have been held for Agricultural Development Advisory Service officers in 1989.

Mr. Maclean: One national training course on wildlife and landscape conservation was held in 1989 for specialist Agricultural Development and Advisory Service advisers.

Emphasis is now placed on regionally based conservation training, and in 1989, 11 courses were held for ADAS advisers.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 6 May, Official Report, columns 468-69, if he will list the location, date and subject matter to be discussed at the six national and eleven regional training courses proposed for Agricultural Development Advisory Service officers in the current year.

Mr. Maclean: National and regional training courses completed or proposed for Agricultural Development and Advisory Service advisers in the current year are as follows:

Location	Date	Subject
National Courses
Worcestershire	February	Field margins
London	March	Ponds and lakes
Shropshire	June	Grassland
Shropshire	September	Wetland and woodland
Shropshire	September	Wetland and woodland
Regional Courses
Yorkshire	May	Species identification
Yorkshire	May	Habitat recognition and landscape appreciation
Warwickshire	May	Habitat recognition and landscape appreciation
Warwickshire	June	Habitat recognition and landscape appreciation
Warwickshire	June	Habitat recognition and landscape appreciation
Somerset	June	Habitat recognition and landscape appreciation
West Sussex	July	Habitat recognition and landscape appreciation
Dyfed	September	Heather and moorland management

Details of the remaining one national and three regional courses have yet to be confirmed.

Farm Animal Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the expenditure incurred giving the last full financial year by his Department, item by item, on farm animal welfare.

Mr. Maclean: The Department's expenditure in connection with farm animal welfare was estimated at £2·5 million in 1989-90. This comprised £2·4 million staff costs and £0·1 million for Farm Animal Welfare Council expenses. A further breakdown by item is not available.

Census Returns

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the data from each of the 1987, 1988 and 1989 agricultural census returns at parish level will be available at the Public Record Office at Kew.

Mr. Maclean: The dispatch of 1987 agricultural census returns at parish level to the Public Record Office at Kew was completed on 25 May 1990. It is anticipated that the 1988 returns will be sent to the Public Record Office in February 1991.

Due to the rapidly increasing use of census data, and the availability of more powerful analytical tools, a review is currently being carried out of the appropriate level of aggregation for publication of agriculture census data. Until this review has been completed information requested for 1989 returns cannot be supplied.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food why parish level agricultural census returns are no longer available for public inspection at the Ministry censuses and surveys division at Guildford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Parish level agricultural census returns are now held at the Ministry offices at Guildford for the latest published year only. There is insufficient space at Guildford to retain returns for earlier years and provide adequate facilities for the public to inspect them. Data from the latest published years returns are supplied by Guildford staff to the public by telephone (minor enquiries only) and, more normally, by post upon payment of the pre-determined fee.

Parish level agricultural census returns for earlier years are available for public inspection at the Public Record Office at Kew.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for (a) agricultural research and (b) fisheries related research of reductions in the Heteroptera section of the natural history museum.

Mr. Maclean: The Departments' central science laboratory has expertise in entomology and is involved in the identification of storage pests, plant pests and beneficial insects. For this purpose, reference collections of insects are essential and those at the natural history museum are used periodically by visiting MAFF staff. We do not expect the planned changes at the natural history museum to affect our use of these collections. The Heteroptera section of the museum has no practical relevance to the fisheries interests of the Department.

Countryside Survey

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has been consulted by the Natural Environment Research Council on its proposed 1990 countryside survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

The 1990 countryside survey is jointly funded by the Natural Environment Research Council and DOE. Officials of my Department have consulted the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Officials during the formative stages of the project and MAFF will participate in monitoring its progress.

DEFENCE

Bush-Gorbachev Summit

13. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the defence implications for the United Kingdom of the recent Bush-Gorbachev summit.

22. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the defence implications for the United Kingdom of the recent Bush-Gorbachev summit.

66. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the defence implications for the United Kingdom of the recent Bush-Gorbachev summit.

100. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications for British defence policy of agreements on defence matters concluded between the presidents of the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Tom King: NATO allies are agreed that our peace and security will continue to depend on nuclear deterrence; for this policy to be effective, nuclear systems will need to be kept up to date where necessary.

48. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he expects to be made in the removal of nuclear weapons from Europe, following the summit which took place earlier this month between the leaders of the United States of America and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I welcome the progress made at the recent superpower summit on the wide range of security issues that were discussed. With regard to the removal of nuclear weapons from Europe, I look forward to the successful completion of the process of removal of all United States and Soviet intermediate-range forces from Europe provided for under the INF treaty. NATO has also made clear that it endorses the United States intention to begin negotiations with the Soviet Union on short-range nuclear forces shortly after the conclusion of a treaty on limiting conventional forces in Europe.

Nuclear Weapons

18. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if in the light of the recent summit between Presidents Gorbachev and Bush, he has undertaken a review of his policy of retaining nuclear weapons on the Clyde.

Mr. Tom King: We welcome the progress made at the United States-Soviet summit in Washington, and, like both those countries, we intend to retain sufficient strategic nuclear deterrent forces to guarantee our security.

33. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration has been given to the deployment of nuclear armed sea-launched missiles.

71. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration has been given to the deployment of nuclear armed sea-launched missiles.

86. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration has been given to the deployment of nuclear armed sea-launched missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave on 5 April at column 832.

95. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last reviewed the safety arrangements for the transportation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last reviewed the safety arrangements for the transportation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Safety arrangements for the transportation of nuclear weapons are kept continuously under review.

Defence Review

19. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to reduce spending on defence in the light of developments in east Europe; and if he will make a statement.

52. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for a full-scale defence review.

57. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the internal reassessment of United Kingdom defence commitments and expenditure currently being undertaken within his Department.

Mr. Tom King: As I made clear in my speech yesterday opening the defence debate, we are examining options for change in the structure and deployment of our armed forces in the light of changing international circumstances.

81. Mr. Cabora: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received suggesting (i) reduction of the Royal Navy to 32 ships and (ii) reduction of the Army to 32 battalions; and if he will make a statement.

94. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received suggesting (a) reduction of the Royal Navy to 32 ships and (b) reduction of the Army to 32 battalions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received suggesting (a) reduction of the Royal Navy to 32 ships and (b) reduction of the Army to 32 battalions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A range of possible changes to the structure of our forces is being considered in the light of the changing international situation. A number of representations have been received from hon. Members and members of the public.

82. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his proposals following consideration of the forthcoming report on options for change within NATO.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 14 June at column 330.

West German Defence Minister

20. Mr. Allen Mackey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his West German counterpart to discuss European defence and disarmament.

38. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his West German counterpart to discuss European defence and disarmament.

111. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his West German counterpart to discuss European defence and disarmament.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell).

Frigates

21. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place the next batch of orders for type 23 frigates.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about frigate procurement and the likely needs of the Royal Navy in this field.

Mr. Neubert: As I informed the House during the Navy debate on 5 February, at column 657, we plan to invite tenders for a further batch of type 23 frigates towards the end of this year. A decision on the size and timing of an order will be made once tenders are submitted by shipyards.

START Agreement

23. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications for Trident and United States supply of the D-5 missile of a START agreement.

60. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications for Trident and United States supply of the D-5 missile of a START agreement.

63. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications for Trident and United States supply of the D-5 missile of a START agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is none.

Military Assistance

24. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military assistance programmes his Department has with overseas Governments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to paragraph 212 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", Vol. 1 (Cm. 1022-1).

Defence Diversification Agency

25. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department intends establishing a defence diversification agency.

92. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department intends establishing a defence diversification agency.

107. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department intends establishing a defence diversification agency.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. It is for the commercial judgment of management to decide in which markets its company competes.

Radar Stations

26. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about radar stations in the United Kingdom.

27. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about radar stations in the United Kingdom.

50. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations have been received by his Department on the proposed development of the over-the-horizon radar near St. David's in Dyfed.

110. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about radar stations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Low Flying

28. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to respond to the Defence Select Committee's report of the current session on low flying.

Mr. Neubert: As with all Select Committee reports, the aim is to reply within two months of publication of the report.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about low flying below 250 ft.

39. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about low flying below 250 ft.

46. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about low flying below 250 ft.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike).

76. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the report of the Defence Select Committee into low flying.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he has given to the conclusions of the Defence Select Committee's report on low flying; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The report by the House of Commons Defence Committee on low flying (HC 120) is currently being considered very carefully. There will be a response to all of the report's recommendations in the Government's reply to the Committee.

Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament

29. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the publication of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990".

75. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the publication of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990".

109. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament since the publication of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990".

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of representations have been received since 2 April.

Ulster Defence Regiment

30. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the level of recruitment for the Ulster Defence Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The level of UDR recruitment remains sufficient to enable the UDR to carry out its duties in support of the RUC.

Soviet Union (Threat Assessment)

31. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has altered its threat assessment of the Soviet Union.

68. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has altered its threat assessment of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 6 February 1990, at column 600.

Warsaw Pact

32. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what defence contacts his Department has made over the past 12 months with Warsaw pact countries.

65. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what defence contacts his Department has made over the past 12 months with Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the past 12 months there have been regular meetings with representatives of Warsaw pact nations at ministerial and official level. Recent contacts have included a visit by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the Soviet Union last month, and a meeting between my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces and counterparts from Poland, Norway and France in Oslo on 26 May. I recently met the German Democratic Republic State Secretary for Defence, Herr Marczinek in London.

Military Doctrine

34. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department made to the military doctrine seminar held in Vienna under the confidence and security building measures negotiations.

40. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department made to the military doctrine seminar held in Vienna under the confidence and security building measures negotiations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ipswich (Mr. Irvine) on 3 April at column 594.

Nuclear Test Victims

35. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about the level of compensation for nuclear test victims.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of recent representations have been received from right hon. and hon. Members and other regarding compensation for nuclear test veterans.

Armed Forces (Women Employees)

36. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking for the wider employment of women in the armed forces.

59. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking for the wider employment of women in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Navy is extending the role of the Women's Royal Naval Service to include service at sea in surface ships. The number of posts open to women in the Regular Army is being increased by up to 6,000 and in the Territorial Army by up to 4,000. The RAF has started recruiting women as pilots and navigators and is increasing the number of women in ground trades by 2,000. These developments will offer a wider range of job opportunities to women and we shall continue to explore the possibility of opening further employment areas to them.

Defence Procurement

37. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken in connection with defence procurement costings.

44. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken in connection with defence procurement costings.

12. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken in connection with defence procurement costings.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy).

58. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to gain value for money in defence procurement.

96. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to gain value for money in defence procurement.

Mr. Alan Clark: As part of our commercial approach to defence procurement we seek value for money through the use of competition wherever possible and the encouragement of the widest possible range of companies to compete for contracts. In the year to 31 March 1990 a record 67 per cent. by value of all contracts and amendments were let competitively, or priced otherwise by reference to market forces.

Soviet Union

41. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his recent visit to the Soviet Union.

108. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his recent visit to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Tom King: I visited the Soviet Union from 14-18 May at the invitation of Marshal Yazov, the Minister of Defence. As well as having several useful meetings with Marshall Yazov and his senior colleagues, I called on the Prime Minister and the Minister for Foreign Affairs. I also visited Soviet army units at Ryazan Leningrad, the Black Sea fleet at Sevastogol and the air force base at Kubinka.

Throughout my visit I was received with great warmth and openness, which indicated the good bilateral relationship that now exists between two countries.

NATO Summit

42. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications arising from the NATO summit at Turnberry, Scotland on 7 and 8 June.

56. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications arising from the NATO summit at Turnberry, Scotland on 7 and 8 June.

97. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the defence implications arising from the NATO summit at Turnberry, Scotland on 7 and 8 June.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO Foreign Ministers attended a meeting of the North Atlantic Council at Turnberry on 7 and 8 June. They discussed a range of politico-military issues including German unification and progress in arms control negotiations. A copy of the communiqué has been placed in the Library of the House.

Warships

43. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average operational availability of frigates and destroyers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1989-90 an average of 42 out of 48 destroyers and frigates were available for operational deployment either immediately or within a short period.

Bullying

45. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent steps have been taken to counter bullying in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The armed forces have banned all initiation ceremonies and the subject of bullying is covered on various officers' and NCOs' courses. The Army has made significant progress towards implementing the range of measures announced to the House on 7 June 1988 by my right hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman). It has been made clear throughout the services that bullyng and ill-treatment will not be tolerated, and that every allegation is viewed most seriously and will be thoroughly investigated.

Military Exercises

47. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to change the arrangements for military exercises in urban areas.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such arrangements are revised when necessary.

Soviet Navy (Modernisation)

49. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the Soviet Navy's modernisation programme.

61. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the Soviet Navy's modernisation programme.

121. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment of the Soviet Navy's modernisation programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) on 3 April 1990 at column 600.

Army Equipment Exhibition

51. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has made for accountability of arms sales abroad arising from the British Army equipment exhibition at Aldershot on 3 to 8 June.

93. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has made for accountability of arms sales abroad arising from the British Army equipment exhibition at Aldershot on 3 to 8 June.

Mr. Alan Clark: No special arrangements are needed in respect of defence equipment sales arising from the British Army equipment exhibition at Aldershot on 3 to 8 June 1990. No defence exports are permitted unless they are consistent with the national interest and our international obligations.

Radiation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the level of radiation exposure of submariners and dockyard workers.

53. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the level of radiation exposure of submariners and dockyard workers.

79. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration he has given to the level of radiation exposure of submariners and dockyard workers.

Mr. Neubert: Radiation exposures are authorised only on the basis that they are justified, comply with MOD and statutory limits and are as low as reasonably practicable (ALARP). They are kept under continuous review.

Trident

54. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current position of the Trident programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Trident programme is on time and within budget and continues to make satisfactory progress towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

67. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to reduce the number of Trident submarines on order in view of the new international climate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: While the Government welcome recent positive developments in the international climate, there nevertheless remain considerable uncertainties, and we therefore fully support the view of the NATO alliance that for the foreseeable future the deterrence of war will continue to require the maintenance of strategic nuclear forces. In the circumstances we remain entirely convinced of the need for Trident. We continue to plan on the basis of a four-boat force, which will provide us with the means to ensure that one boat can be kept on patrol at all times.

Air-to-surface Missiles

55. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the proposed sitings of tactical air-to-surface missiles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) on 15 June at column 379.

Fisheries Protection

62. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the vessels assigned to fisheries protection duties by (a) type, (b) overall length, (c) gross-registered tonnage, (d) age and (e) the estimated dates of contracts for the construction of replacement vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table. It is envisaged that, for the foreseeable future, the fishery protection task will be carried out using existing vessels.

Name and type	Length overall (meters)	Displacement (tons)	Age (years)
Alderney Offshore patrol vessel	59·5	925	10
Anglesey Offshore patrol vessel	59·5	925	11
Blackwater Minesweeper	47·5	[1]890	4
Brereton Minehunter	46·6	360	35
Dumbarton Castle Offshore patrol vessel	81	1,427	8
Guernsey Offshore patrol vessel	59·5	925	12
Jersey Offshore patrol vessel	59·5	925	13
Kellington Minehunter	46·6	360	34
Lindisfarne Offshore patrol vessel	59·5	925	12
Orkney Offshore patrol vessel	59·5	925	13
Shetland Offshore patrol vessel	59·5	925	12
Soberton Minesweeper	46·6	360	32
Upton Minesweeper	46·6	360	33

[1] Full load tonnage.

Volunteer Reserve Forces

64. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what success the volunteer reserve forces campaign has had since its launch in September 1988.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Response to the volunteer reserve forces campaign has been most encouraging with pledges of support for the volunteer reserves received from over 1,100 major employers representing well over half of the United Kingdom work force. We are confident that the campaign has widened public understanding of the importance of the volunteer reserves.

NATO Comprehensive Concept

69. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is still working to NATO's comprehensive concept.

118. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is still working to NATO's comprehensive concept.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principles of alliance security set out in the comprehensive concept of arms control and disarmament, reaffirmed by the defence planning committee in May, will remain the basis for our further work in taking forward the review of NATO strategy.

Mr. Colin Wallace (Allegations)

70. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will widen the inquiry arising from the allegations made by Mr. Colin Wallace to include new allegations concerning authorisation of dirty tricks by Ministry of Defence staff.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am aware of no new allegations for which there is substantive evidence which would justify a wider inquiry.

United States Defence Minister

72. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his United States counterpart to discuss European defence and disarmament.

87. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his United States counterpart to discuss European defence and disarmament.

105. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his United States counterpart to discuss European defence and disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend had discussions with Secretary Cheney on a range of current defence issues at the NATO nuclear planning group and defence planning committee meetings in May. He expects to meet him again later this year at NATO ministerial meetings.

Tanks

73. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the method of eliminating tanks following a CFE agreement.

88. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the method of eliminating tanks following a CFE agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Considerable work has been done on establishing an efficient method of destroying tanks following a CFE agreement. The United Kingdom has made a significant and well-received contribution to this, involving disablement by explosives.

Aldermaston A-90 Building

74. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the construction of the Aldermaston A-90 building.

99. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the construction of the Aldermaston A-90 building.

114. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the construction of the Aldermaston A-90 building.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) on 18 May 1990 at column 578.

Peacekeeping

77. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of countries in which the United Kingdom carries out a peacekeeping role.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to page 23 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", Vol. 1 (Cm. 1022-1) which gives an account of the United Kingdom armed forces' involvement in international peacekeeping and monitoring operations during 1989-90. The British contingent to UNTAG in Namibia has since been withdrawn on the successful completion of its task.

Emergency Assistance

78. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department has given in the past 12 months to the civil community.

89. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what emergency assistance his Department has given in the past 12 months to the civil community.

Mr. Hamilton: In general, responsibility for providing emergency assistance to the civil community in the United Kingdom lies with the civil authorities. If required the Ministry of Defence is able to provide further assistance through a variety of means. Search and rescue teams are regularly in action and there is frequent small-scale co-operation between civil and military authorities.

In the United Kingdom during the last year, larger-scale service assistance was provided during the periods of severe weather in January and February. The services also provided temporary accident and emergency cover during the civilian ambulance services dispute.

Soviet Conventional Weapons

80. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made concerning Soviet production of conventional weapons over the past 12 months.

104. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made concerning Soviet production of conventional weapons over the past 12 months.

115. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made concerning Soviet production of conventional weapons over the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 3 April 1990 at column 559, which remains our most recent assessment.

Namibia

83. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department made to the United Nations transition assistance group deployed to Namibia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes).

BAOR (Nuclear Weapons)

84. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the safety of nuclear weapons assigned to the British Army of the Rhine.

90. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the safety of nuclear weapons assigned to the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock).

Astra

85. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department first met Astra representatives to discuss the proposed alleged Iraqi supergun.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the light of charges laid against individuals and in the light of the continuing investigation by Customs and Excise, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further on these matters.

Dutch Defence Minister

91. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his Dutch counterpart to discuss European defence and disarmament.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie).

Personnel Retention

98. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to retain trained service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have taken a wide range of measures to encourage retention of trained service personnel. These include changes in pay and allowances, including the introduction of bonuses in areas where retention is a particular difficulty, and improvements in the quality of service life. We are also examining a range of options for offering service personnel further assistance with housing.

Western European Union

101. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution his Department makes to the Western European Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom is fully committed to the Western European Union and its aims. The British Government took a leading role in reviving the Western European Union in 1984. The Ministry of Defence contributes extensively to the work of the Western European Union in discussing defence matters of a specific European interest.

Surface Fleet

102. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy on the size of the surface fleet.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our policy at present is to maintain a surface fleet of about 50 destroyers and frigates, and three carriers. It is not possible to say at this stage how this policy might be affected by our current examination of options for change.

Environmental Protection

103. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to protect the environment.

Mr. Neubert: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King).

Tain Bombing Range

106. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report on progress with regard to the noise evaluation survey in the vicinity of Tain bombing range; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The noise survey undertaken last month coincided with a prolonged period of adverse weather conditions. As this prevented collection of sufficient noise data to assess the noise environment a further survey is planned to take place at the beginning of July.

As my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement said on 3 April at column 1016, a high priority is being given to this work. This remains the position and we shall endeavour to keep any delay in the publication of the noise report to the minimum consistent with the need to complete a thorough analysis and evaluation of the noise data.

European Fighter Aircraft

112. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the orders for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) on 26 March at column 24.

NATO Secretary-General

113. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the Secretary-General of NATO; and what subjects he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with the Secretary-General of NATO. The last occasion was at the NATO defence planning committee ministerial meeting last month. Their next scheduled meeting is in the autumn. A range of defence issues will be discussed.

RAF Biggin Hill

116. Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration has been given to the proposed closure of the officer and aircrew selection centre at RAF Biggin Hill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The case for the transfer of the selection centre to RAF Cranwell remains compelling on both operational and financial grounds. Preparations for the move are well in hand.

Mid-air Collision, Hexham

117. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the report on the mid-air collision near Hexham on 9 January to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: A military aircraft accident summary will be published once the report of the board of inquiry has been completed. This is expected to be within the next few months.

Overseas Disaster Relief

119. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance during the past year his Department has made to overseas disaster relief.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The major contribution made by the services in overseas disaster relief during 1989 was in the aftermath of hurrican Hugo in September. A full account is given at page 30 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990", Vol. 1 (Cm. 1022-1). In March 1990, a contingent of some 20 Royal Engineers from the garrison in Belize was deployed for four weeks to Western Samoa to help restore services and repair damage in the aftermath of cyclone Ofa.

Thurleigh Airfield

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what criteria he has laid down for permitted development of the airfield at Thurleigh;

(2) what proposals there are for providing road and rail access to Thurleigh airport to facilitate its development;

(3) what proposals there are, in the event of his Department not requiring the airfield at Thurleigh, for the sale of the freehold;

(4) whether development projects other than aircraft-related ones are envisaged for the use of the airfield at Thurleigh;

(5) whether research and development will continue to be undertaken at Thurleigh; and for what period.

Mr. Neubert: The future of the RAE Bedford (Thurleigh) airfield is under consideration as part of a study into the future of the three Procurement Executive airfields. It is too early to say what the outcome of the study might be.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much land, other than the actual airfield, at Thurleigh is owned by his Department;

(2) what acreage of land is involved in the area designated at the airfield at Thurleigh.

Mr. Neubert: The land in the ownership of the MOD at Bedford comprises 1,420 acres, of which the airfield occupies 1,206 acres.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to how many people live within (a) 1 mile, (b) 3 miles, (c) 5 miles and (d) 10 miles of Thurleigh airfield.

Mr. Neubert: This information is not held by the Ministry of Defence.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he proposes to make a statement on the future of the airfields at Thurleigh, Boscombe Down and Farnborough;

(2) what consultation has taken place with local residents about the use of the airfield at Thurleigh.

Mr. Neubert: I hope to make a statement as soon as possible on the outcome of the procurement executive airfields study. There will be full consultation with interested parties.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proposals have been put to him by United Parcel Services of the United States for the running of the airfield and facilities at Thurleigh;

(2) how many groups have approached him about the possible commercial use of the airfield at Thurleigh for freight movement.

Mr. Neubert: There have been a number of informal, preliminary inquiries about the possible commercial use of the airfield at Thurleigh. This has included an approach from United Parcels Service (UPS). Discussions are continuing. The details are a confidential matter between the parties concerned.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of maintaining and administering the airfield at Thurleigh.

Mr. Neubert: The annual cost of operating the airfield at RAE Bedford is approximately £2 million.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what time scale he proposes to privatise the wind tunnels and related facilities at Thurleigh.

Mr. Neubert: There are no plans at present to privatise the wind tunnels and related facilities at Thurleigh.

Military Aircraft (Flying Levels)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum flying level for military aircraft in Britain and other countries in Europe.

Mr. Neubert: I refer my hon. Friend to the evidence on this subject which my Department presented during the recent Defence Committee inquiry into low flying and which is printed at page 168 of the Committee's fifth report for the Session 1989-90 (HC 120).

Territorial Army

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish recruitment targets for the Territorial army on a regional basis for the next 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no plans to set recruitment targets for the Territorial Army on a regional basis.

Air Force Training

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training role for air force students from Europe or overseas he plans for the period 1992 onward; and what scope he envisages for RAF establishments to train non-service pilots.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD has no present plans post-1992 to relinquish its long-standing role to train students from other NATO or friendly overseas air forces. I would envisage only limited scope, at most, for training of non-service pilots.

Defence Spending

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for future reductions in defence spending outlays.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 24 May 1990 at column 373.

Military Sites (Environmental Impact)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has any plans to establish an environmental impact report programme at military sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 14 June 1990]: The MOD well recognises the potential for conflict between defence activities and the environment and the importance of monitoring our practice to ensure that adverse effects are avoided or minimised. Examples of such monitoring are environmental impact assessments, which are undertaken in the case of appropriate new projects, and the programme of noise surveys being undertaken at 40 military airfields.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to review the present safety of all seabed disposal areas used for (i) surplus explosives, (ii) surplus chemical and biological weapons and (iii) surplus radioactive materials arising from defence activities.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 13 June 1990]: Ministry of Defence seabed locations were chosen to ensure the safe disposal of the materials concerned. There are no grounds for a further review at present.

Written Answers to Questions

CIVIL SERVICE

Research and Development

131. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he intends to reply to the report of the Select Committee on Science and Technology entitled "Definitions of Research and Development"; and if he will make a statement.

132. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service when he intends to reply to the report of the Select Committee on Science and Technology entitled "Definitions of Research and Development"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Government welcome the Select Committee's report on definitions of research and development and will be making a considered response in due course.

Disabled People

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what his Department is doing to promote equality of opportunity in the civil service for people with disabilities.

Mr. Luce: A revised code of practice on the employment of people with disabilities in the civil service will be published tomorrow. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Smoking

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take steps to institute a no-smoking regulation in the telephone kiosks and lifts of the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Services Committee resolved in February 1987 that smoking should not be allowed in lifts and instructed that notices to that effect should be displayed. The question of imposing such a ban in telephone kiosks has not yet been addressed and I shall arrange for it to be referred to the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sunday Trading

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Attorney-General if he will consider taking up the case brought by Torfaen borough council regarding Sunday trading by B and Q, in the forthcoming appeal.

The Attorney-General: In the event of any such invitation to me from Torfaen borough council my response would have to be determined in the light of the fact that Parliament has made it the duty of local authorities to enforce the provisions of the Shops Act 1950.

Petty Officer John Black

Mr. Latham: To ask the Attorney-General whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton on 8 May, Official Report, column 22, he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in setting a date for the hearing into his application for a fresh inquest into the death of Petty Officer John Black; and when he expects to write to the hon. Member.

The Attorney-General: I have today been informed that the case will be heard tomorrow.

ENERGY

Offshore Oil Industry

140. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the potential of the Single European Act and 1992 for the United Kingdom oil fabrication and offshore supply sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Two factors have been responsible for the growth of this industry: (1) the enterprise and competitive performance of British companies and (2) the fair commercial opportunity provided for companies operating on the United Kingdom continental shelf. The Single European Act and progress in GATT negotiations should enlarge the opportunities for our competitive companies. We shall continue to ensure fair opportunity in the home and overseas markets after 1992.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Payments for Debt

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to repeal the Payments for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1971.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to the reply, 10 May 1990, c. 230-31]: It is our practice regularly to review the need for these emergency provisions. I have decided, following the most recent review, that the continuation of the Act is not required by present circumstances and I will therefore shortly sign an order declaring the emergency which gave rise to the provisions is now at an end. The Act will cease to be in force after a period of six months. The efficient collection of public debt nevertheless remains a priority and we intend to review procedures for recovering debt owed to public bodies to establish whether further legislative provision has a role to play.

HEALTH

Long-stay Patients

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commend to all health authorities the Mersey regional health authority's guidelines for use of money held by health authorities on behalf of long-stay patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We do indeed commend the guidelines that Mersey regional health authority has developed. We are currently awaiting a report from regional chairmen on the situation on patients' moneys in each region. When we have reviewed this we will ensure that all regions are conversant with the initiatives that Mersey has taken.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 April, Official Report, column 30, whether the final cost of military assistance in respect of the ambulance dispute is yet known.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The final cost of military assistance was £7·2 million.

Disabled People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on whether disabled people should have the right to representation in community care services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our draft guidance on assessment and case management instructs local authorities to ensure that their assessment procedures accommodate any communication difficulty due to disability. The National Health Service and Community Care Bill, as amended by the Government in the House of Lords, will allow a person acting on behalf of a disabled person to make representations, including complaints, about the social services that the local authority provides.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children aged under 16 years received free eye tests in England (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistics prior to 1 April 1989 were not broken down by patient group. Since then, family practitioner committees have collected data on sight tests paid for under the general ophthalmic services on a six-monthly basis. A total of 752,130 or 8 per cent. of children in England received sight tests paid for under the new regulations. A further 1,624,220 sight tests were also paid for in the period but conducted prior to 1 April 1989; an unknown proportion of these would have been for children.

AIDS

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for (a) the Mersey region and (b) the Wirral health authority the sums for each of the last three years given to groups giving practical and emotional support to people suffering from AIDS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 June 1990]: The amounts allocated to Mersey regional health authority for the last three years as a contribution towards the costs incurred in helping prevent the spread of HIV infection and providing treatment, counselling and support for those affected by HIV are as follows. Allocations to the Wirral health authority are a matter for Mersey regional health authority to determine.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Year	Allocation (£'000)
1988-89	534
1989-90	3,430
1990-91	3,602

In addition, £588,000 AIDS support grant has been allocated to local authorities in the Mersey area in the last two years towards the cost of care and support for people suffering from AIDS.

The amount within these allocations which has so far been passed to groups giving practical and emotional support to AIDS sufferers is not identified separately. However, reports providing details of expenditure for each health and local authority for 1989-90 will be available by August.

Under-fives Initiatives

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) action has been taken and (b) further steps he will take in respect of the van der Eyken report on the under-fives initiatives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The final report of the national monitoring survey of the under-fives initiative by Willem van der Eyken was sent out in 1988. Copies went to local authorities, health authorities and relevant voluntary organisations.

The Department grant-aids 10 national voluntary organisations active in the under-fives field, including the Pre-school Playgroups Association, National Childminding Association and Home Start Consultancy.

Under-fives groups benefit from centrally funded initiatives such as the small grants scheme, which builds on the one operated during the earlier initiative. They also received funding from the lone parents element of the retail prices index error scheme.

The new under-fives initiative was launched in September 1989. It takes forward some of the recommendations in Mr. van der Eyken's report. Twenty-one national and local voluntary organisations are managing 25 local projects. The projects are intended to help families in temporary accommodation; improve partnerships between local authorities and the voluntary sector; extend knowledge about impact of day care services on the circumstances of lone parents; and improve understanding about ways of supporting carers.

The Children Act will be implemented in October 1991. It introduces provisions for local authorities to regulate private and voluntary day care services and childminding, to have a general duty to provide day care services for children in need and a power to do so for other children. A duty is also placed on local social services and education departments to review and publish a report on day care services in their area. The Department is undertaking extensive consultation on draft guidance on these subjects.

Medical and Dental Education

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the second report of the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 18 June 1990, c. 401]: The answer to the question should read as follows:

The report is published today, and is available in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and I are sending copies of the second report to all interested parties under cover of a message which reads as follows:

The report from the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education has been prepared in response to the remit which our predecessors gave the group to consider how the current arrangements for undergraduate medical, and subsequently dental, education can be improved to ensure that the policies and programmes of the bodies concerned are properly co-ordinated and directed. The group was later invited to assess the implications for these matters of the proposed NHS reforms, and to make recommendations. The present report subsumes the interim report which was published in June 1989.

We welcome, and endorse, this new report. We are grateful to the members of the steering group, and to the organisations which have been associated with it, for working effectively together to support the common purpose of the NHS and the universities in maintaining and improving standards of undergraduate medical and dental education.

The organisational and financial arrangements must encourage those responsible in both the universities and the NHS to work together to teach students, advance knowledge through research and provide and develop services for patients. These three functions are integral, something as true in the reformed NHS as it is today. That is why the steering group has emphasised the essential common purpose of the universities and the NHS in the fostering of medical knowledge and skills, an emphasis which we support. The ten key principles proposed by the steering group to underpin jointly agreed working arrangements have already been promulgated with our endorsement. The sense of common purpose will be strengthened by the new provision in the NHS and Community Care Bill regarding university membership of those health authorities and NHS trusts having significant involvement in medical and dental education.

The steering group has given close attention to certain details of finance and management. It has proposed revised procedures for the distribution of the service increment for teaching—SIFT—which again have been promulgated, and are being implemented, with our support. It has made proposals for handling the relationship known as "knock for knock", emphasising the importance of changing only by agreement the balance of expenditure between co-operating institutions. It has also suggested that the flexibility essential to the management of the job plans of clinical academics who are honorary consultants in the NHS might be achieved through a tightly defined package of clinical service commitments, to be delivered by university staff under the management of heads of clinical academic departments in consultation with NHS managers. We endorse these proposals, which encourage an agreed approach to the management of those areas in which the universities and the NHS must engage together in responsibilities which neither can discharge alone.

The steering group's report offers the prospect of a successor group to carry forward further work in these areas, including involvement with the review of SIFT which is to be completed in 1992. It also proposes that the remit of the successor body should be extended to cover "the arrangements for clinical research with service implications, including health services research".

We welcome the establishment of such a successor, and look forward to receiving its advice in due course.

We commend the present report to all those who should be guided by its recommendations and proposals.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

St. Helens

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next plans to visit St. Helens.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no plans to visit St. Helens in the immediate future.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Manufacturing Industry

133. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the output of manufacturing industries was in 1979 in the north-west; and what the comparable constant value basis figure is for the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what are the figures in constant value of the output in manufacturing industries in the north-west (a) in 1979 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Current prices estimates for manufacturing gross domestic product in the north-west are £6,763 million in 1979 and £12,381 million in 1988; the latest year for which they are available. There is no comparable constant value figure for this year because there are no regional price indices.

136. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures on productivity of manufacturing industry in Birmingham and the west midlands.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Regional productivity figures are not compiled.

Exports

134. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average growth rate in the volume of United Kingdom exports of goods and services between 1979 and 1989.

135. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average growth rate in the volume of United Kingdom exports of goods and services between 1979 and 1989.

139. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average growth rate in the volume of United Kingdom exports of goods and services between 1979 and 1989.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information on movements in the volume of United Kingdom exports of goods and services between 1979 and 1989 is available on the CSO database (series HHCX), which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

West Germany

137. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current trade deficit with West Germany.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the three months to April, the "crude" balance of trade with West Germany was a deficit of £2·1 billion.

Inflation

138. Mr. Oppenheim To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the level of inflation.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend addressed the CBI's annual dinner on 17 May, at which a wide range of topics were discussed.

Mortgages

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average increase in repayments per week on the average mortgage in each region between 1 June 1988 and today.

Mr. Lilley: The figures in the table do not allow for the fact that interest rate payments on many mortgages are adjusted annually and do not reflect each adjustment in the vote. Consequently average movements in amounts actually paid will be less than shown.

The information is as follows:

Region	Average new mortgage[1]	Weekly payment[2]		Increase
		June 1988 9·8 per cent. interest rate	June 1990 15·3 per cent. interest rate
	£	£	£	£
Northern	26,800	37·88	59·14	21·26
Yorkshire and Humberside	30,500	43·35	67·67	24·33
East Midlands	35,900	53·52	83·56	30·04
East Anglia	40,700	62·57	97·68	35·12
Greater London	58,000	95·17	148·59	53·41
South East	53,500	86·69	135·35	48·65
South West	42,700	66·34	103·57	37·23
West Midlands	35,100	52·02	81·21	29·19
North West	33,200	48·43	75·62	27·18
Wales	31,700	45·61	71·20	25·60
Scotland	25,900	36·61	57·15	20·55
Northern Ireland	22,600	31·94	49·87	17·93
United Kingdom	39,000	59·37	92·68	33·32

PRIME MINISTER

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what actions she has taken in respect of the maintenance of the taxonomic and palaeontological collections in the natural history museum in south Kensington.

The Prime Minister: I understand that within the overall objectives set out in the natural history museum's corporate plan 1990-95, the museum's taxonomic and palaeontological collections will continue to be maintained. These collections are central to the museum's scientific work, and scientific and public visitors will continue to enjoy access to the collections. The Government increased the museum's grant in aid by 16·5 per cent. this year to over £25 million.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Biotechnology

128. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on European Economic Community proposals for ethical standards in biotechnology.

129. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on European Economic Community proposals for ethical standards in biotechnology.

130. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on European Economic Community proposals for ethical standards in biotechnology.

Mr. Jackson: No formal proposals have been made within the European Economic Community for ethical standards in biotechnology. The Government would look carefully at any such proposals on their merits.

Pupil Testing

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how the pilot studies on testing at age seven years are to be evaluated; and when he will inform Parliament of his decision regarding the nature of the test to be used in schools in 1991;

(2) what reports he has received from the organisations using pilot SATs for seven-year-olds; and if he will place them in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: The three agencies which developed the standard assessment tasks used in this summer's pilot assessments will shortly submit evaluation reports to the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC). SEAC will in turn advise my right hon. Friend about the outcome of the pilot assessments. In addition Her Majesty's inspectorate, in collaboration with SEAC and the Department, will host conferences later this month for the teachers who took part in the pilot exercise.

In the light of this work, a revised specification for the standard assessment tasks for use in the first national assessments of seven-year-olds in 1991 will be issued in the autumn.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools took part in each of the pilot studies for SATs at seven years of age; and how many children were involved.

Mrs. Rumbold: Just over 21,000 pupils in 619 schools in England and Wales participated in this summer's pilot assessments of seven-year-olds in English, mathematics and science.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the implications of his announcement of 8 June of changes in the criteria considered in approving city technology colleges on the proposal for a city technology college in Corby.

Mrs. Rumbold: The criteria for establishing city technology colleges have not changed. The plans for a city technology college in Corby are well advanced, and it is on course to open in September 1991.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science at what stage are the plans for a city technology college in Corby; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Plans for the establishment of the city technology college are now well advanced. Detailed designs for the college building have been agreed and submitted to Corby district council for full planning consent. Management contractors have been appointed and a start on site is programmed for early July with completion planned to allow for a September 1991 opening.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the money raised from the private sector for the city technology college in Corby.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date a total of £1·6 million of private sector sponsorship has been pledged; £1·1 million of this is in the form of a donation of land from the lead sponsor, Mr. Hugh de Cappell Brooke. A further £0·5 million has been pledged from other private sector sponsors, who wish to remain anonymous for the time being. The principal sponsor has agreed to underwrite any shortfall in the £1·99 million that is required from the private sector should further sponsorship not prove forthcoming.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the effect of the city technology college in Corby on surrounding schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: A city technology college in Corby will introduce healthy competition for pupils—as will any independent school. However, the sponsors' intentions are that the city technology college's catchment area should be drawn as wide as is practicable to minimise the impact on individual schools.

Student Loans

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the administrative costs of the student loans scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: The Student Loans Company's provisional budget for the financial year 1990-91 is £14·25 million, exclusive of VAT. The figure includes both pre-operational and operational costs. On present estimates, total pre-operational costs will amount to some £10 million, consisting of expenditure of £4·3 million in 1989-90 and £5·8 million in the first five months of 1990-91.

The Government have said throughout the passage of the Education (Student Loans) Bill and subsequently that the administration costs of the loans scheme in the first year of its operation were expected to be in the range £10 million to £20 million. I am pleased to confirm that the outcome is a figure well below the maximum of that range.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Saudi Arabia

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters he discussed during his recent visit to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Waldegrave: During his visit to Saudi Arabia my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs had very useful discussions with King Fahd and Saudi Ministers on a wide range of regional and bilateral issues. They agreed in particular on the urgent need for progress towards a settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute. My right hon. Friend signed a bilateral agreement on the confiscation of drug-trafficking assets.

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the occasions at international conferences or meetings within the last five years when Her Majesty's Government have formally rejected or objected to the territorial claim of the Republic of Ireland over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: I am not aware of any occasions in the last five years where the Government of the Republic of Ireland have raised a territorial claim over the United Kingdom at an international conference or meeting.

United Kingdom sovereignty over Northern Ireland, as a matter of international law, is clear. Our sovereignty is manifested, day by day, by acts of legislation, Government and the courts. Further, in article 1 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, both Governments affirmed

"that any change in the status of Northern Ireland would only come about with the consent of a majority of the people of Northern Ireland".

Israel

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in his message to Mr. Yasser Arafat, conveyed by Her Majesty's ambassador in Baghdad on 8 June, he asked Mr. Arafat to condemn the attempted attack on beaches near Tel Aviv on 30 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. All deliberately planned acts of violence must be condemned unequivocally.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what protests have been conveyed by Her Majesty's consul-general in Jerusalem to prominent local Palestinians regarding the terrorist bomb explosion in the Mahane Yehuda market on 28 May.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no reason to associate any prominent local Palestinian with the Mahane Yehuda explosion, which was immediately condemned by one of their number, Mr. Feisal Husseini.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, at his meeting with Bassam Abu Sharif on 5 June, the Minister of State expressed concern about the reported threat by Abu Al Abbas to carry out more terrorist attacks on Israel; and what further protests are intended by Her Majesty's Government to the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes, I told Mr. Abu Sharif of our deep concern about the PLF raid on Israel on 30 May and urged the PLO to continue to adhere to its commitment to renounce terrorism.

Iran

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts were made by British officials to meet Iranian representatives in Dublin on or about 16 May; and with what result.

Mr. Waldegrave: It was our understanding that the Iranians wanted a meeting. We had told them that we were willing to have a brief contact in Dublin. In the event they did not take up our offer.

Burma

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Burmese Government urging them to respect the results of the recent election there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 29 May we urged the SLORC to give effect to the clearly expressed wish of the people of Burma and called for the early release of the imprisoned leaders of the democratic parties and for the unconditional lifting of martial law. On 6 June the European Community called on the military regime to respect the results of the elections by handing over power to a Government chosen by the newly elected Parliament without delay and to release political leaders in detention immediately.

We are now considering what further representations might be made and when.

Taiwan

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning Government policy towards Taiwan.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since 1950, when we ceased to recognise the nationalist authorities as the Government of China, it has been the policy of successive Governments to have no formal dealings with the authorities in Taiwan. We do, however, seek to promote unofficial trade and cultural links between the United Kingdom and Taiwan.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Disabled People (Aid)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of funds provided by the British Government for development in the third world is given to schemes which promote the interests and welfare of disabled people; and what percentage of the support (a) was categorised as (i) medical, (ii) employment, (iii) education and (iv) social improvement and (b) is allocated through (1) national Governments, (2) international statutory agencies and (3) voluntary organisations.

Mrs. Chalker: Much of our aid directly and indirectly benefits disabled people along with other groups and it is not possible to quantify the proportion which assists disabled people specifically. Nor is it practicable to divide such aid into medical, employment, education and social categories, as these very often overlap in the same projects.

Under ODA's bilateral programme however there are a number of projects which can be identified as being designed to benefit disabled people specifically; for example, assistance to speech therapy for children and transport for the Disabled People's Association in Fiji was about £20,000 and in India we spent about £180,000 on helping to improve the physiotherapy services provided by local spastics societies and about £70,000 for the benefit of disabled children in slums.

In addition, the joint funding scheme, which helps to finance the work of United Kingdom voluntary organisations in developing countries, provided over £651,000 in financial year 1989-90 on projects designed specifically to benefit disabled people; that was approximately 4 per cent. of the scheme's total expenditure for the year. There are many other JFS projects which benefit disabled people without being specifically targeted on them, because they seek to meet needs of those identified as having special difficulties in life.

Several of the international agencies which we support, such as WHO, UNHCR and UNIDO undertake projects which promote the welfare of disabled people.

TRANSPORT

Jet Cockpit Window Incident

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the air accidents investigation branch will conduct a formal investigation into the circumstances in which the forward cockpit window of a British Airways BAe 1-11 was secured by means of non-specified bolts; what information he has as to whether the Civil Aviation Authority intends to investigate the incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The accident is the subject of a formal investigation by the Department's air accidents investigation branch. The role of accident investigation is deliberately separated from that of safety regulation, for which the Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility, to avoid a conflict of interest.

The AAIB will keep the CAA informed of any relevant findings. On 12 June, as a result of the AAIB investigation, the CAA issued a notice to owners-operators of BAe 1-11 aircraft concerning the windscreen attachment bolts.

Underground Trains

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 152, if he will call for a report from the chairman of London Underground Ltd. into the death of Mr.

Raymond Knight and the implications for public safety of one-person-operated underground trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: At the recent inquest into Mr. Knight's death, Her Majesty's coroner recorded a unanimous verdict of accidental death and that he intended to send a report to the railway inspectorate. The report has not yet been received but when it is, I will consider any recommendations that may be made. I will also write to the hon. Member.

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many applications to the Civil Aviation Authority for the approval of smoke hoods meeting CAA specification No. 20 are still current.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that three applications are still current.

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many smoke hoods submitted for approval under CAA specification No. 20 are being subjected to development tests; and if he will make a statement on the current position.

Mr. McLoughlin: The CAA does not carry out tests on items submitted to it for approval against a specification. It is for the developer of the item to submit evidence of compliance, which the CAA then evaluates.

I understand that no applicant so far has satisfied the CAA that the specification has been met.

Rail Services

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rail passenger service journey miles there were in England, Wales and Scotland, respectively, in 1979; and what were the comparable figures for 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics of rail passenger journeys are not broken down by geographical area.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many employees of his Department are concerned with (a) roads, (b) rail transport, (c) civil aviation and (d) cycling.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 19 June 1990]: My Department has about 2,300 staff concerned with roads and traffic, 135 with rail transport and 145 with civil aviation; about 40 staff in the Department spend some part of their time on cycling-related work.

The substantially greater numbers concerned with roads reflect the Department's direct responsibility for the national roads programme, whereas provision of infrastructure for other transport modes is the concern of other bodies, for example, British Rail and the British Airports Authority.

ENVIRONMENT

Business Rents

125. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has any plans to introduce measures to curb increases in business rents above inflation.

126. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to investigate the problem of rising business rents; and if he will make a statement.

127. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will undertake a study on increases in urban business rents and their impact on local communities.

Mr. Chope: The Government have no plans to introduce measures to control business rents. These are matters for negotiation between landlord and tenant. Information about changes in rental levels is already available; in addition we monitor the situation under the main legislation for business tenancies—part II of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954.

World Recycling Conference

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department will be represented at the world recycling conference in Baltimore, United States of America, on 27 to 29 June.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Insulating Materials (Waste Disposal)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance he gives on the disposal of (a) high-temperature insulating materials such as asbestos, ceramic spray and fibre, and calcium silicate and (b) waste from the manufacturing plants which produce such materials;

(2) what guidance he gives on the disposal of (a) low-temperature insulating materials such as polystyrene, polyurethane and phenolics and (b) waste from the manufacturing plants which produce such materials.

Mr. Trippier: Guidance on the disposal of asbestos is given in "Waste Management Paper 18", and advice on the other materials and the wastes from their manufacture is to be found in a number of other WMPs published by my Department.

Football Trust

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange to have deposited in the Library the minutes of the Football Trust meetings.

Mr. Moynihan: The Football Trust 1990 is a discretionary trust and it is for it to decide whether or not to publish the minutes of its meetings.

Housing, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the median fair rent set by the rent officer service on Merseyside; what is the median for the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The median of the fair rents registered in Merseyside in the last six months of 1989 was £18 per week. The corresponding figure for England and Wales was £25·27 per week.

Land Registers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost of maintaining the register of derelict land.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of land currently on the land register; and what is the cost to the taxpayer each year in keeping it up to date.

Mr. Moynihan: Currently some £6,000 per year. This relates largely to the storage of the information on computer. Since the introduction of owners' registers last autumn maintenance of my right hon. Friend's land registers has been concentrated on sites where the use of his powers to direct disposal is in question, for example, in connection with the public request to order disposal scheme.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for opencast development, having gone to appeal, have been refused by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Since April 1987, the first date from which comprehensive data are available, 62 opencast mining appeals have been under consideration with the Secretary of State. During that time, 22 appeals have been upheld and 20 dismissed. One appeal has been withdrawn and 19 appeals have yet to be decided.

Tenants' Choice

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the chairman of the Housing Corporation to discuss tenants' choice.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Local Government

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in favour of reintroducing all-purpose county boroughs.

Mr. Portillo: Several: to which we have replied that major structural change in English local government is not on the agenda.

Community Forests

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the establishment of new community forests surrounding urban areas.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has welcomed this project launched jointly by the Countryside and Forestry Commissions in July last year. We look forward to the successful establishment of the three forests of this type which the Government have authorised: at Tyne and Wear, south Staffordshire and east London. In due course we will consider proposals for such forests elsewhere in England and Wales.

Water Quality

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the European Court of Justice to present its preliminary verdict on the infringement procedures initiated by the Commission against the United Kingdom Government and other member states concerning the implementation of directive 76/160 on bathing water quality and directive 80/778 on drinking water quality.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Her Majesty's Government have received no indication from the European Court of Justice of when it intends to take further action on the cases currently before the court in relation to these two directives.

Tyneside Enterprise Zone

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional contribution to the uniform business rate pool the Government propose to make in respect of the (a) Gateshead and (b) Newcastle sections of the Tyneside enterprise zone.

Mr. Chope: None. As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member of 7 June, Official Report, column 688, under the new local government finance system business properties in enterprise zones are exempt from rating. A figure broadly equivalent to the amount of rates that would have been paid but for this exemption was added to the revenue support grant for England for 1990-91.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many man years of inspection were devoted to the task of supervising and monitoring licensed radioactive waste disposal sites by Her Majesty's Government's inspectorate of pollution in each of the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. Available information on the inspection effort devoted to premises regulated under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and prior to that by Her Majesty's radiochemical inspectorate in the past five years is contained in the Department's management information system returns MINIS 6-10 available in the Library of the House. The MINIS 11 report covering 1989-90 will be placed in the Library in due course.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the licence holders and sites licensed for radioactive waste disposal under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, together with the date the licence was issued and the term it has to run.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the Department's "List of Premises in England and Wales currently authorised under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 (RSA60) to dispose of radioactive waste" a copy of which is in the Library of the House. It is not normal practice for authorisations under RSA60 to have a termination date although all are subject to periodic review. Information relating to the date of issue of each authorisation can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Water Pollution

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) of 19 March, Official Report, column 490, he will identify those small, localised inshore locations where evidence of eutrophication has been found; what evidence he has of trends in nutrients in coastal and estuarial waters of the United Kingdom; and what examination of fluxes of nutrients, through which estuaries, and by whom, is, or is proposed to be, undertaken.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The inshore locations where evidence of eutrophication has been found are the Norfolk Broads, Langstone harbour, Poole harbour, Tywi estuary, inner Moray Firth and Loch Neagh. Nutrient levels in coastal and estuarial waters have been monitored since 1960 by the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea: it reports no sign of a rising trend in levels. Monitoring of nutrients in coastal and estuarial waters in England and Wales is now the responsibility of the National Rivers Authority.

Isle of Sheppey

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to make a decision on the inquiry into the Lionhope scheme on the Isle of Sheppey.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The inquiry will open on 25 September and is expected to last for four weeks. A decision will be issued as soon as possible after the inspector's report has been received.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the president of the Linnean Society on the effects of cuts in research on palaeontological reference collections at the natural history museum on scientific research to underpin the development of current policies on the environment.

Mr. Trippier: The Secretary of State for the Environment has received no such representations from the president of the Linnean Society.

Housing Associations

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the HOTCHA scheme to provide grants for house purchase for tenants of housing associations ceased; and what plans he has to replace the scheme.

Mr. Chope: The winding up of the home ownership scheme for tenants of charitable housing associations—HOTCHA—was announced on 14 December 1988. No new applications were accepted by the Housing Corporation after that date but existing applications were honoured provided the applicant could secure the necessary approvals and exchange contracts by 31 March 1990.

The Housing Corporation is in the process of introducing a new scheme, known as the tenants' incentive scheme—TIS—under which registered housing associations, whether or not charitable, may give grants to assist their tenants to move out and buy homes of their own. A total of £33 million is being made available for TIS grants in 1990-91 under the Housing Corporation's approved development programme. Of this, £12 million will be for tenants of charitable housing associations who applied under the HOTCHA scheme, but did not complete their purchase in time. The balance of £21 million will be for new applicants for TIS grants. In total up to 2,500 housing association tenants stand to benefit from the tenants' incentive scheme in 1990-91.

Green Belt Areas

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria his Department uses when approving re-designation of green belt land as an employment area.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Planning policy guidance note 2 sets out the Government's planning policy on green belts. Once the extent of a green belt has been established it should be altered only in exceptional circumstances.

Leeds Development Corporation

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations from the Leeds development corporation about the level of funding for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The resource requirements of the corporation are under review as part of the normal annual discussions which form part of the public expenditure survey cycle. No other representation about either current or future financial years have been received.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities responsible for recycling have installed magnetic separators for reclaiming reusable steel.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on Thursday 26 April 1990, Official Report, column 296.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government's new legislation on the environment will allow local authorities to enter into index-linked contracts to supply waste to private companies seeking to recycle and reclaim that waste, on a joint venture basis where the private partner is covering all capital costs whilst simultaneously allowing the local authority a minority position on the board of directors of the joint venture company.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 June 1990]: Yes. We expect that local authorities will want to enter into long-term contracts for waste disposal, in which index-linking may well be appropriate. Authorities will also be encouraged to enter into joint ventures with private sector disposal companies, as a means of securing private sources of finance for capital schemes.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the regulations and intentions that govern the consideration of proprietary technologies in a competitive tendering process for the disposal of domestic waste; and how he will assess those technologies that emerge offering the ability to recycle and reclaim domestic waste.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 June 1990]: There are no plans to issue regulations governing the consideration of proprietary technologies for the disposal of waste. Individual disposal authorities will make their own decisions about awarding contracts having regard to the potential of new technologies that are developed for disposal and recycling.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require disposal or other authorities to give a value to waste recycled or reclaimed, by volume, at the competitive tendering stage; and what steps he will take to ensure that tendering contractors are not disadvantaged by cheap landfilling during the consideration of such tenders.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 June 1990]: Disposal authorities will be encouraged, through the provisions of the Environmental Protection Bill, to maximise recycling and waste minimisation. Contractors will be able to estimate the potential value of waste to be recycled and will adjust their contract price accordingly. It will then be for disposal authorities to consider tenders on their respective merits having regard to environmental factors. There will be no requirement to accept the lowest bid.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require the real costs of landfill to be considered, as opposed to gate fees, when competitive tenders for waste disposal are made.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The introduction of competitive tendering, under the provisions in the Environmental Protection Bill, will force all disposal contractors to bid on the basis of the full costs of waste disposal, including the restoration and after-care of landfill sites.

Cricket Grounds

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to improve safety at cricket grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

All cricket grounds which have been identified as providing accommodation for more than 10,000 spectators have been designated as sports grounds requiring safety certificates under the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975. Stands or other accommodation which can hold at least 500 spectators for viewing under cover at grounds which are not designated under the 1975 Act are subject to safety certification by local authorities under part III of the Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987. Local authorities have, in consequence wide powers to secure the safety of spectators.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures are available to him to deal with local councils that (a) have not submitted a design for an emergency control centre, (b) have not identified a site for an emergency control centre and (c) have stated that they will not comply with the latest civil defence regulations;

(2) what is the deadline set by his Department for local councils to agree to comply with the latest civil defence regulations; and by what date councils will have to identify a site and complete a design for an emergency control centre;

(3) what reasons have been given by local councils for not implementing the civil regulations set by the Government.

Mr. John Patten: No local authority has refused to discharge its responsibilities under the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983. There are many reasons why individual authorities may not yet have fully implemented the regulations and the planned programme for implementation of the regulations ensures that the Home Office is in touch with them all. The regulations do not provide for the setting of a deadline for compliance.

The Civil Defence (General) Regulations 1949 contain sanctions which are available to the designated Minister if he is satisfied that any local authority has failed or refused properly to discharge any of the civil defence functions conferred on it; alternatively the Civil Defence (Grant) Regulations 1953 provide for the withholding of grant.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of local councils that (a) have so far failed to comply with the latest civil defence regulations, (b) have not chosen a site for an emergency centre and (c) have not yet submitted designs for an emergency centre.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 10 May at column 198.

Child Abuse

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to implement the Pigot report on the giving of legal evidence by children in child abuse cases; whether he has received representations on this subject since 10 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are still considering, with the benefit of the favourable comments received upon the Pigot report, what proposals we should make on video-recording children's evidence. We receive occasional letters in support of making it easier for children to give evidence.

Cautions

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is the practice of the Metropolitan police to release to the press details of cautions given under the Attorney-General's guidelines.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Upon request the Metropolitan police will (a) make available statistics of cautions given over a period and (b) confirm that an unnamed person arrested or reported for an offence has been dealt with by way of a caution. They will not disclose the identity of anyone who has been cautioned.

Poaching

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there were for poaching in 1988 and 1989; and how many of those convictions were associated with assault.

Mr. John Patten: In 1988, there were 980 convictions for the offence of poaching. The 1989 data will not be available until the autumn. It is not possible from the information held centrally to identify the number of poaching convictions which are also associated with offences of assault.

Immigration

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action is being taken to trace the 33 Chinese student democracy activists who failed to meet a bus sent by the immigration service to take them for interview at Harmondsworth on 11 May;

(2) if he will reconsider his Department's decision that Panama affords sufficient protection to be considered a country of third settlement;

(3) if it is the intention to return 33 Chinese nationals, formerly members of the student democracy movement, to Panama; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 33, who have failed to comply with the terms of their temporary admission, are now in this country illegally, and no decision on any aspect of their applications can be made until they report to an immigration officer to regularise their position. Any representations then made on their behalf will be considered fully and carefully. Their representatives have been informed of the position.

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. Waddington: Information on management consultancy awarded before 1985, and the outcome of studies conducted over the last 10 years is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The cost of individual management consultancy contracts is a matter of commercial confidentiality which it would not be proper to disclose. For details of studies carried out in 1985 I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, East (Mr. Mates) on 14 July 1986 at column 333 and for 1986 to 1989 to the replies given to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 18 February 1987 at column 643, 26 April 1988 at column 86, 4 April 1989 at column 30, and 3 April 1990 at column 557. The following studies have been commissioned in the current year:

Price Waterhouse
Financial Advice on the Privatisation of the IBA Transmission Network.

NERA
Advice on the economic regulation of the privatised IBA Transmission Network.

Norton Rose
Legal Advisers on the Privatisation of the IBA Transmission Network.

Touche Ross
Assistance with Passport Office Agency.

Police Cells

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give particulars of each escape from police cells in England and Wales since 11 June 1987, including the charges faced by each escaped prisoner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state his policy on the use of police cells to house remand prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: In present circumstances there is no practical alternative to the use of police cells where prisoners cannot be received into an appropriate prison. My right hon. and learned Friend and I very much regret the need to hold remand prisoners in police cells at all. The current level of use is a result largely of disruptive industrial action or lack of good will on the part of staff in some establishments and I can assure the hon. and learned

Member that every effort is being made to resolve the difficulties. We are most grateful to the police for their assistance.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners are held in police cells in Wales at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: By Tuesday 19 June the number of prisoners having to be held in police cells in south Wales as a direct result of industrial action by prison officers at Her Majesty's prison Swansea had been reduced to four. While the dispute has not been resolved, sufficient good will exists to have enabled this reduction to be brought about.

We very much regret the necessity to have recourse to police cells at all.

Summer Time

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the responses to the Green Paper "Summer Time—A Consultation Document," Cm. 722.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 30,867 responses have been received following publication of the Green Paper, of which 26,029 were in the form of signatories to petitions. Excluding signatories to petitions, 50 per cent. were in favour of moving into central European time—single "summer" time in the winter, double "summer" time in the summer until the beginning of October—46 per cent. were in favour of the status quo, and 4 per cent. were in favour of harmonising summer time along with other EC countries—in effect finishing summer time one month early. Of the signatories to the petitions, 22,684 were in support of central European time and 3,345 were against change. The response in England and Wales was very different from that in Scotland. A total of 59 per cent. of letters and 100 per cent. of signatories to petitions from England and Wales supported central European time; 90 per cent. of letters and 80 per cent. of signatories to petitions from Scotland supported the status quo. Only 10 responses were received from Northern Ireland. A detailed breakdown of the responses is being placed in the Library.

Correspondence

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement in regard to the letter sent to him from Dr. Raine Roberts, the forensic physician and clinical director of the sexual assault referral centre in Manchester, by the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe.

Mr. John Patten: Dr. Roberts' concern is that children giving evidence in criminal trials of alleged sexual abuse can be identified by members of the public in court, and could be subject to unwelcome attention from them.

The courts already have power, under section 37 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, to exclude from the court anyone not directly concerned with the case except a bona fide representative of the press, who may be prevented from publishing identifying details of a person under 17 who plays any part in the proceedings. In addition, if there is fear of interference with any witness, the witness's name and address may be given in writing instead of orally.

Use of these powers would seem the appropriate way to deal with the problem.

Naturalisation

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the length of time currently being taken to process naturalisation cases and the expected time scale for new applications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 June 1990]: Present waiting times for naturalisation cases stem from the exceptional level of citizenship applications of all kinds received at the end of 1987. The increase in naturalisation applications seems to have resulted from a mistaken belief on the part of many applicants that the then ending of certain rights of registration applied also to naturalisation. Many applied after long previous residence in the United Kingdom without apparently experiencing either inconvenience over travelling or earlier desire to assume citizenship. All have been warned that their applications would be subject to considerable delay.

In May 1990, the average waiting time for all citizenship applications completed in that month was 26 months; for naturalisation alone it was 29 months. These long waiting times result from the large number of applications—almost 300,000—submitted in 1987. The number of applications received from January 1988 was much smaller, and when the end-1987 cases are cleared the position will begin to improve.

My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 31 January, in answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler), that nationality work would be transferred to Liverpool by 1991. That transfer is proceeding. Earlier forecasts of performance are, however, having to be revised in the light of new information about intake of new applications, the disruption caused by the process of transfer, and lower levels of output on the more difficult naturalisation casework than on registration. It is now clear that we shall not be able to reduce waiting times as quickly as we had hoped, and although we continue to expect an improvement later in this financial year and next, they are likely to remain above 20 months until some time after April 1991.

We regret waiting times of this length and are giving urgent consideration to the priority that should be given to nationality work as against other functions of the immigration and nationality department. Close account will also be taken of the report of the Home Affairs Committee published today. It is, however, relevant to note that those awaiting the determination of citizenship applications are not prevented from continuing to enjoy residence rights or from travelling on the passports of their current nationality.

Prisoners (Disciplinary Offences)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number and proportion of prisoners appearing before disciplinary hearings of boards of visitors who were legally represented in the most recent available year.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 June 1990]: The centrally held data relate to the numbers of offences on which boards of visitors adjudicate. The latest data are for 1988 when applications for legal representations were granted in respect of hearings for 33 offences, that is, 0·8 per cent. of the number of offences on which boards of visitors adjudicated.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were found guilty of disciplinary offences by boards of visitors in the most recent available year; how many were deprived of remission; and what was the breakdown of lengths of remission forfeited.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 15 June 1990]: The centrally held data relate to the numbers of punishments awarded. From 1 April 1989 the maximum penalty available to boards of visitors was reduced to 120 days' forfeiture of remission. The most recent data were for 1988 when boards of visitors awarded 5,180 unsuspended punishments. A total of 3,108 of these were forfeiture of remission and were broken down as follows:

Number of days remission forfeited	Number of punishments
1-7	78
8-14	65
15-28	177
29-30	141
31-60	1,479
61-90	928
91-120	168
Over 120	72

Football Licensing Authority

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the reason for the delay in setting up the Football Licensing Authority.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 18 June 1990]: It has been necessary to review the proposed role of the Football Licensing Authority in the light of Lord Justice Taylor's report on the Hillsborough stadium disaster, and the Government's subsequent decision not to proceed with the national football membership scheme and the Football Membership Authority. As a result of that review, responsibility for the authority was formally transferred to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department in May. It has been necessary to consider carefully how the authority's powers could best be used to bring about all-seated accommodation at football grounds, as proposed by Lord Justice Taylor, and the sort of qualities and experience which would be required among its members and staff to equip it for its revised role. This work has taken longer than had been hoped, but is now largely completed. I hope that an announcement about appointments to the authority can be made before the start of the next football season. In the meantime, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State has already met the football authorities, and officials are in close touch with them, to ensure that there is no avoidable delay in implementing the important safety measures recommended in Lord Justice Taylor's report.

WALES

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90 is given in the table:

Consultant and cost	Subject	Outcome
1988-89 (£39,187)
Coopers and Lybrand	Monitoring payment arrangements for Urban Development Grants.	Report accepted by Department and where appropriate recommendations were implemented.
Coopers and Lybrand	Evalution of Regional Selective Assistance.	As at 1 above.
Pieda (Planning and economic development consultants)	An impact study of the development of rural initiative venture and enterprise (DRIVE).	Modifications suggested were adopted in relaunched scheme.
Leslie Hays and Assocs.	Evaluation of Regional Enterprise Grant Scheme.	As at 1 above.
Frank Griffiths	Purchasing in the Welsh Office.	Recommendations implemented.
HMSO	Review of the organisation of Welsh Office Print Room.	Recommendations implemented.
1989-90 (£44,725)
Leslie Hays Consultancies Ltd.	Evaluation of Regional Enterprise Grant.	As at 1 above.
Price Waterhouse	Training needs Analysis.	Report received in April 1990 Recommendations are under consideration.
Touche Ross	Management Review of NHS Directorate.	All the key recommendations have been implemented.

It would be disproportionately costly to provide the information required for the earlier years.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list for each area covered by TECs in Wales the payments granted by the Training Agency in Wales for 1990-91 per trainee for each of the courses; and whether such payments included the travelling costs of trainees.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Details of unit costs are confidential to the Training Agency and individual course managers. Payments under YT and ET include trainees' travelling costs in excess of £3 and £4 per week respectively.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people with glaucoma and diabetes received free eye tests in each district health authority area in Wales (a) in each quarter in 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: Estimates of numbers of sight tests for different types of patient are based on a 2 per cent. sample. This sample is not sufficient to make robust estimates by patient type within district health authority areas.

Ferry Services, Fishguard

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met both chairman and chief executive of Sealink to discuss passenger ferry services at Fishguard; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There has been no meeting between my right hon. Friend and Sealink to discuss services from Fishguard. No such meeting has been requested.

Mid-Wales Development Board

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much capital was invested by the mid-Wales development board in Ceredigion in 1989; what were the corresponding figures for the last 10 years: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure by the Development Board for Rural Wales in Ceredigion in the financial year 1989-90 was £1·3 million. The corresponding figures for the previous 10 years are as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	0·75
1980-81	0·61
1981-82	0·73
1982-83	0·78
1983-84	1·25
1984-85	1·50
1985-86	1·74
1986-87	0·98
1987-88	0·70
1988-89	0·98

The figures confirm the continuing commitment by the DBRW to sustaining social and economic development within the district of Ceredigion.

Youth Training

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether he will list the managing organisations currently operating youth training schemes in each area covered by the TECs; and whether he will list the courses each organisation was running prior to the issuing of new training contracts indicating (a) how many places each organisation had contracted for under each course, (b) how many places had actually been filled in 1989 and (c) what was the total contribution to each managing organisation for the Training Agency in 1988-89 and 1989-90;

(2) whether he will list in each area covered by the TECs in Wales the managing organisations operating youth training schemes under the new contracts issued by the Training Agency indicating (1) how many places have been allocated to each organisation and each course under the new contracts and (2) the percentage increase or decrease in places and financial contribution to each managing organisation estimated by the Training Agency under the new contracts.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 8 June 1990]: The training agencies have now provided the details requested. However, due to the volume and format of this information I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of the reply in the Library of the House.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 June on bathing waters, if he will make it his policy to encourage the display of information on water quality on beaches which do not currently have European Community designation.

Mr. Grist: As I said in my answer of 13 June, we will be encouraging local authorities to make this information more readily available but it is for them to decide where in their areas such notices should be placed.

Flexi-ownership

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received concerning the flexi-ownership scheme; how many were (a) in favour and (b) against the scheme; how many of these representations are from (i) individuals, (ii) organisations and (iii) local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No representations have been received against flexi-ownership. Seventeen individuals and one local authority have written expressing interest.

The Development Board for Rural Wales, which administers the scheme, has received 116 inquiries from tenants.

Employment Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the latest available figures for spending and the number of participants on each of his Department's training and employment measures in Wales in (a) the last three years, (b) the current year and (c) projections for the next three years.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 13 June 1990]: The information requested for 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 is shown in the table. Actual figures for 1990-91 and projections for the next three years are not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Japan

14. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with Japan.

100. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with Japan.

107. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with Japan.

Mr. Ridley: In the four months to the end of April 1990, the United Kingdom trade deficit in manufactured goods with Japan was £1·4 billion, a decrease of 9 per cent. compared with the same period last year.

Environmental Proposals

15. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to encourage British industry to be environmentally friendly.

62. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to encourage British industry to be environmentally friendly.

88. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new proposals to encourage British industry to be environmentally friendly.

Mr. Forth: I shall continue to encourage British industry to respond positively to the challenges and opportunities presented by environmental isssues. A new environment unit has been established in my Department to focus on the impact of environmental issues on business efficiency and competitiveness and in particular to encourage and advise on the development of improved environmental technology, waste management and recycling.

Patents

16. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average time for the completion of processing a patent application.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The average time is estimated at three years and 10 months.

Insider Trading

17. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on plans to improve the detection of insider trading.

Mr. Forth: No. I am not aware that there is a significant amount of insider dealing which goes undetected. If the hon. Gentleman has evidence to the contrary, I should be grateful if he would give it to me.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on an inquiry involving oral evidence on 5 June from Mr. Nigel Harris of the AUEW, Mr. Alan Harris, Mr. Bill Menzies and the hon. Member for Linlithgow.

Mr. Ridley: I expect to receive the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report by 3 August.

30. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many takeover bids have been referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: Since 1979, 104 merger situations qualifying for investigation under the merger provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973, and three merger situations between water enterprises qualifying for investigation under the provisions of the Water Act 1989, have been referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. In addition, there have been 14 references to the commission under the newspaper merger provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

42. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement as to his policy on referring acquisitions and mergers to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission against the recommendation of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Ridley: Under the Fair Trading Act 1973, the Director General of Fair Trading makes a recommendation to me as to whether a merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. It is for me alone to decide whether or not to accept the director general's recommendation. I treat each case on its merits. However, in the vast majority of cases, I agree with the recommendation made by the director general.

Research and Development

121. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the levels of Government-funded research and development for (a) Japan, (b) the United States of America and (c) the United Kingdom for the years 1985 to 1989.

20. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the levels of Government-funded research and development for (a) Japan, (b) the United States of America and (c) the United Kingdom for the years 1985 to 1989.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Government- funded R and D as a percentage of GDP was between 1·3 per cent. and 1·0 per cent. for the United Kingdom in the period 1985 to 1988. For the United States of America, the corresponding figures were between 1·3 per cent. and 1·2 per cent. For Japan, the percentage was constant at 0·5 per cent. No figures are yet available for 1989.

Debt Advice

21. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to increase spending on debt advice work.

69. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to increase spending on debt advice work.

Mr. Forth: None. My Department does not specifically fund debt advice much of which is provided by citizens advice bureaux, as part of their general service. DTI grant in aid to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Citizens Advice Scotland, which provide the support services for individual citizens advice bureaux will amount to more than £11 million in 1990-91, compared with some £10 million last year. Individual bureaux are funded mainly by local authorities.

Information Technology

22. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take to reduce the balance of payments deficit in information technology.

31. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take to reduce the balance of payments deficit in information technology.

38. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take to reduce the balance of payments deficit in information technology.

Mr. Forth: The Government's policy is to create the right climate for profitable investment. The success of that policy is shown by the substantial investments being made in the United Kingdom by many of the world's leading companies in the IT industry.

Plessey

23. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received on the subject of the GEC/Siemens takeover of Plessey.

45. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received on the subject of the GEC/Siemens takeover of Plessey.

70. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received on the subject of the GEC/Siemens takeover of Plessey.

Mr. Ridley: Ministers have received four recent representations about the GEC/Siemens takeover of Plessey.

Steel Industry

24. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the steel industry in the United Kingdom.

99. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received about ensuring the future of the steel industry in the United Kingdom.

106. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the steel industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ridley: I have received a number of representations on the future of the steel industry in the United Kingdom.

91. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage the development of specialised steel making.

Mr. Ridley: It is for the industry to take whatever steps it considers appropriate.

82. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to ensure that the steel and special steel industries maintain their internationally competitive position.

Mr. Ridley: It is for the industry itself to ensure that it is competitive.

109. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the chairman of British Steel; and what subjects were discussed.

44. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with British Steel about its decision to close Ravenscraig hot strip mill.

59. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Steel to discuss the Ravenscraig steel plant.

81. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Steel to discuss the future of the Scottish steel industry.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) earlier today.

105. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any correspondence from British Steel plc explaining, with financial details, the decision to close the hot strip mill at Ravenscraig, Lanarkshire; and if he will make a statement about the implications for the steel industry in general.

Mr. Ridley: I have received a copy of a letter from the chairman of British Steel to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland concerning the company's proposal to close the Ravenscraig hot strip mill. The contents of the letter are confidential.

Single European Market

25. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the legislative measures needed to establish the single European market the Council of Ministers has (a) now adopted, (b) reached a common position on and (c) secured agreement in principle to; and what proportion this constitutes of the total programme.

Mr. Ridley: Of the 282 legislative measures set out in the European Commission's White Paper, "Completing the Internal Market", 148 have now been adopted by the Council of Ministers, a common position has been reached on seven, and agreement in principle has been secured on six. Seven measures have also been partially adopted. This constitutes 59 per cent. of the total programme.

Departmental Reorganisation

26. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect the reorganisation of his Department will have on the regions.

71. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect the reorganisation of his Department will have on the regions.

68. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of the reorganisation of his Department on the regions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Policy towards the regions is not affected by the reorganisation of my Department.

Manufacturing Industry

27. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the performance of the British manufacturing industry.

65. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussion he has recently had with the president of the Confederation of British Industry about the performance of British manufacturing industry.

76. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has recently had with the president of the Confederation of British Industry about the performance of British manufacturing industry.

112. Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has recently had with the president of the CBI about the performance of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a range of issues relevant to business.

32. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have no immediate plans to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry.

66. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate, for each year since 1979, whether the United Kingdom had a surplus or a deficit in manufactured goods with other European Community countries.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is shown in the table.

Manufactured goods have been defined as Sections 5 to 8 of the Standard International Trade Classification Revision 3 (SITC (Rev 3)).

49. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

50. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

61. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received a number of representations on the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry.

Exporters

28. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new plans to help exporters.

55. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to help exporters.

119. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to help exporters.

Mr. Ridley: The volume of United Kingdom exports has continued to grow, reflecting the strong position of United Kingdom industry. Excluding oil and erratic items, the volume of exports in the three months to April was 11 per cent. higher than a year earlier. There is a wide range of advice and support available from my Department to assist United Kingdom exporters and of which many firms make use.

Post Office

29. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department has recently had with private companies about the Post Office's letter monopoly.

63. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department has recently had with private companies about the Post Office letter monopoly.

78. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions his Department has recently had with private companies about the Post Office's letter monopoly.

Mr. Forth: Naturally, the Department has discussions with a wide range of private companies in the areas in which it has an interest. Discussions have been held with a number of companies with postal service interests, but on a basis of confidentiality.

Harrods

33. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if any efforts are being made to recover the costs of his Department's investigation into the Harrods takeover from the present owners.

Mr. Ridley: No. Provision for the recovery of the expenses of and incidental to Companies Act inspections is contained in section 439 of the Companies Act 1985, as amended by section 59 of the Companies Act 1989. These provisions are not applicable in the case of House of Fraser Holdings plc.

Juno Project

34. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to provide sufficient funds to ensure the participation of a British astronaut in the Juno project.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The organisers of the Juno project have requested Government funding. Juno was conceived as a private sector venture to put a British astronaut into space on the basis of commercial and media sponsorship. I could not justify diverting resources from the Government's own space programme which has quite different goals, notably earth observation and telecommunications.

Consumer Affairs

35. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what items were discussed at the European Community Consumer Affairs Council on 13 June.

96. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what items were discussed at the European Community Consumer Affairs Council on 13 June.

Mr. Forth: The following items were discussed: the package travel directive, the proposed general product safety directive, the system for the rapid exchange of information on consumer products, the European home and leisure accident surveillance system, and the Commission's three-year plan for consumer policy in the EEC.

102. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of local authorities' trading standards officers to discuss consumer affairs.

95. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the local authorities' trading standards officers to discuss consumer affairs.

46. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the local authorities' trading standards officers to discuss consumer affairs.

Mr. Forth: I met representatives of local authority trading standards officers on three occasions in 1989 to discuss consumer matters and my officials have frequent meetings with trading standards officers.

Industry Council

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the European Economic Community Industry Council meeting of 28 May.

36. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the European Economic Community Industry Council meeting of 28 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Brown) on 14 June 1990, at column 305.

108. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last attended a meeting of the European Council of Industry Ministers at which the subject discussed was steel.

Mr. Ridley: I attend meetings of the European Council of Industry Ministers whenever necessary. The last meeting I attended at which steel was discussed was on 14 November 1989.

74. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the discussions on steel at the European Industry Council.

117. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the discussions on steel at the European Industry Council.

Mr. Ridley: At the 28 May meeting of the Industry Council the European Commission presented its view of the Community steel market over the next five years. There was an exchange of views, but no decisions were taken because the Commission's view is not subject to Council agreement or approval. The Commission also informed the member states that it had started preliminary work examining options for the future of the treaty of Paris which is due to expire in 2002.

Investment

37. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the Confederation of British Industry to discuss investment levels.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a range of issues relevant to business.

Financial Regulation

39. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he expects to discuss financial regulation at his next meeting with the chairman of the stock exchange.

47. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to discuss financial regulation at his next meeting with the chairman of the stock exchange.

86. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to discuss financial regulation at his next meeting with the chairman of the stock exchange.

Mr. Ridley: I meet the chairman of the stock exchange as frequently as necessary for discussion on a range of topics.

114. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's latest assessment of the effectiveness of City regulation.

Mr. Ridley: Regulation of investment business is for the most part the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board, which is the designated agency under the Financial Services Act 1986. Other aspects of City activity are regulated under other arrangements, such as the Insurance Companies Act 1982 and the Banking Act 1987. I am generally satisfied with this regulatory structure. No regulatory system can prevent all fraud and malpractice.

97. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the regulation of financial services.

67. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the regulation of financial services.

72. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the regulation of financial services.

Mr. Ridley: I receive a considerable number of representations on a variety of topics relating to the regulation of financial services. We consider very carefully those which relate to the scope or the framework of the regulatory system or to the powers under the Financial Services Act which the Government retain. Those which relate to matters which are the responsibility of the SIB or another regulatory authority are passed to the appropriate body.

Shipbuilding Industry

40. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received seeking further investment in the shipbuilding industry in the United Kingdom.

84. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received seeking further investment in the shipbuilding industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Various representations have been received relating to investment associated with a resumption of shipbuilding at North East Shipbuilders Ltd's former shipyards in Sunderland. These proposals have not been accepted because of restrictions imposed by the European Communities' sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding.

116. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many vessels, in excess of 500 gross registered tonnes, were built in United Kingdom shipyards in each of the past three years; and what financial assistance was provided for their construction by way of the European Community's shipbuilding fund.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of vessels, in excess of 500 grt, built in the United Kingdom during the last three years is as follows:

1987	1988	1989
14	11	23

Under the shipbuilding intervention fund, assistance is provided to United Kingdom shipyards, for the construction of vessels of over 100 gt, to enable them to quote break-even prices against non-EEC competition. Data are not available specifically on vessels over 500 grt. Total expenditure over the last three financial years is as follows:

1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
£18·8m	£39·4m	£39·9m

The IF is not an EC fund but a subsidy arrangement operated by the Government in accordance with the requirements of the sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding.

58. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about further Government investment in the shipbuilding industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department has not recently received any significant representations.

Safety-critical Software

41. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made towards the setting up of a standard for safety-critical software.

54. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made towards the setting up of a standard for safety-critical software.

73. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made towards the setting up of a standard for safety-critical software.

Mr. Forth: The Government are encouraging the development of standards and guidelines for all systems incorporating software, the failure of which might endanger the safety of people or property. This is being done at both national and international levels. The activity is being co-ordinated by a working group of the interdepartmental committee on software engineering (ICSE) on which a number of relevant Government Departments and agencies are represented.

On 8 June 1990 ICSE publicly launched "SafeIT", a consultative document on the safety of computer-controlled systems. This includes a proposed standards framework. The period for consultation lasts until 30 September 1990 and we are actively seeking the views of users and suppliers in industry and academia as well as Government. DTI and the Health and Safety Executive, which jointly provide the secretariat to ICSE, are co-ordinating the consultative process.

One of the main purposes of the document is to influence the standards-making process. The document emphasises that in order to achieve the full benefits of standardisation, sector standards should develop from an overall generic approach. Once such an overall framework is in place, the speed at which sector standards can be developed by the British Standards Institution will be greatly enhanced. Thus draft defence standards 00.55 and 00.56, now available for public comment, are examples of draft sector-specific standards which are expected to fall within the generic framework being developed by the International Electrotechnical Commission.

The SafeIT document also urges United Kingdom companies of all sizes and from all sectors to contribute actively to the development of international and European standards.

Textiles

43. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in textiles.

92. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in textiles.

Mr. Forth: Latest available figures show that imports of textiles exceeded exports by £1,564 million in the 12 months to March 1990.

Devon and Cornwall

48. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to promote the level of inward investment in Devon and Cornwall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department is the major source of funds for the Devon and Cornwall Development Bureau (DCDB), the regional development body for Devon and Cornwall. To assist DCDB in its activities, I announced on 8 March that it would be offered grant of £510,000 in 1990-91. This is an increase of 21 per cent. on the 1989-90 grant of £422,000 and will allow DCDB to devote extra resources towards encouraging inward investment. This grant provides 72 per cent. of DCDB's total funding.

Regional Policy

57. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on regional policy.

98. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on regional policy.

115. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on regional policy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government remain committed to an effective regional policy and will continue to make the necessary resources available.

87. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the level of regional development grant and regional selective assistance in (a) financial year 1978-79 and (b) the last financial year.

53. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the level of regional development grants and regional selective assistance in (a) 1978-79 and (b) the last financial year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1978-79 expenditure in Great Britain on regional development grants and regional selective assistance was £416·9 million and £104·5 million respectively while in 1989-90 expenditure was £203·9 million and £197·8 million respectively in current prices.

Inward Investment

52. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies have announced inward investment projects in the United Kingdom over the past 12 months; and which regions have most benefited from the projects.

123. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the number of companies which have announced inward investment projects in the United Kingdom over the past 12 months; and which regions have most benefited from the projects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the latest figures readily available to the Invest in British Bureau, in the 12 months ending March 1990, 304 inward investment decisions were made to locate in the United Kingdom. These included the establishment of a new business, expansion or acquisition of an existing business and involvement in joint venture. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves at the time of the investment and do not take into account subsequent developments. The following table sets out the number of inward investment decisions broken down on a regional basis.

Regional breakdown of inward investment decisions in the 12 months to March 1990

Packaging

56. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to encourage industry to reduce the amount of packaging used for products.

101. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to encourage industry to reduce the amount of packaging used for products.

Mr. Forth: The promotion of waste minimisation in general is a key focus of my Department's environmental programme. The need to minimise packaging and, where essential packaging is concerned, to use materials which lend themselves to recycling, is being promoted through my Department's participation in relevant seminars and conferences and through meetings with representatives from the packaging industry. In March my Department was co-organiser with the Institute of Metals of an international conference which discussed all aspects of the design of products so as to avoid harm to the environment, including the minimisation of packaging. An example of a product designed with reduced packaging in mind is included in the booklet "Design for the Environment" which my Department has produced with assistance from the Design Council.

National Economic Development Council

57. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet the director general of the National Economic Development Council to discuss the impact of Government policies on British industry.

90. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet the director general of the National Economic Development Council to discuss the impact of Government policy on British industry.

111. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet the director general of the National Economic Development Council to discuss the impact of Government policies on British industry.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has frequent contacts with NEDO officials on a wide range of business matters and I last chaired the council on 4 April. I have no plans to meet the director general again at present.

Advice Agencies

60. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the implications of the poll tax on the workload of the citizens advice bureaux and other advice-giving agencies.

85. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment his Department has made of the implications of the poll tax on the workload of the citizens advice bureaux and other advice-giving agencies.

Mr. Forth: No such assessment has been made. Independent advice on matters related to the community charge will be given by local citizens advice bureaux, which are primarily funded by local authorities. My Department provides funding to the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux (NACAB) and Citizens Advice Scotland (CAS) which provide support services to individual citizens advice bureaux including training and information materials. The Department of the Environment has agreed to provide £36,000 to NACAB this year to help with the costs involved in providing training for bureaux workers on the community charge and the Scottish Office has given CAS £36,000 over the last two years for the same purpose.

North East Shipbuilders Ltd.

75. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many former employees of NESL are currently in work.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Of the 1,755 former employees of NESL and associated British Shipbuilders companies in Sunderland who have registered to date with Sunderland Enterprise and Training Ltd., 1,354 (77 per cent.) are now in new jobs or working on fixed-term contracts of 12 weeks or more. SETL does not monitor casual employment of short duration. A further 105 people are currently on training courses.

Furniture and Furnishings

77. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurance he has sought from the European Commission that legislation concerning the flammability of furniture and furnishings will meet the highest safety standards for British consumers.

109. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurance he has sought from the European Commission that legislation concerning the flammability of furniture and furnishings will meet the highest safety standards for British consumers.

Mr. Forth: The European Commission is engaged in discussions with member states about a proposed directive on the fire behaviour of furniture and furnishings. The Government will be consulting interested parties on the proposal in the near future.

We will press stongly for our requirement for ignition resistance of foam and other fillings at forthcoming meetings with the Commission and at parallel European standards meetings on the test standards.

West Germany

79. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with West Germany.

113. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with West Germany.

Mr. Ridley: In the four months ended April 1990 the United Kingdom trade deficit in manufactured goods with West Germany was £3·1 billion.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

80. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will next meet with the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the future development of the ECGD.

Mr. Ridley: I have no current plans to discuss the future of ECGD with the CBI. The memorandum submitted by the CBI to the Trade and Industry Select Committee—see third special report, 1988-89 Session—shows the CBI to be broadly supportive of the Government's decision on the future status and organisation of ECGD which I announced on 18 December 1989.

Engineering, West Yorkshire

83. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received recently from people engaged in the engineering industry in west Yorkshire about the future of their jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None; no.

Competition

89. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to take any new initiatives on competition policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The recommendations for legislative change in the 1988 review on mergers policy have now been implemented. Mergers policy focuses primarily on competition and I continue to apply it vigorously. We announced last year in the White Paper "Opening Markets: New policy on Restrictive Trade Practices", Cm. 727, proposals for new legislation governing anti-competitive agreements. We also indicated in that White Paper that we are reviewing the provisions in the Fair Trading Act 1973 and Competition Act 1980 dealing with the position of the individual anti-competitive firm.

Mining Engineering

93. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet representatives of the mining engineering industry to discuss exports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to meet representatives of the mining engineering industry.

Computer Components

94. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the components of computers assembled in the United Kingdom are of (a) British and (b) European Economic Community origin.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Leadbitter) earlier today.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the components of computers assembled in the United Kingdom are of (a) British and (b) European Economic Community origin.

Mr. Forth: Official statistics do not indicate the end uses of electronic components produced in the United Kingdom or the European Community. It is not possible therefore to give the information requested by the hon. Member.

Solvents

103. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to regulate the sale to minors of certain forms of toxic correcting fluid and general solvents.

Mr. Forth: The Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act prohibits the sale of solvent-based products to youngsters who appear to want to sniff them. I am not prepared to go further than this to restrict the sale of these useful products to legitimate users.

Footwear and Textile Industries

110. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on Government support for the footwear and textile industries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Companies in the footwear and textile industries are eligible for, and have received, assistance under a range of Government schemes of financial assistance.

Company Legislation

118. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes to make any further changes to company legislation.

Mr. Ridley: I have no plans at present for further primary legislation in the field of company law; but I expect to bring forward a number of items of secondary legislation over the coming months to implement the Companies Act 1989, and to make the necessary provision to implement EC company law directives.

Cars

120. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met his European counterparts to discuss the treatment of cars manufactured in the United Kingdom by Japanese-owned companies.

124. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met his European counterparts to discuss the treatment of cars manufactured in the United Kingdom by Japanese-owned companies.

Mr. Ridley: I discussed the subject yesterday at the Foreign Affairs Council. I have insisted that cars manufactured in the EC by Japanese-owned companies should continue to enjoy unlimited free circulation throughout the Community, and I believe that this has now been accepted.

Regulatory Bodies

122. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to establish any new bodies to oversee particular sectors of industry.

Mr. Ridley: I have no plans to establish any new bodies to oversee particular sectors of industry.

Iraq

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the latest extension of credit of £250 million to Iraq via Midland bank is supported by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood: Yes. The financial protocol for £250 million of new medium-term credit to be guaranteed by ECGD was agreed between the United Kingdom and Iraq Governments in the course of the joint commission held in London in November last year.

Shopping Visits

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what restrictions each of the other 11 European Community members impose on their residents who make day-trip shopping visits to the United Kingdom; and which of these countries have had their restrictions approved by the European Commission.

Mr. Redwood: Restrictions approved by the European Community are contained in the travellers allowances directive (69/169/EEC). They are as follows:

Greece, Denmark and Ireland may exclude from allowances to travellers goods the unit value of which exceeds 310 ecu, 340 ecu and 85 ecu respectively.

Ireland may also exclude from the allowances for travellers under 15 years old goods the unit value of which exceeds 85 ecu.

Denmark may apply the following quantitative limits for the importation of goods by travellers resident in Denmark after a stay of less than 48 hours in another country:

Cigarettes—80

Smoking tobacco where the tobacco particles have a width of less than 1·5 mm—150 gr

Distilled beverages and spirit drinks of an alcoholic strength by volume of more than 22 per cent. volume—Nil

National Front

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he carried out, and with whom, before he extended limited liability status to the National Front.

Mr. Redwood: No limited liability status has been extended to the National Front as a political organisation.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations, and from whom, he has received following the extension of limited liability company status to the National Front.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 June 1990]: No limited liability status has been extended to the National Front. Representations were received from four Members of Parliament on behalf of constituents prior to the registration of National Front (Printers) Ltd. The local trade unions in Companies House also expressed concern on behalf of their members. No representations have been received subsequent to the registration of the company.

GATT Textile Committee

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the GATT textile committee meeting held in Geneva on 12 June.

Mr. Ridley: Last week's meeting of the GATT negotiating group on textiles and clothing in Geneva continued discussions on arrangements for phasing out the multi-fibre arrangement (MFA) after its expiry next year. The European Community tabled a paper further elaborating its ideas for the reintegration of the textile trade into GATT. The paper reiterated the Community's support for a solution based on phasing out the MFA and dealt with amongst other things product coverage, the process of phasing out restrictions, and the length and nature of transitional safeguards.

Shoes

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had concerning the importation of shoes from third-world countries, tariffs raised against British shoes in those countries and the Uruguay round of the GATT negotiations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have been in regular contact with the footwear industry over the past year about the issues raised in the current round of GATT negotiations, and have passed to the European Commission the details the industry has given us of both tariff and non-tariff barriers in all third countries, including a number of third-world countries. We will make every effort to ensure that these issues are properly addressed during the detailed bilateral phase of the negotiations between now and the end of the year.

Computers

Mr. Nigel Griffiths To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that all personal computers pass safety tests prior to sale to the public;

(2) what safety tests his Department requires to be undertaken on personal computers; and who is responsible for carrying out the tests.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The safety of most electrical equipment including personal computers traded throughout the European Community is set by the EC low voltage directive, implemented in the United Kingdom through the Low Voltage Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1989. I would certainly encourage all manufacturers to carry out tests on their products or have them independently tested, and I believe this is the normal practice. However, neither method is mandatory. The fundamental requirement is for the product to be safe.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department first learned about possible dangers of electrocution from personal computers; when it issued a public warning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Personal computers are required to comply with the requirements of the Low Voltage Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1989. The Department was notified on 29 May of tests carried out by a testing company and subsequently received reports showing, inter alia, that four models did not fully meet the relevant standard. In accordance with normal practice the trading standards authorities responsible for enforcing the safety regulations for electrical equipment including personal computers have been or will be informed of the reports received. It is for them to establish the facts and to take the appropriate action.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to ensure that unsafe personal computers are recalled without delay.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: This is a matter for the local trading standards authorities, which are responsible for enforcing the safety regulations for electrical equipment including personal computers.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in what circumstances his Department permits personal computers to go on sale without testing for safety.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: There is no obligation under the EC low voltage directive, which has for a number of years dictated the safety of electrical products, including personal computers, for products to be formally tested prior to sale. It is the responsibility of the manufacturer to ensure that products are safe and the regulations provide for heavy penalties for those who market unsafe equipment.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure the application of British safety standards to computers and computer peripherals sold in or imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: All electrical products including computers and peripherals are required to comply with the EC low voltage directive which is implemented into United Kingdom legislation through the Low Voltage Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1989. One means of conforming with these regulations is through compliance with British standards. This is not, however, the only means of conformity; the fundamental requirement is that they be safe.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to make British safety standards mandatory for computers and computer peripherals used in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: No. Where products fall under the requirements of European legislation as in this case with the EC low voltage directive, individual member states cannot insist on mandatory compliance with national standards as this would be regarded as a barrier to trade.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what checks are maintained to ensure the safety of computers and computer peripherals imported into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The safety of computer equipment marketed to consumers in the United Kingdom is subject to enforcement by the local trading standards authority.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates he has of computer products being sold in the United Kingdom which do not meet British standards of safety codes; and what steps he is taking to monitor and change this situation.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Records are not kept on the extent to which computer equipment sold in the United Kingdom complies with British safety standards and I do not believe it would be practicable to introduce such a system.

Electrical Equipment (Safety)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to make testing of electrical products under the Low Voltage Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations 1989 mandatory before these products are sold.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: No. Any additional requirements in excess of those contained in the EC low voltage directive would be regarded by the European Commission as barriers to trade.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce a system whereby proof of satisfactory testing to recognised standards will be mandatory upon all manufacturers of electrical equipment.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: No. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave to his questions earlier today.

Appointments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all beneficial appointments and non-governmental paid positions for which officials and former officials of his Department sought, and were granted, permission to accept since June 1979.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Civil servants are required to seek approval for any paid appointment for which they apply within two years of leaving Crown employment. The rules are centrally laid down by the Cabinet Office. Statistics of applications which have been made by ex-employees of my Department are readily available only from 1987 to date: 337 applications were made; all were approved; of those, 34 were approved subject to certain conditions being met. Details of the positions for which approval was being sought are confidential to the individuals concerned and I regret that I cannot divulge details of specific cases.

Limited Liability Status

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, under what authority he is able to refuse limited liability status, and registration as a company with the benefit of limited liability.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 June 1990]: Decisions on the registration of companies are for the Registrar of Companies, who will consider whether applications meet the requirements of the Companies Acts. However, under section 26 of the Companies Act 1985, the approval of the Secretary of State is required for the registration of certain names.

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications have been received for export licences to send toxic waste to Romania since 1987.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

Under regulations in force since 1988, the Secretary of State must be notified of proposed hazardous waste exports for disposal in non-EC countries and he can prohibit the export by raising an objection. No such notifications have been made for exports to Romania or any other non-EC country.

EMPLOYMENT

New Businesses

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has of new businesses started up in the past five years; how many jobs have been created thereby; how many businesses have been closed in the same period; what were the comparable figures in 1974 to 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer on 14 May at column 331.

Tourism

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the top 20 tourist attractions in the north-west in numbers visiting or attending; and if he will indicate (a) the attendance in each instance for 1989 and (b) the percentage change from the previous year's figures.

Mr. Nicholls: The table gives the information.

Twenty most visited attractions in the North West, 1989

Rank	Attraction	Number of visits (thousands)	Change 1988-89 per cent.
1.	Blackpool Pleasure Beach	[1]6,500	—

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many applications have been received for vacancies on the sheltered placement scheme in each of the last 12 months;

(2) how many vacancies there have been on the sheltered placement scheme in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Service, which is responsible for the sheltered employment programme, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service Agency's chief executive will be replying in writing to my hon. Friend.

Social Charter

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made on implementations of measures already agreed in the European social charter.

Mr. Eggar: The European Community social charter, which the United Kingdom was unable to agree, was a political statement of intent. The European Commission's proposals for implementing the provisions in the charter are outlined in its social action programme. The first detailed draft proposals under the programme have recently been published. Negotiations on the individual proposals in the programme can now begin in the Council of Ministers in the usual way.

Self-employment

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were self-employed in (a) June 1979, (b) December 1988 and (c) December 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Self Employed Persons in the United Kingdom

	Number
June 1979	1,906,000
December 1988	3,113,000
December 1989	3,311,000

Labour Statistics

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

Mr. Eggar: In May 1990, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom was 1,611,000, about half the July 1986 level.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing (a) employment by industry and ethnic origin, (b) employment by broad occupation, ethnic origin and sex and (c) unemployment rate by ethnic origin for the earliest available date on a comparative basis with tables 4, 5 and 8 in the Employment Gazette, March 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: Earlier labour force survey analyses by ethnic origin and industry and by ethnic origin, sex and broad occupation are available for 1985-87 and 1984-86 in Employment Gazette, December 1988, pages 637-8 (tables 4 and 5) and March 1988, pages 168-9 (tables 4 and 5). Unemployment rates by ethnic origin are given since 1984 on a consistent basis, using the ILO definition of unemployment with a four-week job search period, in table 8 quoted; but information for 1984, 1983 and 1981, using the previous labour force definition of unemployment with a one-week job search period is given in Employment Gazette, March 1988, page 173 (table 8) and June 1984, page 263 (tables 1 and 3). Information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the most recent unemployment figures for the Colne Valley constituency; and what were the comparable figures in the same month five years earlier.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1990, on an adjustable basis, there were 1,819 unemployed claimants in the Colne Valley parliamentary constituency, a fall of 2,154, or 54 per cent. compared with May 1985.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest unemployment figures; what were the figures in May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In May 1990, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom was 1,611,000, compared with 1,088,500 in May 1979. There are now over 1½ million more jobs than in 1979 and unemployment is about half of what it was at its peak in July 1986.

Benefit Claimants

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, if a claimant adviser offers a vacancy to a claimant which they have obtained from a local newspaper or other source, other than a jobcentre, the claimant has to show good cause if they do not wish to pursue it, or decide to reject it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Service, which is responsible for the claimant adviser service, became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the chief executive of the Employment Service, will be replying in writing to the hon. Lady.

Employment Training

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chief executive of the Training Agency to discuss the provision of employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the director general of the Training Agency on a regular basis to discuss all of the Department's programmes including employment training. About 700,000 unemployed people to date have taken advantage of the help ET offers them to obtain the skills and experience they need to get jobs.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what number of trainees on employment training had to leave the scheme last year because no suitable training placement could be found for them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available. There is a plentiful supply of work placement opportunities for trainees on employment training. At any one time 72 per cent. of trainees are on project or employer-based placements.

Wages

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the median wage was received by the lowest paid 10 per cent. of male manual workers in each year between 1986 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is published in table 15 of part A of the 1989 new earnings survey report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of adult workers earning below £157 per week in each of the years between 1986 and 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The estimated number of full-time adult employees earning below specified weekly amounts are published in table 14 of part A of the 1989 report and in table 29 of part B of the new earnings survey reports for 1986 to 1988. Copies of the reports are in the Library.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many business men have promised to serve on the boards of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar: Over 1,000 business leaders have been involved so far in setting up training and enterprise councils.

Of the 15 TECs that have now become fully operational, there are 138 private sector board members.

Health and Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals the Health and Safety Commission has to increase health and safety protection in the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission's proposals are set out in its plan of work for 1990-91 and beyond. The plan has been submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend for his approval and it is hoped that it will be published in July.

Clothing Industry

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been lost in the clothing industry in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of employees in employment in the clothing industry, including hats, gloves and fur goods, in Great Britain decreased by 4,000 between December 1988 and December 1989.

Cancer

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department has conducted or commissioned any research into cancer of the larynx resulting from asbestosis, explosives or industrial substances.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive continues to sponsor programmes of research into aspects of the toxicity and carcinogenity of industrial substances. It has commissioned no specific research into cancer of the larynx.

Ex-offenders

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to the answer to the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) of 15 May, Official Report, column 375, on training for ex-offenders, whether a report will be produced by his Department presenting the findings of the examination referred to; and whether he intends to consult relevant outside bodies during the course of the examination.

Mr. Nicholls: There are frequent contacts and discussions between the Training Agency, Home Office, probation services and voluntary bodies such as NACRO and Apex Trust about training and enterprise provision for ex-offenders. The recent White Paper on punishment in the community is included in those discussions. My Department does not publish reports on such on-going contacts.

TVEI

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list those local education authorities participating in the technical and vocational education initiative extension and set out their budgets for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 19 June, at columns 463-66.

Migrant Workers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the statement by the Minister of State in reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Official Report, 21 May, columns 122-23, regarding the movement of migrant workers among Community countries, what is the expected date of publication of the relevant directive; if its terms will be decided by qualified majority or unanimity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 June 1990]: Revisions to the Community legislation on free movement of EC nationals are under discussion following proposals put forward by the Commission. It is not yet known when these will be agreed.

The proposed revisions do not cover workers who are non-Community nationals, except as dependants of EC nationals: such workers are not within Community competence.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) of 21 May, Official Report, column 81, whether he has estimated any cost to business in requiring employers to spend more time with national insurance inspectors.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There is of course a certain cost to businesses in carrying out the task of calculating and paying the correct amounts of national insurance contributions for their employees; this is an inescapable responsibility for them if their employees are to receive correct amounts of social security benefits and pensions. Most employers carry out this task conscientiously and effectively and thus keep the burden on their business to the minimum. However, there is a minority of employers who, for whatever reason, are performing this task less than effectively and from whom the collection of NICs needs to be improved.

Contributions unit inspectors will be concentrating their efforts on these employers. Their aim will be to help educate such employers (some of whom may be relatively inexperienced). If employers can be assisted to get the task right first time, they will in fact reduce the burden on their business which flows from having to take corrective action. This will help ensure that their employees' NIC records are correct and up to date, and that less staff time in the contributions unit needs to be spent on such corrective activity.

One of the main aims of the contributions unit is to ensure that burdens on businesses are kept as low as is practicable.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of (a) claimants and (b) benefit units, identifying (i) families and (ii) pensioners on supplementary benefit who received (1) one single payment, (2) two single payments, (3) three single payments and (4) four or more single payments in the year 1985-86 expressed in each as a total and as a proportion of supplementary benefit caseload.

Mr. Scott: Information on the number of pensioners receiving different numbers of single payments is in the Library, in table 19.1 of the supplementary benefit annual statistical inquiry, 1986. The other information is not available.

Widowed Mother's Allowance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women receive widowed mother's allowance in England and Wales.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that at March 1989, 64,000 women were receiving widowed mother's allowance in England and Wales.

Social Fund

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was (a) the projected and (b) the actual value of loans repayments to the social fund in 1989-90; and whether he will make a statement on the practice in many social fund offices of setting repayments rates at or about the maximum recommended level of 15 per cent. of applicable benefit levels.

Mr. Scott: Loan repayments to the social fund in 1989-90 totalled £108 million against the forecast of £104 million. The rate of repayment of a loan depends on the individual's circumstances. Where there are no existing commitments, it may be as high as 15 per cent. of the income support applicable amount. But it could be set at 10 per cent., 5 per cent. or less than 5 per cent. An applicant's ability to repay a loan is taken into account before an offer is made. In appropriate cases, rescheduling is considered and money advice is offered.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the extra funds allocated to the social fund by recycling from loan repayments to loans and grants budgets between December 1989 and March 1990, are regarded for expenditure purposes as a call on 1984-90 social fund expenditure or on some other budget head; and if he will make a statement on the implications of this for future social fund budgets.

Mr. Scott: Expenditure arising from the additional allocations made to local offices in 1989-90 has been treated as expenditure from the social fund in that year. Account was taken of the additional allocations in December 1989 and January 1990 in calculating the allocations for 1990-91 which I announced on 26 March. Decisions on the allocation of social fund budgets for future years will be taken nearer the time.

Community Care Grant

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women have submitted claims for a community care grant in the past 12 months; and, of those, how many were turned down due to already receiving widowed mother's allowance.

Mr. Scott: One of the conditions for eligibility for community care grants, (as with the previous single payments system) is being in receipt of income support (supplementary benefit). Receipt of widowed mother's allowance is relevant only in so far as it plays a part in determining eligibility to income support.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people with severe mental handicap and severe behaviour problems have been refused mobility allowance because their walking problems cannot be attributed to a physical cause;

(2) how many people with severe mental handicap whose behaviour problems interrupt their walking progress are in receipt of mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Money Purchase Pension Schemes

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he sees any need to amend contracting-out arrangements for money purchase schemes following the European Court of Justice judgment in the case of Barber v. Guardian Royal Exchange.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: While there remain uncertainties about the legal implications of this judgment for occupational pension schemes, it is clear that there is a specific problem for contracted-out money purchase schemes (COMPS). This arises from the conflict between the European Court's ruling in the Barber case that such schemes must equalise the age at which pensions come into payment for men and women, and the current requirement that such schemes may contract out of the state pension scheme only if they pay protected rights to their members at the age of 60 for women and 65 for men. We have therefore today tabled in another place an amendment to the Social Security Bill to enable these schemes to pay pensions deriving from protected rights from the date on which the member attains an age not earlier than 60 and not later than 65. This will ensure that such schemes can continue to meet the legal requirements of contracting out while complying with the equal treatment requirements of the European Court of Justice judgment. The same conflict does not arise in the case of schemes based on final salary and therefore they will not be affected by the amendment.

State Pension

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the British state retirement pension in line with other EEC pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 16 March 1990]: Comparisons with other EC members are highly misleading and are complicated by the wide variety of pension provision in different states.

We will continue to maintain our commitment to increase the state retirement pension fully in line with movements in prices.

DEFENCE

HMS Southampton

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of repairs to HMS Southampton following its collision in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: Following the collision, it was decided to combine the repairs with the ship's 1989 refit. The contract was placed with Swan Hunter Ltd. after a competition. The estimated total cost of the repair and refit (including equipments procured separately by the Ministry) is £45 million.

Pensions

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what adjustments were made to comparator earnings by the armed forces pay review body to reflect its judgment on the additional pension benefit received by members of the armed forces compared with that available for civilian schemes for each of the years from its inception in 1971;

(2) what adjustments were made to comparator earnings by the armed forces pay review body in each of the years since 1971, to reflect its judgment on the additional widows' pension benefit received by members of the armed forces compared with that available for civilian schemes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Between 1971 and 1980 the adjustments made by the AFPRB in respect of the value of pension benefits (including widows' pension benefits) were based on the adjustments used in the context of negotiated pay in the home civil service: details were not published by the AFPRB. From 1981 to 1985, the AFPRB made a downward adjustment of 11 per cent. to comparator earnings. From 1986 onwards, the downward adjustment was reduced to 10 per cent.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what adjustments were made to comparator earnings by the armed forces pay review body in each of the years (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987, (d) 1988 and (e) 1989 to reflect its judgment on the additional widowers' pension benefit received by female members of the armed forces compared with that available for civilian schemes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. Adjustments to comparator earnings are currently made on the basis of male pension benefits only.

Armed Forces Pay

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures operated for each of the years from 1960 to set levels of pay for the armed forces; what consideration was given to pension benefits then available to members of the armed forces in setting such levels in each subsequent year; and what decisions were taken.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Between 1960 and 1968 pay in the armed forces was reviewed every two years. Pay was determined by reference to changes in civil service pay (for officers) and to changes in average earnings in manufacturing and other industries (for other ranks). In 1968, armed forces pay was made the subject of a standing reference to the National Board for Prices and Incomes. The AFPRB was established in 1971 to advise the Prime Minister on pay and allowances in the armed forces. Until 1980 adjustments for pension benefits were linked to those agreed for the home civil service.

Low Flying

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many, and what types of aircraft will take part in overland low-flying activity during Exercise JMC 90/2; on what dates and between which times in what areas any such low flying will take place; and what is the minimum height for overland low-level flights in Exercise JMC 90/2.

Mr. Neubert: The majority of air activity in support of this exercise will be carried out over the sea, but some overland low flying may occur in daylight hours on Friday 22, Monday 25 and Tuesday 26 June, north of Scapa Flow in the Orkney Islands and in north-west Scotland. Buccaneer, Tornado, Jaquar, Canberra and Hunter aircraft are expected to participate, as well as some air defence aircraft. The exact numbers of aircraft will depend on prevailing weather conditions and operational considerations. Some helicopter activity is also planned. The minimum height authorised for fixed-wing aircraft over land during the exercise will be 250 ft.

JENOA

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the meaning of the term JENOA in relation to Exercise JMC 90/2; and if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the activities to be conducted in the JENOA area in Exercise JMC 90/2.

Mr. Neubert: JENOA is an acronym for general operations area. It is a term used by exercise managers and refers to any one of a series of pre-defined areas of sea forming a grid within the exercise area.

Stornoway Airport

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the vertical separation provided to aircraft operating under the control of Royal Air Force radar controllers at times of military activation of Stornoway airport.

Mr. Neubert: The minimum vertical separation provided to aircraft operating under the control of Royal Air Force radar controllers at times of military activation of Stornoway airport is normally 1,000 ft, but this may be reduced to 500 ft in certain defined circumstances.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use will be made of Stornoway airport during Exercise JMC 90/2.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is planned to deploy six Tornado F3 aircraft and one Sea King helicopter to Stornoway airport during part of Exercise JMC 90/2.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that the facilities at Coulport for the handling and storage of Trident warheads will be adequate to contain any potential plutonium dispersal that could be caused by a nuclear warhead accident.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The likelihood of an accident to a nuclear weapon involving dispersal of plutonium is extremely remote, and safety is fully taken into account both in weapon design and operating procedures at handling and storage depots. Comprehensive plans exist for accident response at naval bases including Coulport; these are kept under review to ensure that they are adequate to deal with all accident scenarios.

MOD Police

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police were employed at Royal Ordnance, Bishopton until the disbandment of the police force in June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Ministry of Defence police (MDP) complement for Bishopton provided for a detachment of 39 officers, prior to its withdrawal from 1 June 1990. The present position is as stated in my written answer to the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mr. Graham) on 15 May, at column 392.

RAF Quedgeley

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether there are any plans to release any part of land currently at RAF Quedgeley for purposes other than his Department's use;

(2) what representations he has received on the potential development of land at RAF Quedgeley;

(3) if he has any plans to hold consultations with local residents about alternate uses for land at RAF Quedgeley;

(4) if he will make a statement on the future use of RAF Quedgeley other than for his Department's purposes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 19 June 1990]: We do not yet have any specific plans to dispose of land at RAF Quedgeley. However, as a result of requests from Gloucester city council, Stroud district council, and private sector interests, we have identified some 248 acres as likely to become surplus to defence requirements, and as suitable therefore for inclusion in the local plan currently in preparation.

The future use of any such land would be a matter for consultation with the local planning authority and other interested parties, in line with normal planning procedures.

SCOTLAND

Roads

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to improve the roads between Glasgow and the Mull of Kintyre.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The road between Glasgow and the southern end of the Mull of Kintyre comprises the A82 and A83 which stretches from Glasgow to Lochgilphead forming part of the trunk road network; and the A83 (non-trunk) from Lochgilphead to Campbeltown and B842 Campbeltown to Keil Point on the Mull of Kintyre which are part of the local road network for which Strathclyde regional council has responsibility.

Major improvement schemes in progress or currently planned relating to the A82 and A83 trunk road section of the route are as follows:

A82 Luss bypass; work commenced in March this year.
A82 Hollybank-Tarbet; the preferred line order for this scheme is expected to be published soon.
A83 Inveraray bypass; a preferred line has yet to be established.

Minor schemes on the A82 involve the installation of central reserve safety fencing between Erskine and Balloch and improvement of the junctions with the A8014 and A814.

On the non-trunk section Strathclyde regional council has three road schemes planned or in progress.

Religious Education

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of responses so far received to his draft circular on religious education and religious observance in primary schools, listing the names of the organisations involved; and when he intends to issue a definitive policy on this matter.

Mr. Lang: Responses have been received to date from the organisations listed. In addition 13 individuals have commented. Further responses will be accepted until the end of June. It is intended to issue a circular when these responses have been fully considered.

Organisations responding to Draft Circular on Religious Education and Observance

The Baptist Union of Scotland.
The Church of Scotland.
The Congregation Union of Scotland.
The Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland.
The Scottish Episcopal Church.
The Professional Association of Teachers in Scotland.
The Catholic Education Commission.
The Association of Teachers of Religious Education in Scotland.
The Scottish Association of Advisers in Religious Education.
Association of Directors of Education in Scotland.
The Educational Institute of Scotland.
The Scottish Joint Committee on Religious Education.
The Scottish Humanist Council.
The Catholic Head Teachers Association of Scotland.
Education Alert.
Christian Education Movement in Scotland.
The Scottish Parent Teacher Council.
The Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum.
The Association of Christian Teachers.
The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Education Expenditure

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure per pupil in real terms for each year from 1979, by eduation authority, in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Lang: The information available is given in the table, which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. Expenditure on primary and secondary schools in Highland region was not separately identified in 1979-80.

Water Pollution

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest information concerning the presence of toxic or noxious algae or other such contaminated substances generated by the dumping of sewage sludge and chemicals in the Firth of Clyde; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: There are no reports at present of toxic algal blooms in the Firth of Clyde. Such events are rare and naturally occurring and I am not aware of any scientific evidence to show a connection with the dumping of sewage sludge and chemicals in the sea and toxic or noxious algae or other such contaminated substances.

The dumping of sewage sludge at Garroch Head in the Firth of Clyde is controlled by licences issued by my right hon. and learned Friend and carefully monitored both as a condition of the licence and by detailed surveys by DAFS.

Voluntary Bodies

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the effects upon grant aid to local voluntary associations of regional and island authorities being unable to recover the level of poll tax expected when preparing their budget.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The collection of community charges and decisions by local authorities to provide funding for voluntary organisations from within their financial resources are entirely the responsibility of the authorities themselves.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he has adopted to assess the effects of the poll tax on grant aid to voluntary associations; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. It is for individual local authorities to decide whether to make funding available to voluntary organisations from within their financial resources.

Rural Housing

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to make additional funds available to local authorities for projects designed to encourage low-cost housing development to meet local needs in rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Resources for housing capital expenditure in 1990-91 were allocated to local authorities in March on the basis of their relative housing needs and with reference to their capital programmes and housing plans. It is for local authorities to determine their own priorities for the use of these allocations in the light of local circumstances, including the need for low-cost housing projects if this is seen as a priority in their area.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to secure the release of land for low-cost housing development to meet local needs in rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes has been asked to formulate a rural housing strategy and ways of making available more low-cost housing to meet local needs is one issue that it is considering. Work on the strategy is well in hand and I look forward to receiving its final report.

Traffic, Gateside

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will pay an official visit to Gateside to inspect the prevailing road traffic arrangements, including the effects of the 40 mph speed limit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

NHS Reform

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his officials have held recent discussions with interested parties regarding the possibility of any part of the national health service seeking self-governing status in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My officials have held discussions with numbers of employees in the national health service throughout Scotland on the implications of self-governing status.

Rents to Mortgages

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many representations he has received concerning the rents into mortgages scheme; how many were (a) in favour and (b) against the scheme; how many of these representations are from (i) individuals, (ii) organisations and (iii) local authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects the rents into mortgages experiment to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have had no formal representations about this scheme since I first announced it in May 1989.

Scottish Homes was asked to introduce the scheme on an experimental basis for a trial three-year period beginning in October 1989. This arrangement still stands. During its first eight months of operation, Scottish Homes has received 154 firm applications to purchase. The scheme is being closely monitored and early indications are that it is attracting the interest of the intended target group and others.

Any extension or modification to the scheme which appears appropriate in the light of experience will be introduced as soon as practicable.

Explosives

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will identify those areas in British coastal waters which are designated for the dumping of explosive materials and devices.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 10 May 1990]: The following areas in Scottish coastal waters are shown on Admiralty navigation charts as dumping grounds for explosive materials:

Area	Chart	Position
Firth of Clyde	2220	55° 37′ 00″ N 4° 59′ 30″ W
Beauforts Dyke	2198	54° 54′ 00″ N 5° 23′ 00″ W
Beauforts Dyke	2093	54° 35′ 00″ N 5° 05′ 00″ W

Sound of Mull	2390	56° 30′ 00″ N 5° 37′ 00″ W
Inner Sound	2498	57° 19′ 00″ N 5° 51′ 00″ W
Isle of May, Firth of Forth	734	56° 10′ 45″ N 2° 30′ 15″ W
Isle of May, Firth of Forth	734	56° 11′ 24″ N 2° 29′ 00″ W
East of Aberdeen	1446	57° 09′ 00″ N 1° 58′ 30″ W

None of these dump sites is now used for disposal of explosive material or devices.

Archaeological Surveys (Radar)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what preliminary conclusions he has reached about the usefulness of radar surveys in establishing archaeological data about what went on in the outer precincts of great abbeys; and for establishing archaeological precautions on disburbance of ground levels.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Ground-probing radar has been primarily developed for use on building sites where it has been used to detect voids in standing buildings. It works by bouncing electromagnetic waves off boundaries between deposits of different electrical properties. Thus in suitable conditions it can detect stone walls, volumes of disturbed ground such as pits or wells, and some archaeological layers. Simple large features can be identified and interpreted easily. It will not, however, detect features in completely waterlogged soils, and it shares the limitation with other geophysical techniques that strong surface features can mask underlying ones. An advantage over magnetometry particularly relevant in Scotland is that it is not so vulnerable to igneous and metamorphic rocks with strong magnetic fields. Its advantage over other geophysical techniques is that it gives a three-dimesional picture.

Ground-probing radar has not yet been extensively tested and does have limitations. Thus failure to identify physical evidence of underlying structures does not necessarily mean that such evidence has not survived: it may be merely obscured. It is in the nature of archaeological deposits that intrusive methods of archaeological investigation, that is, excavation, remain the only satisfactory method of determining what lies beneath ground level.

It is clear that many of the great abbeys of Scotland had substantial precincts beyond the main nucleus of church and conventual buildings. In Scotland these are almost entirely unexplored. In managing properties in care, the aim of Historic Buildings and Monuments, Scotland (HBM) is the preservation of archaeological deposits in situ. Where this is not possible, HBM will continue to take advantage of modern technology including techniques such as ground-probing radar. This has been used in Scotland at Wardend of Durris and at Whithorn. Increased experience of comparisons between radar traces and features revealed by excavation should allow sampling strategies to replace full excavation, better planning of full excavation, and reduction in exploratory trenching with greatly increased efficiency and reduced costs.

Metal Detectors

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an assessment of the effectiveness or otherwise of legislation relating to metal detectors in areas such as Roxburgh castle.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1990]: The use of metal detectors on scheduled ancient monuments, and the removal from a scheduled monument of any artefacts recovered by use of a metal detector, require the consent of the Secretary of State for Scotland under the terms of section 42 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979. This requirement is being generally publicised through a leaflet recently published by Historic Buildings and Monuments, Scotland. On monuments where there has been a particular problem (in Borders and Dumfries and Galloway regions) signs have been erected warning anyone who might be intending to use a metal detector that the area is protected by law. These vulnerable sites also receive more frequent visits from Historic Buildings and Monuments' monument wardens and the local police have been asked both to monitor the sites and to assist the wardens as necessary.

Training

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what particular requirements he is placing on LECs to ensure that appropriate training opportunities will be made available to mentally handicapped and/or mentally ill individuals; what level of funding he has assessed as being appropriate for such work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Local enterprise companies will be provided with appropriate levels of resources and obliged by the terms of their contract to meet performance targets relating specifically to provision for trainees with special needs including the mentally handicapped and people with mental health problems.

Inverclyde (Development)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the latest information he has as to how many jobs in Inverclyde have been created by the activities of the Inverclyde initiative from its inception;

(2) what steps he has taken to assess the accuracy of job creation forecasts for Inverclyde, given to him by the Inverclyde initiative since its inception.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The total number of jobs created by projects which have been assisted by the Inverclyde initiative between March 1985 and May 1990 is approximately 3,840.

This figure is based on information provided to the initiative by the companies it has assisted and its own records of placements under the training and employment grants scheme. The figures have been checked to exclude any element of double counting. Responsibility for monitoring and evaluation of integrated area initiatives led by the Scottish Development Agency is primarily a matter for the agency.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all groups and organisations within the Inverclyde district council area which have received urban aid or programme support in (a) 1988-89, (b) 1989-90 and (c) 1990-91; and if he will identify the level of grant received in each case and the conditions attached to each award.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The information requested is set out in the table. A number of applications for approval of additional expenditure in 1990-91, including some relating to the Inverclyde area, are still under consideration. Details of conditions attached to projects could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current estimate of the cost to Her Majesty's Government of the Inverclyde enterprise zone; broken down into (a) rate relief and (b) capital allowances.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The initial estimate of the overall cost to the Government of developing the Inverclyde enterprise zone was given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in Greenock on 30 March 1988 when she announced agreement to the designation of the zone. That estimate of £25 million excluded any selective financial assistance. The costs of both rate relief and capital allowances are dependent on the scale, timing and type of developments in the zone during its 10-year life span.

Social Workers

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to improve social workers' knowledge of social work law and the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 June 1990]: Approval of qualifying training in social work and of training of mental health officers are matters for the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work (CCETSW). The council has reviewed teaching of law to social workers in qualifying training and will be issuing guidance later in the year with a view to improving social workers' competence in this area. The council is at present also monitoring the content and quality of mental health officer training programmes in Scotland.

Bathing Beaches

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that local authorities have the resources to maintain accurate information on pollution levels on beaches.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The monitoring of the quality of bathing waters identified under directive 76/160/EEC is the responsibility of the river purification boards. The boards are funded by precept on the regional councils in their areas and their funding already takes account of the need to maintain accurate information for this purpose. I believe that the boards will be willing to transmit their monitoring results free of charge to local authorities.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to arrange for the display of information on beaches to show accurately the level of pollution recorded for such beaches; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 June 1990]: I wrote on 15 June to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to seek the participation of local authorities in a voluntary scheme to display, in a standard form and at locations convenient to the public, the results of the monitoring of bathing waters identified under directive 76/160/EEC. The Government believe in making information on the environment more freely and easily available and I hope that the local authorities will be able to help in this way.

GP Budgets

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many general practitioners or general practitioner practices have expressed an interest in becoming practice budget holders within each health board in Scotland;

(2) how many general practitioners or general practitioner practices will be eligible to become practice budget holders within each health board;

(3) if he will publish the names of the general practitioners or practices which have expressed an interest in becoming practice budget holders.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 June 1990]: It is not possible to say how many practices are eligible to become budget holders. The initiative is limited to practices with a list size of at least 9,000 patients, but smaller practices can link together in order to meet the list size criterion. Moreover, eligibility is dependent on the practices being able to demonstrate that they have adequate management skills to administer the fund, and will have suitable computer support systems up and running by the operative date. There are approximately 147 practices which could meet the list size criterion. Expressions of interest have been received from 46 practices to date.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioner practices are now eligible to become budget holders; how many have expressed an interest in budget holding; and if he will name those practices.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 19 June 1990]: It is not possible to say how many practices are eligible to become budget holders. Practices with list sizes of over 11,000 patients will be eligible, while those with 9,000 to 11,000 patients will be considered on an individual basis. Moreover, it is possible for smaller practices to link together and so meet the minimum list size criterion. In all cases the practice must demonstrate that it has the managerial capacity to administer the fund, and will have adequate computer support systems up and running by the operative date.

To date a total of 46 practices in Scotland have expressed an interest in becoming fund holders. Detailed information on the practices concerned is not held centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Avoparcin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Avoparcin can legally be fed to dairy cattle in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. Such use has been permitted since 16 March this year, following a decision by the EC Standing Committee on Additives in Feedingstuffs to extend its authorisation.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will summarise the research evidence that BSE is not transmissible to pigs.

Mr. Maclean: No naturally occurring sub-acute spongiform encephalopathy has been reported in pigs anywhere in the world. Experimental transmission of kuru to pigs has been attempted but failed to result in disease or a spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy herds there are in Britain; and how many of these have been affected by BSE.

Mr. Maclean: There are nearly 41,000 dairy herds in Britain. Up to 15 June, 5,532 of these had at least one confirmed case of BSE.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farms in Britain have experienced (a) one case, (b) two cases, (c) three cases, (d) four to 10 cases and (e) over 10 cases of BSE.

Mr. Maclean: The information up to 15 June is as follows:

(a) 4,751; (b) 1,428; (c) 594; (d) 769; (e) 62.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of BSE-affected cows that have entered the human food chain (a) prior to the introduction of compulsory slaughter of suspect animals and (b) since the introduction of compulsory slaughter.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

(a) This is not known; (b) none.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider introducing regulations requiring the incineration of all beef offal.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any research work has been carried out to allow pigs that have been fed infected meat and bone meal and cattle offal to live their full natural life span to see whether any develop spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: Experiments to determine whether pigs are susceptible to a scrapie like disease as a result of parenteral or oral exposure to brain from confirmed cases of BSE are in progress. The former has been running since February 1989 and so far no clinical or pathological evidence of a scrapie like disease has resulted. It is intended that these pigs will be kept, subject to welfare considerations, for at least five years.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there is any evidence of hazard arising from the milk of cows with sub-clinical BSE.

Mr. Maclean: There is no evidence and neither is any expected. Scientific studies of natural scrapie have shown that the agent is not found in udder colostrum and milk.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the possible dangers of feeding offal from cows with sub-clinical BSE to pigs and poultry;

(2) if he will review the practice of feeding beef offal to pigs and poultry.

Mr. Maclean: There is no evidence to suggest that BSE poses any risk to pigs or poultry.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the possible danger to vermin and birds from the burial of the carcases of BSE-affected cattle in domestic refuse tips; and whether he will make it his policy to require the incineration of all BSE-affected carcases.

Mr. Maclean: It is the Ministry's intention to secure incineration facilities for all BSE-suspected carcases, although progress towards this goal has been slowed by local opposition to most proposals to build incinerators. Until there is sufficient incineration capacity, a proportion of carcases will continue to be buried in accordance with sound veterinary practice and under the supervision of the state veterinary service. These procedures ensure that there is no risk of spreading the disease through this method of disposal.

Meat and Bone Meal

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the meat and bone meal produced by the rendering industry in Britain is used for feeding to (a) pigs and (b) poultry.

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available.

Scrapie

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there is any evidence that scrapie can cause spongiform encephalopathy in animals other than cows by direct ingestion of infected food.

Mr. Maclean: It is concluded that at least some outbreaks of transmissible mink encephalopathy were caused by feeding scrapie-infected material and it is probable that five antelope in British zoos contracted a scrapie like disease from eating scapie-infected material.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will introduce higher standards in the rendering industry to prevent the scrapie agent getting into meat and bone meal.

Mr. Maclean: Consideration of such a policy must await the results of research, currently in hand, into the rendering processes required to inactivate the scrapie like agents.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there is yet any evidence that scrapie can be transmitted horizontally in a flock via (a) the faeces, (b) bedding and (c) scratchings of scrapie-affected sheep.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

(a) No.
(b) No.
(c) No.

Slaughterhouses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place the latest reports by his veterinary officers on slaughterhouse standards in the Library.

Mr. Gummer: Advice on individual premises is offered by my veterinary officers, in confidence, to the enforcement authority (district council) concerned. The release of the advice would be a matter for the enforcement authority.

Food Advisory Committee

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the recommendations of the Food Advisory Committee in the past year together with the actions taken by him on each recommendation.

Mr. Maclean: In the past year I have announced our acceptance of the Food Advisory Committee's recommendations for stricter controls on colours in food and proposals for legislation are currently in preparation for public comment and notification to the European Commission. I also announced acceptance of committee advice that the use of potassium bromate as a flour improver should no longer be permitted. Regulations prohibiting this use came into effect on 1 April this year. I published and sought comments on the committee's report on old compositional orders and I shall be considering the responses before reaching decisions.

In the area of labelling, I accepted the committee's revised guidelines on the use of "natural" in food labelling and advertising, which were published in June last year. I also accepted its recommendations for detailed controls on the use of certain nutritional claims for which draft legislation is in preparation for public consultation and notification to the European Commission.

At present I am considering advice from the committee on the use of mineral hydrocarbons on cheese, in chewing gum and on food contact materials and on a request for the use of sodium benzoate as a preservative for grey mullet roe. I shall make separate announcements on these matters in due course.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make an assessment of the consequences for research underpinning the work of his Department in relation to insect and aphid control and beekeeping, of the reductions proposed by the natural history museum in its collections and research.

Mr. Curry: The Department's entomologists at the ADAS central science laboratory use the extensive and unique collections at the natural history museum in order to solve difficult identification problems.

We have been assured that the natural history museum's entomology collections will continue to be maintained and that access will continue to be provided to us.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Haberdashers' Aske's CTC

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's current estimate of the total capital costs of establishing a Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college; and what part of these costs is represented by the value of the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham schools premises or of the proposed lease under which those premises will be made available for the city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has agreed with the Haberdashers' Company to contribute at least £4 million to the initial capital costs of the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college. The Haberdashers' Company has agreed that its contribution will be the value of the sites of the two schools, and that it will also underwrite sponsorship of £1 million. A cash limit for the project will be decided following the completion of detailed building feasibility studies.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if grants will be paid by his Department toward the capital costs of establishing a Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college prior to the advertising of a new scheme for the Robert Aske's Charity and the Charity Commissioners' consideration of any public representations on proposals for such a scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has not yet determined the phasing for his contribution to initial capital expenditure on the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college. His decision will be made after the completion of current building feasibility studies, in the light of all the circumstances, including the Haberdashers' Company's progress in agreeing a new scheme for the Robert Aske's Charity with the Charity Commissioners.

Inner London (Education Spending)

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the total expenditure on education by the Inner London education authority was in its final year before abolition.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures for the outturn expenditure of the Inner London education authority in 1989-90 are not yet available.

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total projected expenditure on education by the 12 inner London boroughs and the City of London for the year 1990-91.

Mrs. Rumbold: According to figures supplied by the inner London boroughs and the City of London to the Department, the current expenditure budgets for education for these authorities in 1990-91 amount in total to £1,068 million.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Bills

Sir Patrick McNair-Wilson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any plans to reform the private Bill procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Government have been examining this whole subject following the report of the Joint Committee on Private Bill procedure and the debates on that report held in the House, and in another place, last year. Subject to consultation, we propose to build on the thinking behind the report by establishing new procedures so that railway and light rapid transit works which at present have to be authorised by private Bill could in future be authorised by order. The legislation would also increase the use of orders for amending and extending harbour legislation so that in future very few harbour measures would be promoted by private Bills. These proposals would lead to a reduction of about 50 per cent. in the number of private Bills promoted each year. It is also proposed to legislate so that the order-making procedure could be extended at a later date to other works proposals which would otherwise require a private Bill.

The proposed procedures would involve a tiered approach so that minor matters might be dealt with locally; the majority would come within a ministerial order-making procedure with provision for a public inquiry; while for the most important projects after the inquiry and ministerial stages, the proposal would have to be approved by Parliament, but without further detailed examination. We would thus reduce the volume of private Bills significantly while ensuring that matters of genuinely national importance still came to Parliament for decision. No radical changes are planned for the separate and different system in Scotland—the private legislation procedure—which is generally satisfactory in the particular circumstances there.

Together with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment, I have today published a consultation paper which sets out our proposals in greater detail and invites comments on them. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The changes would involve primary legislation and in the light of consultation the Government will look for an early opportunity to bring this forward.

The procedure for those matters which would remain to be dealt with by private Bills will be reformed along the lines suggested by the Joint Committee and as broadly accepted by the Government in the debates on the report.

The Government believe that these proposals, taken as a whole, will provide a more appropriate way to deal with infrastructure projects in the modern age while protecting the interests of all those involved.

TRANSPORT

Smoke Hoods

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what progress has been made by the EUROCAE working group in developing a European standard for smoke hoods since the group was created in December 1989; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what progress has been made in discussions between the EUROCAE working group set up in December 1989 and the federal aviation authority in the United States of America in developing an international standard for passenger smoke hoods.

Mr. McLoughlin: The initial working draft of the EUROCAE specification is expected to be issued in July. The draft will be sent to the United States Federal Aviation Administration, which is expected to issue its draft specification shortly thereafter. It is not possible at this stage to say how closely the FAA specification will match the EUROCAE specification, but the Civil Aviation Authority does not expect any significant differences.

Ships (Registration)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ports of registry in independent territories where he is proposing to reduce the ability to register ships or limit their tonnage; and if he will tabulate the proposed regulations port by port.

Mr. McLoughlin: The territories which are to be required to restrict the type and size of ship which they will be allowed to register are the following dependent territories:

Anguilla
British Virgin Islands
Montserrat
Falkland Islands
St. Helena
Turks and Caicos Islands

There is only one port of registry in each territory. The registrations will be the same in each case and will ensure that no new restrictions will be allowed for ships subject to international convention safety standards. The territories concerned are preparing legislation to implement the relevant conventions—so that the Department of Transport's surveyors have a legal basis on which to inspect those few ships currently registered in the territories to which the international convention safety standards apply—and to restrict new registration to non-convention ships.

Driving Licences

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those independent territories whose driving licences (a) are and (b) are not recognised in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: Under international agreements, the holder of any valid foreign driving licence is permitted to drive in this country for up to 12 months as a visitor or new resident. In addition, holders of valid licences issued by member states of the European Community and by Australia, Austria, Barbados, Finland, Japan, Kenya, Malta, New Zealand, Norway, Republic of Cyprus, Singapore, Sweden, Switzerland, the territory of the British Virgin Islands, the territory of Hong Kong or Zimbabwe may exchange their licences for a United Kingdom licence within 12 months of becoming resident here. Valid Northern Ireland licences may be used indefinitely for driving in Great Britain. Holders of valid Channel Islands and Isle of Man licences may exchange them for United Kingdom licences within 10 years of their date of expiry.

A696 (Improvements)

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects proposals to be finalised for improvements to the A696 south of Ravenscleugh farm, Northumberland.

Mr. Atkins: If there are no land entry problems, improvements could be implemented before next winter. More than one landowner is involved and CPO procedures will be required. Should there be objections to a draft CPO considerably more time may be required for implementation.

Railway Services

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what financial authority he has given British Rail to order rolling stock to carry passengers on cross-channel railway services to destinations beyond London; when such authority was given; and how many such vehicles have been ordered.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail published its plans for services beyond London on 14 December and I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) on that date, at column 767. British Rail has not yet submitted its investment proposals.

London Underground (Police)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to increase uniformed police presence on London underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The complement of the division of the British Transport police responsible for the underground was increased in December 1988 to 400 officers. The division is now up to establishment. The increased number of officers will allow the home beat system to be extended throughout the network. This will result in a higher uniformed police presence on the underground. Police response times are being improved by opening new area police stations and by the installation of a new radio system to allow communication below ground. The Department of Transport is considering amendments to the force scheme governing the British Transport police which would allow the introduction of special constables.

Rail Routes (Subsidies)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current subsidies for rail routes; what were the comparable figures for the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Claims for 1990-91 have not yet been settled. Figures for central Government support paid to the British Railways Board are given in the table. They include both the public service obligation grant under EC regulation 1191/69 and section 3 of the Railways Act 1974, which compensates British Rail for maintaining loss-making passenger services on Network SouthEast and Provincial—InterCity services were removed from the obligation on 1 April 1988—and level crossings grant under EC regulation 1192/69. Final claims for 1988-89 have yet to be agreed; no final claims have been received for 1989-90.

£ million

	Cash	1990-91 prices
1986-87	689	882
1987-88	783	951
1988-89	557	632
1989-90	511	544

Blind Pedestrians

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what signals are available to assist blind pedestrians at pelican crossings on dual carriageway roads.

Mr. Atkins: A new type of audible signal—"bleep and sweep"—has been installed at 25 trunk road pelican crossings following successful trials over the past few years. This new signal has been developed to overcome the problem at dual carriageway crossings where the normal "bleeper" sound from one crossing could be mistaken by a blind person as the signal to cross at the adjacent crossing. The new sound units have been welcomed by organisations representing blind and partially sighted people.

Marchioness (Report)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the marine investigations branch final report into the sinking of the Marchioness; and when he expects to be able to make the report publicly available.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has received the report of the chief inspector of marine accidents into the sinking of the Marchioness. He is considering publication of the report in full, as soon as is practicable, in the light of the decision to prosecute the master of the Bowbelle.

ENVIRONMENT

National Parks

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of planning appeal decisions (a) allowed, (b) dismissed, (c) withdrawn and (d) undetermined in each of the English national parks in each of the last two years for which figures are available; and if he will express the numbers allowed and dismissed as a percentage of those determined.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications were submitted in each of the English national parks in the last two years for which figures are available; how many were determined; and how many of those determined, in numbers and as proportions, were successful.

Mr. Moynihan: The readily available information is given in the table:

Planning Applications Decided and Numbers and Percentage Granted by English National Parks 1987-88 and 1988-89

National Park[1]	1987-88			1988-89

Ozone-Destroying Chemicals

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to statutory restrictions of production of ozone-destroying chemicals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on Thursday 14 June 1990 to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet), at column 295.

Housing, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the future of the Housing Corporation office in Liverpool;

(2) how much revenue deficit grant is paid by the Housing Corporation to Merseyside housing associations;

(3) what capital allocations have been made to Co-operative Development Services (Liverpool) Ltd. and to Pierhead housing association, Liverpool, in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement about the implications of funding arrangements for Merseyside housing associations for their 1991-92 programmes;

(4) when he expects a decision to be made on the funding of the Gable housing association's application to construct a scheme for disabled people in Liverpool;

(5) if he will list the expenditure made by housing associations on Merseyside in 1989-90 and 1990-91; how much has been allocated for the following two years; what are the average figures for regions of England; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what discussions his Department has had with the Housing Corporation about the suspension of the next phase of a Servite housing association project on Merseyside; and if he will consider bringing forward cash from the 1991-92 allocation to enable the completion of the 1990-91 programme.

Mr. Chope: These are matters for the Housing Corporation rather than for this Department. I have therefore asked the Housing Corporation to respond to the hon. Member direct.

Council Tenants (Home Purchases)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the reasons for subsidies for council tenants to buy homes on the private market.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Section 129 of the Housing Act 1988 gives local authorities power to pay grants, under approved schemes, to assist their tenants to obtain homes of their own. Cash incentive schemes provide an important and cost-effective means by which local authorities can help their tenants into home ownership while securing vacancies for reletting to homeless families.

City Grants

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on city grants made up to the most recent practicable date in the current year.

Mr. Moynihan: During the current financial year to date, 23 projects have received offers of city grant totalling £22 million. These projects are expected to lead to some £106 million of private sector investment in inner city areas.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the report prepared for the European Parliament's environment committee on the Commission's proposal for a directive on the disposal of polychlorinated biphenyls and terphynyls, document A3—84/90 SYN161, dated 4 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have received a copy of the report mentioned by the hon. Member. The report has been adopted by the European Parliament and it is now for the Commission to decide whether, in the light of this, to make a revised proposal to the Council.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has reassessed the safety of incineration as a means to dispose of polychlorinated biphenyls; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what research his Department has commissioned into the effects of incineration of polychlorinated biphenyl chemicals in (a) residential areas and (b) non-residential areas;

(3) which specific dangers there are during the process of incinerating polychlorinated biphenyls; which dangerous chemicals can be produced during the incineration of polychlorinated biphenyls and at what level; and what danger they pose to people and the environment.

Mr. Trippier: Uncontrolled burning of polychlorinated biphenyls—PCBs—can produce traces of dioxins and furans. Properly designed and operated incinerators for disposing of PCBs, however, should not produce emissions harmful to the environment. The Department's pollution paper No. 27, "Dioxins in the Environment", published last year, found that in well-managed incinerators used for the combustion of waste, including PCBs, emissions of dioxins and furans were reduced to negligible levels. The paper assesses the health hazards from these compounds and sets out the steps and research undertaken by the Government to reduce human and environmental exposure. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is investigating the occurrence of PCBs, dioxins and furans in soil in urban and rural areas and issued a report in November last year. Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government fund any research toward clean technology and alternative sewage disposal methods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Department's environmental protection technology—EPT—scheme offers shared funding for research in defined priority areas which could lead to improvements in environmental standards. Two of the current EPT scheme priority areas concern reduction of polluting substances in industrial waste water. Sewage disposal methods are not at present within the scope of the scheme. The Department has however recently funded research, jointly with the water industry, on sewage sludge treatment processes and the safe disposal of sewage sludge on agricultural land. It is also open to companies and research establishments to come forward with proposals for collaborative research and development in any field of clean technology under the Department of Trade and Industry's research and technology initiatives.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of the drinking water inspectorate.

Mr. Trippier: The drinking water inspectorate was established on 2 January 1990 under section 60 of the Water Act 1989 which empowers my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales to appoint persons to act on their behalf as technical assessors in relation to their powers and duties concerning the quality and sufficiency of water supplied by water undertakers.

Its principal task is to check the quality of water supplied by water undertakers in England and Wales for compliance with the requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989. If water undertakers are found not to be meeting their statutory requirements the inspectorate will advise my right hon. Friends, as appropriate, on enforcement action and if water is supplied which is unfit for human consumption will advise on possible prosecution.

The inspectorate will also provide advice to my right hon. Friends on objections made to them against enforcement notices served by local authorities relating to private water supplies. It also provides technical and scientific advice to my right hon. Friends on drinking water quality standards and other issues including negotiations within the European Community.

The inspectorate will produce an annual report which will be published.

Threatened Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek an extension of EEC rules to cover the seizure of threatened species in transit.

Mr. Trippier: Adequate provision exists for the seizure of unauthorised shipments of endangered species whilst in transit through the United Kingdom.

Water Metering

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the report of the water metering trials which have been carried out in various parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: Information on the national water metering trials has been collected by the water industry. I understand that the national water metering trials co-ordinating committee intends to publish a second interim report on the trials early in July. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent carriers of toxic waste or operators of plants or sites where such waste is disposed of are required to insure themselves against the costs of potential environmental damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: There are no specific requirements for either carriers of special waste or operators of facilities for the disposal of special waste to insure themselves against the costs of potential environmental damage. However, there are provisions in the Environmental Protection Bill which require the holder of a waste management licence to satisfy his waste regulation authority that he has sufficient resources to meet the obligations of his licence including the costs of remedying any pollution that might occur.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are for legislation to ban the trade in toxic waste to and from the United Kingdom following the agreement by EC Environment Ministers on 7 June for each member state to become self-sufficient in waste disposal.

Mr. Trippier: Clause 131 of the Environmental Protection Bill contains powers to prohibit or restrict import or export of waste of any description and the EC Commission is preparing proposals to amend the existing directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste. The United Kingdom is already self-sufficient in waste disposal.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date he expects the London residuary body to have completed its work.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The bulk of the London residuary body's remaining GLC-related property, rights and liabilities were transferred by order to the London boroughs and other functional successors on 30 March. As a consequence of the abolition of the ILEA on 1 April, the residuary body inherited certain of that authority's ongoing responsibilities.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Education and Science expect the residuary body to have completed both its GLC and ILEA tasks by 31 March 1993.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what fixtures and fittings have been removed from the principal floor of county hall by the London residuary body.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None, apart from some fittings that the London residuary body has removed for safe keeping.

New Homes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes were built in 1989; what were the comparable figures for the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Figures for housebuilding starts and completions in England for 1986 to 1989 appear in table 2 of my Department's press release No. 352 issued on 7 June 1990, a copy of which is in the Library.

Water Treatment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in respect of the use of aluminium sulphate in water treatment works; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Aluminium sulphate is a very effective coagulant which has been used for many years in the treatment of drinking water. It is listed in the 15th statement of the committee on chemicals and materials of construction for use in public water supply and swimming pools and because of this is authorised for use by water undertakers by virtue of regulation 25(1)(d) of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989. The policy of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is that levels of residual aluminium and sulphate in drinking water shall not exceed the standards set in these regulations.

Councils (Allocation of Seats)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any representations about the allocation of committee seats by councils as being contrary to section 15(5)(c) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take to ensure that councils fulfil their duty under section 15(5)(c)—allocation of seats—of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: If a local authority fails to comply with such a duty, it is for the authority's monitoring officer—under section 5 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989—to draw its attention to the failure.

Mortgage Repossession

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the number of people accepted as homeless by local authorities in England due to mortgage repossession for (a) 1986, (b) 1987, (c) 1988, (d) 1989 and (e) 1990 (first quarter); for each English region and class of authority;

(2) if he will make a statement on the number of mortgage repossessions being made in Greater London and the effect on the use of expensive temporary accommodation by local authorities.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 13 June 1990]: Local authorities report the number of households accepted under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act where the main immediate reason for homelessness is mortgage arrears, but do not distinguish those who were actually subject to repossession. Estimates by class of authority are as follows:

	London Authorities	Other Metropolitan Authorities	Non-Metropolitan Authorities	All England
1986	630	3,100	6,340	10,070
1987	600	3,620	6,240	10,460
1988	540	3,320	4,480	8,340
1989	840	3,370	4,150	8,360
1990[1]	350	1,140	1,600	3,090

[1] First quarter.

Corresponding estimates by region are not readily available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the number of mortgage repossessions being made in Greater London and the effect on the use of expensive temporary accommodation by local authorities.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 13 June 1990]: Information is not available centrally on the number of dwellings in Greater London that have been taken into possession by mortgage lenders. According to local authority returns the proportion of households accepted as homeless as a direct consequence of mortgage arrears is only some 3 to 4 per cent. of all households accepted in London under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985. The effect on the use of temporary accommodation is therefore likely to be small.

Boundary Commission Reports

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local government boundary commission reports he is currently considering, stating the date he received each and setting out reasons for any delay in making a decision.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The reports under consideration are:

Rents into Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authority areas in England which have applied to be considered for any extension of the rents into mortgages scheme to England.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 20 June 1990]: No such applications have been received.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received concerning the rents into mortgages scheme; how many were (a) in favour and (b) against the scheme; if he will list how many of these representations are from (i) individuals, (ii) organisations and (iii) local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 20 June 1990]: My hon. Friend and 25 members of the public have made representations in favour of a rent to mortgages scheme.

Tenants Incentive Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to increase the participation rate in the tenants incentive scheme;

(2) if he will list, for each local authority participating in the tenants incentive scheme (a) the amount offered to tenants, (b) how many council houses have been vacated and (c) the total number of tenants applying to take part in the scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many local authorities are participating in the tenants incentive scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The table sets out details of 89 local authorities which have been given approval to operate cash incentive schemes in 1990-91, the maximum expenditure to be incurred, and the grants to be made available to households. Details of vacancies created by these schemes and of grant applicants will be supplied to my Department by the local authorities concerned at the end of the year.

Cash incentive schemes can be very valuable in helping existing tenants to move into homes of their own while releasing vacancies for reletting to homeless families. The Department encourages local authorities whose areas would benefit from a cash incentive scheme to bring forward proposals for approval. Once a scheme has been approved, details are published by the local authority and tenants are invited to make applications for grant.

Local authority cash incentive schemes approved 1990-91
83 schemes; maximum expenditure £40·4 million; maximum number of vacancies 2,597

House Renovation Grants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the new system of house renovation grants provided in part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 will be brought into effect in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his answer, 22 February 1990, c. 888]: A booklet "House Renovation Grants" has been issued by my Department today and I am sending a copy to all hon. Members in England. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is sending copies to all hon. Members in Wales. The booklet provides a simple guide for the public on the new grants and assistance which may be available from local authorities towards the cost of home repairs and improvements. Copies of the booklet will be available free of charge from local authorities, citizens advice bureaux and local social security offices. Two circulars containing detailed guidance on the new grants have also been sent to local authorities.

Compulsory Purchase Orders

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many compulsory purchase orders were approved by the Department (i) in the latest year for which figures are available and (ii) five years ago for (a) residential property and (b) empty residential property;

(2) what proportion of compulsory purchase orders approved by his Department are associated with purchase for rehabilitation and resale (a) in the latest year for which figures are available and (b) five years ago.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The main compulsory purchase powers for residential properties are contained in parts II and VIII of the Housing Act, 1985. A total of 128 compulsory purchase orders were confirmed in 1989 and 238 in 1984. Orders are considered on their merits and statistics on the numbers of properties affected and their proposed use are not kept.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insider Dealing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to increase the powers and resources available to those bodies charged with the duty of enforcing legislation aimed at preventing insider dealing.

Mr. Redwood: I am satisfied that the available powers are appropriate at present. The level of resources is kept under review with a view to ensuring efficient operation.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider legislation to enable the use of civil remedies by law enforcement agencies and those who can establish loss in alleged cases of insider dealing.

Mr. Redwood: The recent report "Company Investigations" by the Select Committee on Trade and Industry recommended changes in this area. The Government's response will be made in the normal fashion.

Eureka Programme

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the most recent decisions taken at the ministerial meeting in Italy considering the Eureka programme in regard to investment in environmental protection projects.

Mr. Forth: At the ministerial conference in Rome ealier this month, five EUREKA environmental protection projects involving United Kingdom organisations were announced. Their combined value is £66·2 million.

Technology Transfer

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the main components of Government spending on technology transfer in the United Kingdom; how the level of spending has changed in the period 1979 to 1990; and what is the predicted level of spending in the future.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The DTI supports the widespread adoption of new technologies and current best practice through a range of specific technology transfer programmes which currently include advanced information technology, "open systems" standards for IT equipment and modern materials technology. In addition, the Department provides support for a number of other activities which contribute to technology transfer—particularly technology-based consultancies and the teaching company scheme. Total outturn and planned expenditure figures—which are available on a consistent basis only from 1984-85—are as follows:

Year	£ million
1984-85	80
1985-86	74
1986-87	99
1987-88	93
1988-89	96
1989-90	97
1990-91	112
1991-92	114
1992-93	113

Technology transfer is also encouraged in the United Kingdom through the R and D programmes supported by the Department and the European Community.

Development Areas (Innovation)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the Government's main programmes to promote innovation in the United Kingdom's development areas; what is the current annual level of spend; and how this level has changed in the period 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only scheme to promote innovation projects specifically in the development areas of Great Britain over the last 10 years is the innovation element of the regional enterprise grant scheme which started in April 1988; the expenditure for this scheme in the development areas—DAs—of Great Britain is listed in the table.

A number of other schemes have promoted innovation projects in Great Britain over this period on a national basis.

The product and process development scheme was introduced in 1977. This scheme was renamed support for innovation—SFI—in 1982 and in January 1988 the research and technology initiative was launched. It is not possible to detail expenditure for these schemes in the development areas.

The small firms merit award for research and technology—SMART—was introduced on a pilot basis in 1986. A further competition was held in 1988 and a three-year programme of annual SMART competitions commenced in 1989. SMART is available throughout Great Britain, including the DAs. It is not possible to detail expenditure in those areas in the time available.

Questions concerning Northern Ireland should be referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Tour Operators (Holiday Accommodation)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will seek to ensure that the European Commission's package travel directive will make British tour operators liable for defective holiday accommodation abroad offered to their customers.

Mr. Forth: The European Commission directive on package travel, package holidays and package tours was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 13 June this year. Under this measure, member states are required to ensure that the organiser and/or retailer of packages is liable to the consumer for the proper performance of obligations arising under the contract.

Dunsdale Securities

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date and through what channel his Department first became aware of problems at Dunsdale Securities.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 June 1990]: On the morning of 6 June, when FIMBRA's decision to ban Dunsdale Securities Ltd from carrying on investment business became public knowledge.

Professional Liability

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken, and proposes to take, on the recommendations of the Likierman review of professional liability.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 June 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 31 October 1989, at columns 106-08. Of the two recommendations of the auditors study team which fall to my Department, the proposal to clarify the law on directors' insurance, to enable a company to reimburse a director for his liability insurance, has been implemented in section 137 of the Companies Act 1989. However, as my statement made clear, we decided against the recommendation that an auditor should, by agreement with a company, be able to limit his liability. As to the recommendation of the other surveyors study team on the implementation of section 22 of the Estate Agents Act 1979, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs stated on 29 November, in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes), at columns 284-85, that we had decided against implementation. Other recommendations are for other Departments and my right hon. Friend has no proposals for further action.

Companies House Agency

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice the Companies House Agency offered to the National Front before extending limited liability status to it.

Mr. Redwood: No limited liability status has been extended to the National Front as a political organisation.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Stamp Issues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries and territories for which stamp issues have been handled by the Crown Agents during the last two years; if he will list the stamp printers used; and if he will tabulate the fees earned from stamp issues.

Mrs. Chalker: This information concerns the Crown Agents' commercial relations with its clients and it would not therefore be appropriate for me to provide it.

Aid Spending (United Kingdom)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the aid budget was spent within the United Kingdom for each year from 1980; and if he will give details of this expenditure for 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: Data are not collected on the amount of aid actually spent in the United Kingdom. However, an approximation can be obtained for bilateral aid expenditure by reference to the tying status of the original commitment and estimates of local costs. The proportion of tied to total financial aid has been as follows:

Year	Per cent
1980	59
1981	59
1982	61
1983	53
1984	46
1985	47
1986	60
1987	52
1988	52
1989	[1]

[1] Not yet available.

Technical co-operation is by its nature mainly tied as its major components are financing of students from developing countries to study in the United Kingdom, consultancies, experts and volunteers from the United Kingdom and research in United Kingdom institutions.

Multilateral aid is not tied to United Kingdom purchases; but those multilateral aid agencies we support procure goods and services from the United Kingdom equivalent to about £1·75 for each £1 we contribute.

Refugees and Displaced Persons (Aid)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the British level of multilateral aid and (b) the level of British bilateral aid to refugees and displaced persons in each member state of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and South Africa for each year from 1987 to 1990.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many agencies (a) have been set up over the past two years and (b) are currently expected to be set up.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 19 June 1990]: A total of 31 executive agencies employing 69,000 staff have been set up over the past two years, and a further 25 activities employing some 125,000 staff have been announced as candidates for agency status. Departments are currently considering how "next steps" might be applied to a range of other activities, and I would expect announcements to be made on a number of these in due course. The project manager anticipates a total of around 50 agencies established by the end of July next year, and I expect to see "next steps" applied to at least half the civil service by the end of 1991, with still further progress after that.

THE ARTS

Traditional Music

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Arts what help his budget afforded to the development and playing of traditional types of British music.

Mr. Luce: Direct support for the arts is the responsibility of the Arts Council and the regional arts associations. I understand that both provide support for traditional types of British music in the form of help with recordings and general education work.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Foreign Courts (Legal Redress)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General what assistance the Government provide for British citizens to seek legal redress in foreign courts.

The Attorney-General: The Government provide assistance for British citizens seeking legal redress in foreign courts in a number of ways.

Under the terms of the European agreement on the transmission of applications for legal aid any person who resides permanently in a contracting country and who wishes to apply for legal aid in civil, commercial or administrative matters in another contracting country may submit his application to the legal aid authority in the country in which he resides for transmission to the other contracting country.

Where children are abducted from the United Kingdom to a country which is a party to either The Hague or European conventions of 1980 on international child abductions, the Lord Chancellor's Department acts as the central authority for the United Kingdom and communicates with central authorities in other contracting countries to facilitate the return of or access to the child.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and diplomatic and consular missions hold copies of lists of local lawyers which can be provided to inquirers on request.

DEFENCE

Helicopter Noise, County Armagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he received the preliminary report of the noise survey carried out by Dr. Gerry McCullagh of the university of Ulster into noise levels in the vicinity of the helicopter landing site at Bessbrook, County Armagh; when the findings of the survey will be available; what representations he has received from residents of Bessbrook, County Armagh, about noise levels in the vicinity of the helicopter landing site in the village; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The report was received on 1 June and one additional item of data is expected shortly. The report is currently being studied and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces expects to be in a position to write to the hon. Member in the near future. We have received very few representations specifically relating to helicopter noise levels from residents in the Bessbrook area since the noise insulation grant scheme was introduced in June 1988.

RAF Flights

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the cost to the public purse of taking the Bishop of Ripon on a flight in a Tornado jet fighter from the RAF base at RAF Leeming on 5 June;

(2) what was the cost of taking (a) a journalist and (b) the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on flights in Jet Provost trainers from the RAF base at Linton-on-Ouse.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such flights are undertaken as routine training sorties, and the carriage of a passenger involves no additional cost to public funds.

Air Experience Flights

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for the last 12 months, and by cost to the public purse, the number of air experience flights given to (a) hon. Members of Her Majesty's Government, (b) hon. Members of Her Majesty's Opposition and (c) other non-armed service persons, excluding those provided at air shows and air displays, in Royal Air Force jet aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Holy Loch

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the termination date of the current agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government on the use of Holy Loch as a United States navy submarine facility.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The agreement has no termination date; it will continue for as long as both parties require it.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what date the Poseidon ballistic missile submarines are due to be withdrawn from the United States navy facility at Holy Loch;

(2) when he last discussed the future of the United States facilities at Holy Loch with the United States authorities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 20 March 1990 at column 521.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his intentions for the current Fort class Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels following the introduction of the new Fort Victoria class.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The two Fort class Royal Fleet Auxiliary replenishment vessels are planned to remain in service until they reach the end of their useful operational lives. The new Fort Victoria class auxiliary oiler replenishment vessels will provide further support to the Royal Navy in the form of a one-stop liquids-solids replenishment facility.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements exist for anti-submarine warfare helicopter support of Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels following the disbandment of No. 824 squadron.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Anti-submarine warfare helicopter support for Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels continues to be provided by Sea King aircraft of No. 826 squadron. No. 824 squadron was disbanded following the completion of the Sea King Mk 6 trials on which it was engaged. Its aircraft and manpower have been redeployed within the fleet.

Vessels (Decommissioning)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the planned decommissioning date of (a) HMS Valiant, (b) HMS Warspite and HMS Churchill.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decisions have yet been taken on the decommissioning of the vessels to which the hon. Member refers.

Nuclear Depth Bombs

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of plans to replace the Royal Navy's nuclear depth bombs; and when he expects to make a decision on their replacement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 24 October 1989, Official Report, column 434.

Hospitality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review his Department is carrying out of the rules under which hospitality can be accepted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Ministry of Defence is currently engaged in a routine review of its hospitality rules involving all interested parties within the Department and in consultation with the trade unions. This review is concerned with clarifying the instructions and guidance which are currently given to all staff within the framework of existing policy.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people associated with his Department have logged, according to the Defence Council instruction, that they have been offered hospitality since the procedure was established; what investigations have, and are currently, taking place that the system has not been complied with; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is departmental policy that all offers of hospitality accepted by MOD staff should be registered in hospitality books. These books are the subject of regular review by senior management. The total number of invitations is not collated centrally. There is no evidence to suggest that the procedure is not being followed.

Corruption

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) civil servants and (b) armed forces personnel, both current and formerly serving, are under investigation following allegations of bribery and corruption; if he will list the weapons, projects or circumstances involved in each case and the value of each project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: An official of my Department has been arrested and charged with an offence contrary to the Prevention of Corruption Act 1906. A retired Army officer has also been arrested in connection with a similar offence but has not so far been charged. The investigation is still in progress and other individuals will be interviewed as and when the police consider it appropriate.

Air-to-Surface Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money is currently being spent on research and development for a tactical air-to-surface missile with a range of 400 km, at the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement on the progress of this project.

Mr. Alan Clark: Research and development of missiles does not take place at the atomic weapons establishment.

NATO (Japanese Delegation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purposes and terms of reference of a high-level miltary and diplomatic delegation to NATO from Japan.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A Japanese delegation, led by the deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs, attended a seminar in Belgium, jointly organised by the NATO information service and the United States delegation to NATO from 17 to 19 June. The subject of the seminar was "Security—North American, European and Japanese Interdependence in the 1990s". Such contact between NATO nations and Japan on security matters of mutual interest is useful, and I welcome the fact that the Japanese were able to participate.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Aquagard

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recommendations he has received from the Veterinary Products Committee regarding the licensing of Aquagard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A product licence for Aquagard sea lice treatment for use in treating farmed salmon was first issued in June 1989, for a period of one year, following advice from the Veterinary Products Committee—VPC. The committee has recently met to review Aquagard in the light of a programme of further research, and has recommended that a two-year extension of the licence be granted subject to some modifications of the label warning and a further environmental impact report from the manufacturers in one year. I have decided to accept this recommendation, and a licence will therefore be issued subject to the conditions set by the VPC being met. Efforts will continue to be made to develop an alternative strategy to control sea lice in farmed salmon within this two year period.

It is however imperative that an alternative strategy to control sea lice in farmed salmon be developed as soon as possible. The Government are determined to meet their commitment at the North sea conference to reduce by 50 per cent. the inputs of certain substances to the marine environment by 1995, including dichlorvos, the active ingredient of Aquagard. Any application for extension to the licence for Aquagard beyond 1992 will need to be considered in the light of this commitment, and the presumption will therefore be to replace it with satisfactory alternative methods of treatment.

The VPC's original recommendation that the licence should be limited to one year's duration took account of the full range of Medicines Act considerations on product safety, quality and efficacy. The further review recently carried out did not therefore address matters on which the VPC was already satisfied, but took into account the following:

(a) target species safety; and
(b) environmental impact

All the aquatic toxicology studies considered by the VPC suggested that lobster larvae were the candidate species to utilise in calculating a provisional annual average environmental quality standard—EQS—and also to derive a 24-hour EQS. These studies will also be used by the Department of the Environment in confirming EQSs for use by the appropriate water and river authorities. As all sea lochs differ in their tidal flushing characteristics, clearly this factor will also need to be taken into account in the calculation.

Sheep Scab

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on control arrangements for sheep scab.

Mr. Maclean: The Government have undertaken a review of their policy for dealing with sheep scab, following a five-year programme involving two compulsory annual dips. As a result, single dips were announced for 1989 and 1990. Sheep scab is a skin condition which, if neglected, may lead to an animal welfare problem but has no human health implications.

Since the industry's rejection of a proposal for the introduction of movement controls in south-west Great Britain, discussions have continued to try to find a solution which achieves our objective of dealing effectively with sheep scab while avoiding unnecessary burdens on the industry. We believe we have now achieved this and we aim to have the new arrangements in place as soon as possible.

Details of the new arrangements are as follows:

(i) The disease will remain notifiable;

(ii) Local Authorities will maintain the right to supervise the annual dip, but the key enforcement measure will be a compulsory declaration by the owner that all sheep on his holding have been dipped;

(iii) When the disease occurs, MAFF veterinary staff wil continue to confirm its presence and place movement restrictions on the infected premises. Restrictions will normally be lifted on the basis of the farmer's own declaration that the action necessary to eradicate the disease has been taken. In cases where a recrudescence of infection occurs, restrictions will not normally be lifted until the farmer's own veterinary surgeon certificates (at the farmer's cost) that no clinical signs of the disease are present in the flock concerned. MAFF staff will have the right to supervise dipping on infected premises. Controls on contiguous premises will be operated flexibly, in accordance with the needs of each case;

(iv) Tracings to find the origin of an outbreak will be initiated in each case, but will be abandoned where they seem likely to involve excessive resources; and

(v) The present arrangements for tracing the potential spread of infection by movements of sheep off infected premises will generally be replaced as follows. A letter will be sent to every recipient of sheep from the infected flock since the end of the preceding national dip, informing the recipient that sheep scab had been confirmed on the premises of origin, reminding him of the need to inspect the sheep and report any suspicion of disease, and advising him to dip his sheep. He will also be advised that if the purchased sheep had been sold on, the information should be passed to subsequent purchasers. However, the State Veterinary Service will retain the option of imposing restrictions on premises which have received sheep from those where infection has been found until the sheep there have been dipped if this is considered appropriate.

These arrangements will come into force as soon as the necessary legislative changes can be made. There will be a further compulsory national dip in 1991 and these arrangements will be reviewed next year to consider options for control measures thereafter.

Financial Services

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the work of the Agricultural Mortgage Corporation in offering financial services required by the agricultural industry.

Mr. Gummer: The Agricultural Mortgage Corporation presently operates within statutory constraints which limit the range of financial services that it can offer. I believe that the time has come to review its position to take account of moves to complete the EC internal market by 1992, and the changing circumstances and needs of the agricultural industry. I am, therefore, starting a process of consultation in order to identify what, if any, changes in present legislation might be desirable.

Animal Imports (Diseases)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the diseases that have been introduced into the United Kingdom by imported animals since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Apart from caseous lymphadenitis, which may have been introduced by goats imported from West Germany, no diseases are known to have been introduced into the United Kingdom by imported animals since 1980.

Caseous Lymphadenitis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is proposing to eradicate caseous lymphadenitis from sheep and goats in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: We are currently considering options for control of the disease. All farms where the disease has been confirmed or suspected have been subjected to movement restrictions and contacts have been traced.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answers of 12 June, Official Report, columns 77-78, whether goats infected with caseous lymphadenitis were imported into the United Kingdom with inaccurate certification documents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The recent outbreak of caseous lymphadenitis appears to be associated with a consignment of goats imported from West Germany. Investigations are continuing and it would not be appropriate for me to prejudge their outcome.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answers of 12 June, Official Report, columns 77-78, whether the goats imported from West Germany with caseous lymphadenitis underwent a period of quarantine; whether they were examined by veterinarians during that period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All animals susceptible to foot and mouth disease—FMD—including goats imported from West Germany are subjected to a period of post-import quarantine as a precaution against FMD, during which they are routinely examined by official veterinarians.

Shellfish

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the dates on which the samples of shellfish were taken, (b) the sample points and (c) the number of samples which showed danger levels of toxins on which the decision to impose a shellfishing ban was based.

Mr. Curry: Details of the mussel samples on which a decision was taken to issue the warning on 26 May about the consumption of shellfish from the north-east coast are as follows:

Date of sample	Sample site	Units of toxin per 100g
19 May	Loch Erisor	Not detected
21 May	Whitby	848
21 May	Berwick Harbour	903
22 May	Trow Rocks	19,881
22 May	Redcar	909
22 May	Saltburn	255
22 May	Coquet Estuary	1,119
22 May	Cresswell	5,900
22 May	Holy Island	386
22 May	Montrose	Not detected
22 May	Scarborough	300

The World Health Organisation recommends that action should be taken to protect consumers from consuming shellfish containing more than 400 units of toxin per 100g of flesh.

National Fruit Collection

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's role in securing the future of the national fruit collection at Brogdale.

Mr. Curry: My first concern has always been to provide a secure and stable home for the national fruit collection. This was the basis on which the decision was made last year to transfer the collection to Wye college, part of the university of London. Moreover, Wye college offers the scientific and academic expertise fully to develop and utilise the collection for educational and scientific purposes.

I was informed last week of the Duchy of Cornwall's interest in purchasing the Brogdale site. The duchy's involvement offers the degree of stability which such a collection demands and I have therefore instructed my officials to look at the possibility of keeping the national fruit collection at Brogdale under Wye college's management.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Irish Residents (Shopping)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has made any representations to the European Community about the proposal by the Government of the Republic of Ireland to impose a 36-hour restriction on its residents shopping in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Her Majesty's Government are urgently considering the implications of the proposal which has just been tabled by the Government of the Republic of Ireland. The Government continue to support the Commission's proposals for significant increases to the travellers' allowances in the period up to 31 December 1992.

Scotch Whisky

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value to the Treasury in each of the last 10 years of (a) domestic excise duty levied on Scotch whisky and (b) export earnings from Scotch whisky.

Mr. Ryder: Figures are not directly available for Scotch whisky. The estimated excise duty accruing on all whisky, including small amounts produced outside Scotland, and the value of all United Kingdom whisky exports in each of the 10 years, is as follows:

Year	Excise duty £ million	Export value[1] £ million
1980	570	747·5
1981	620	787·2
1982	630	875·4
1983	670	863·9
1984	670	937·3
1985	720	1,001·0
1986	720	1,075·3
1987	700	1,142·4
1988	710	1,297·6
1989	680	1,479·5

Whisky

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what current negotiations he is holding with his European counterparts to ensure equal tax treatment for whisky (a) in the European Community and (b) in Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: There are no current Community negotiations relating to equal tax treatment for whisky. Member states apply their own rates of duty equally to home-produced and imported spirits.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry continues to watch developments in the Japanese whisky market to ensure that the beneficial effects of the tax changes introduced last year are not undermined. The Government will make representations to the Japanese authorities as appropriate about any problems which arise from the remaining tax differentials.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will be putting forward further ideas on ways of moving towards economic and monetary union to his counterparts in the European Community.

Mr. Major: I have deposited in the Library of the House copies of a speech I made yesterday to the German Industry Forum in the United Kingdom, in which I suggested further practical steps beyond stage 1. These would promote convergence, low inflation and stable exchange rates by building up the Community's existing common currency, the ecu. I will be discussing these ideas further with my colleagues in the European Community in the coming weeks.

Mileage Allowances

Mr. Norris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals for changing the tax rules for motor mileage allowances paid by employers to employees who use their own cars for work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Two new clauses to the Finance Bill are being tabled today, and the Inland Revenue is announcing changes to its administrative arrangements for taxing mileage allowances.

In many cases the Inland Revenue collects any tax due on mileage allowances through administrative arrangements known as the fixed profit car scheme—FPCS. The tax-free mileage rates used under the FPCS to calculate liability are intended to reflect the tax-allowable costs of using a private car for business purposes. But over the years they have got out of line with the relief strictly due under existing law, and have become too generous. The Revenue is under an obligation to apply the tax law Parliament has enacted. Present practice does not achieve that. The Revenue has concluded that it must bring present arrangements into conformity with the law. But changes to bring the FPCS into line with the strict legal position would mean that many employees who receive mileage allowances from their employers would face much bigger tax bills.

The Government have therefore reviewed the present tax regime and has concluded that changes in the law are appropriate to make the statutory tax reliefs more generous. In addition, the Revenue will be changing the FPCS so that it reflects business motoring costs more closely. The proposed new rules will take effect from 6 April 1990, and will produce a fairer system under which employees who use their own cars for work will be able to claim tax relief for the business proportion of all their motoring expenses.

Many employees' tax bills will not be affected by these changes, but some will be reduced and some increased. The reductions will apply from 6 April 1990. But the Government propose transitional arrangements which will ensure that no one who received mileage allowances in 1989-90 has more tax to pay as a result of these proposals for 1990-91; and that any increases as a result of the changes will be phased in gradually over subsequent years.

An Inland Revenue press release is being issued today giving full details of all the proposed changes.

WALES

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many relatives of glaucoma sufferers in Wales received free eyesight tests in each quarter of 1988-89 and in each quarter of 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: The data requested were not collected centrally prior to 1 April 1989, since when they have been collected on a six-monthly basis.

The available information (on an all-Wales basis) is as follows:

	Estimated[1] number of sight tests paid for by Family Practitioner Committees in the six months ending
	30 September 1990	31 March 1990
People with glaucoma or diabetes	5,050	8,860

[1] Estimates based upon a 2 per cent. sample of all such sight tests.

Health Services, Ceredigion

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new investments and improvements his Department has made to health services in Ceredigion so far in the current year; what were the corresponding figures for the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The East Dyfed health authority is responsible for determining any developments in hospital and community health services in the Ceredigion area which are funded from the authority's discretionary revenue and capital resources. However, so far as centrally funded developments are concerned, the following bids from the authority in respect of developments in the Ceredigion area have been successful in recent years and to date in the current financial year:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91

[1] Unit accepts referrals from Wales and occasionally from England. A new bid for this unit for 1990-91 will be considered by the Welsh Office in September.

[2] This funding is specific to the Ceredigion area. The funding does not reflect the level of investment in district wide developments from which Ceredigion will have benefited nor the investment in all Wales IT systems which are also of benefit to the Ceredigion area.

Welsh Language

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the number of school children in Ceredigion of primary school age who are fluent in the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: At September 1989, there were 2,654 school children in Ceredigion of primary school age who were fluent in the Welsh language.

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage change there has been in teaching salaries in Wales in 1989-90; what were the comparable figures in the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The estimated rise in the salaries of full-time teachers in nursery, primary and secondary schools in England and Wales in the last four years is as follows:

	Per cent.
1989-90	[1]8·9
1988-89	7·8
1987-88	4·3
1986-87	16·8

[1] The 1989-90 increase is estimated to include only the first Phase of the 1990 staged pay award.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average teaching salary in Wales for (a) primary school, (b) secondary school and (c) high school teachers.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Estimates of average teachers' salaries are available only for 1989 on an England and Wales basis, and are as follows:

Estimated average teachers' salary at 1 April 1989[1]

Nursery/Primary Schools	14,100
Secondary Schools	15,240

[1] Refers to all full-time teachers.

Toxic Waste (Welsh Ports)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Welsh ports that received toxic waste in each year since 1987, the quantity of such waste imported, the composition of the waste and the country of origin and ultimate destination of the waste.

Mr. Grist: The information is available in the detail requested only since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988. Provisional figures for imports of hazardous wastes through Welsh ports in the year to 31 March 1990 are as follows. Figures for types of waste imported through individual ports are not readily available in a concise form.

ENERGY

North Sea Gas

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent permissions have been given for new developments in gas gathering in the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In May this year I approved a development plan from Mobil North Sea Ltd. to lay a gas export pipeline between the Beryl field and the St. Fergus gas terminal.

Non-fossil Fuel Purchasing Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the establishment of the proposed non-fossil fuel purchasing agency.

Mr. Baldry: The non-fossil purchasing agency is an agent of the regional electricity companies through which they contracted for non-fossil capacity to meet the non-fossil fuel obligation. It has already been established by them.

Sellafield

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what are the estimated quantities of low and intermediate level waste arising from the decommissioning of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield;

(2) what is his estimate of the cost of decommissioning the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

(3) how the costs of decommissioning the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield will be met.

Mr. Baldry: The work of decommissioning plant operated by British Nuclear Fuels plc and estimates of the costs of that work are matters for the company.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the number and percentage share of wind energy projects to be approved in the first tranche of renewable energy projects to be approved by the non-fossil fuel purchasing agency.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This information will not be available until it is known which projects have been contracted within the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the first tranche of renewable energy projects to be approved by the non-fossil fuel purchasing agency.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend expects to make the first order setting the level of the non-fossil fuel obligation, in respect of renewables-sourced generation projects, in the late summer.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made any approaches to the Energy Commissioner of the European Commission for approval of contract terms beyond 1 April 1998 for renewable energy projects.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. The legislation provides the public electricity suppliers—PESs—with a sufficient degree of flexibility to enable a significant number of renewables projects to be contracted within the non-fossil fuel obligation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Concessionary Television Licences

49. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide concessionary television licences for all pensioners living on their own or with another pensioner in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: No. We have no plans to extend the present concessions.

Community Service Orders

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many community service orders have been made by the courts in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will break down the figure in the last available year according to the number of hours of service specified in the order.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the tables. The figures for court orders differ slightly from the figures published in probation statistics because they are compiled on a slightly different basis.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there were in the Chelmsford local authority area in June 1983, June 1984, June 1987 and the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from Essex police that there were no neighbourhood watch schemes in June 1983 or June 1984 in the area covered by the Chelmsford sub-division of Essex police, which covers very nearly the same area as the local authority area. The first scheme in this area was set up on 31 October 1984. There were 128 neighbourhood watch schemes at the beginning of June 1987 and at the beginning of June 1990 there were estimated to be 217 schemes in the area.

Chelmsford Prison

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to reduce overcrowding at Chelmsford prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's overall strategy of reducing the number committed to custody while increasing the number of places available is, notwithstanding the recent disturbances, well on the way to drastically reducing overcrowding in prisons in the next two or three years. Meanwhile Chelmsford, along with other local prisons and remand centres, many of which are similarly overcrowded, must hold those whom the courts commit to custody. The current industrial action by the local branch of the Prison Officers Association at Chelmsford is not the way to solve the problem. It simply means that prisoners have to be held in even less suitable conditions in police cells.

Correspondence

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter dated 11 March from the Central Council of Physical Recreation on the subject of a single agency licensing authority for sports centres.

Mr. John Patten: A reply has been sent.

Colombia

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from Colombia, seeking to visit friends and family in Britain, have been refused leave of entry to the United Kingdom in the six month period (a) from January 1990, (b) between June 1989 and January 1990 and (c) between January 1989 and June 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The centrally available information is as follows:

Period	Number of Colombian nationals refused leave to enter and removed
January to June 1989	312
July to December 1989	327
January to April 1990	212

From this information persons seeking to visit friends and family in Britain cannot be distinguished. More specific information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Royal Prerogative of Mercy

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list separately for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available the number of cases in which the royal prerogative of mercy was exercised (a) on grounds affecting the original conviction and (b) on other grounds, where the following actions were taken: (i) free pardon, (ii) remission of imprisonment, (iii) remission of borstal training, (iv) remission of detention and (v) remission of fine; if he will list separately the number of these cases that involved road traffic offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The tables give details of the information requested.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the total number of criminal convictions arising out of criminal charges which arose out of cases (a) supervised and (b) unsupervised by the Police Complaints Authority in each of the last four years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Information relating to the numbers of police officers convicted of offences, following complaints made by members of the public, are published each year in the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary (for all forces in England and Wales other than the Metropolitan police) and of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, copies of which may be found in the Library. Information distinguishing those cases where the investigation was supervised by the Police Complaints Authority is not available.

Court of Appeal (References)

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list separately for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available the number of cases referred by him to the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(a) of the Court of Appeal Act 1968 in respect of conviction; and for each such year (a) the number of defendants involved, (b) the number of appeals allowed and (c) the number of appeals dismissed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The table gives details of the cases referred to the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 in respect of conviction since 1980.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recommendations were made to his Department to curtail or end the work of Professor Feldberg at the National Institute of Medical Research.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None, before the publicity which was given to Professor Feldberg's work in May this year.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department specifically gave its approval for the use by Professor Feldberg of an anglepoise lamp as a heat source on experiments involving rabbits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Authority was given for a lamp to be used as a heat source, but the type of lamp was not specified.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions over the past two years the Home Office inspectorate visited Mill Hill laboratories; and what were the dates of such visits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Twelve visits were made to this establishment in 1988, 11 in 1989 and five this year. Many of these visits were announced. The dates were as follows: in 1988, 13 January, 10 June, 22 June, 11 July, 19 July, 24 August, 5 September, 26 September, 20 October, 7 November, 28 November and 19 December; in 1989, 6 February, 22 February, 21 March, 21 April, 8 June, 21 July, 3 August, 23 August, 18 October, 28 November and 14 December; in 1990, 10 January, 8 February, 29 March, 9 April and 3 May.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether any complaints or observations were received from people within the National Institute of Medical Research regarding Professor Wilhelm Feldberg's state of competence while he held a licence to perform animal experiments;

(2) how many animals by species were used by Professor Wilhelm Feldberg at the National Institute for Medical Research, London in (a) 1988, (b) 1989 and (c) the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 19 June 1990]: Professor Feldberg is a very distinguished scientist who for over 50 years held licences issued under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 and subsequently the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. Over this time, there is no record of any complaints or observations from within the establishment having been made about the professor's state of competence. It is not our practice to provide details of the numbers or species of animals used by individual licence holders.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps were taken to ensure that the holder of the certificate of designation within the National Institute of Medical Research ensured that all checks and monitoring were undertaken.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Inspectors routinely seek interviews with the holders of certificates of designation, or their representatives, to discuss their visits and any issues which may have arisen. A number of such interviews have taken place with the director of the National Institute of Medical Research.

Chief Officers of Police

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report details of the guidance he gives to chief officers of police in dealing with correspondence from Members of Parliament, when a constituent has alleged assault.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No general guidance is given to chief officers of police on handling correspondence from Members of Parliament.

Guidance on complaints and discipline procedures refers to correspondence from Members of Parliament with respect to the interpretation of section 84(4) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, which provides that a complaint may be made on behalf of a member of the public with his written consent. The guidance advises chief officers that, when a complaint is referred to the force by a third party, such as a Member of Parliament, any words which may reasonably be taken as indicating the complainant's willingness for his complaint to be so passed on should be taken as sufficient to indicate his consent for the purposes of section 84(4).

Police Rent Allowances

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make further changes to the regulations on police rent allowances in the light of the representations which he has received.

Mr. Waddington: I have already announced substantial amendments to the original draft regulations which will be of significant benefit to officers who were serving on 31 March 1990. In the course, however, of implementing the new arrangements, the need has been identified for further changes, which will be made as soon as possible after consultation with the police negotiating board. They are as follows:

(i) provisions for transitional rent allowance for officers serving on 31 March 1990 to include any compensatory grant which would have been due to them in 1990-91 on tax paid in previous years.

(ii) provision for police officers serving on 31 March 1990 whose wives, if also police officers, go on unpaid maternity leave, to move from flat rate to maximum transitional rent allowance; and

(iii) provision for police officer wives living in police houses or quarters on 31 March 1990 who go on unpaid maternity leave to recover their entitlement to provided accommodation allowance from the date on which they return from that leave.

Prison Officer Training

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the expected financial savings in respect of the anticipated downgrading of training tutors from principal officer to senior officer level following the recommendations of the staff inspection report on new entrant prison officer training.

Mr. Mellor: The staff inspectors estimated that the savings from regrading tutor posts from principal officer to senior officer level would be around £73,000, although part of this would be used to finance other recommendations in the report which would involve increased expenditure.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when policy decisions are expected on the recommendations received by his Department in respect of new entrant prison officer training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Under the normal arrangements for handling staff inspection reports, comments on the report on new entrant prison officer training, which was issued in April, have been sought from all those with an interest. These have just been received and are now being considered. It is likely to be several weeks before any decisions are taken on the inspectors' recommendations.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any further discussions are planned with the Prison Officers Association in respect of probable future decisions in respect of new entrant prison officer training.

Mr. Mellor: At the meeting between members of the national executive committee of the Prison Officers Association and senior prison service officials on 16 May, the Prison Officers Association representatives gave a full account of their position. No further meetings on the subject are currently planned, although there will be the opportunity for further discussion at the next regular meeting of the relevant national Whitley sub-committee.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions have taken place with the Prison Officers Association on a local and national basis in relation to new entrant prison officer training.

Mr. Mellor: There are regular opportunities, both nationally and locally, for discussions between management and the Prison Officers Association about new entrant prison officer training generally. In the case of the recent staff inspection of new entrant prison officer training the inspectors gave local representatives of the Prison Officers Association the opportunity to comment on their emerging findings before completing their report. The full report was issued in April and the views of all those with an interest, including the Prison Officers Association, were sought. Members of the national executive committee of the Prison Officers Association attended a meeting with senior prison service officials on 16 May at which the staff inspection report was discussed.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what exercises have been conducted to evaluate the possible consequences of downgrading training tutors in new entrant prison officer training establishments from principal to senior officer rank.

Mr. Mellor: The staff inspection team, which was led by an experienced prison governor, considered carefully the qualities, experience and expertise required of the tutorial staff. It was their considered judgment that the quality of training given to new prison officers would not suffer if their recommendation to regrade tutor posts to senior officer level were implemented.

Prisons (Crown Immunity)

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the effect of the Food Safety Bill on Crown immunity in prisons and on the inspection of prisons by local authority environmental health officers; and when the relevant provisions will come into effect.

Mr. Mellor: The provisions of the Bill will allow local authority environmental health officers the right of entry to prison establishments to carry out inspections of the catering facilities and make recommendations for improvement by way of Crown notices. When a decision is taken on the date of introduction of the relevant provisions a formal announcement will be made.

Traffic Wardens

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what period of training traffic wardens undergo before starting work in the Metropolitan police area;

(2) how many traffic wardens are employed by the Metropolitan police; and how many of them are women;

(3) what are the main educational qualifications required for people joining the Metropolitan police area traffic warden force;

(4) what is the level of payment received by Metropolitan police area traffic wardens, giving (a) starting salaries and (b) average earnings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 30 April 1990 there were 1,312 traffic wardens employed in the Metropolitan police district. The Commissioner does not collect statistics about what sex wardens are but he estimates that there are more women than men in the service.

While specific qualifications are not sought, entry to the service is by means of a testing selection process aimed at finding candidates with common sense and good communications skills.

Once appointed, wardens undergo three weeks and four days training. They are accompanied by an experienced traffic warden for several weeks after being posted to a unit.

The starting salary of the basic grade traffic warden is £7,254 per annum. In addition, the job attracts London weighting of either £1,750, £1,000 or £725, depending on the work location. A boot allowance of £40·64 per annum and sock allowance of £32·28 per annum (women only) is also payable.

Average gross earnings inclusive of overtime and allowances are as follows:

Traffic Warden (basic grade)	10,490·84
Traffic Warden Supervisor	11,852·80
Traffic Warden Controller	13,150·12
Senior Traffic Warden Controller	14,725·52
Area Traffic Warden Controller	16,405·28

Passports

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce 0898 numbers to provide information on passport matters to the public, either before or after agency status.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The telephone service provided by passport offices is kept under review and a survey of demand is currently being conducted. There are no present plans for the introduction of an 0898 number.

Merseyside Police Authority

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received about the funding of Merseyside police authority;

(2) if he will increase the supplementary level of approval for Merseyside police authority for 1990-91;

(3) if he will make a statement on the level of central funding for Merseyside police authority and on the funding shortfall faced by Merseyside police authority in 1990 to 1992.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and noble Friend discussed the funding of capital expenditure with the chief constable and members of the police authority during a recent visit to Merseyside.

Under the provisions of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, the Government issue grants and credit approvals for capital expenditure by police authorities. The provision for grant and credit approvals for 1990-91, which is subject to cash limits, has been fully allocated to police authorities. No extra funding will be made available this year. It is, however, open to police authorities to incur capital expenditure above the level implied by allocation, but such expenditure would not attract grant.

Merseyside police authority will receive £1·194 million in capital grant, and credit approvals for £0·336 million in 1990-91. This will support capital expenditure of £2·130 million compared with the police authority's proposals for capital expenditure of £6·324 million.

No decisions have yet been made about the level of funding for 1991-92.

Notting Hill Carnival

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to what police manpower and financial resources have been used in preparation of the task force report on the Notting Hill carnival.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 June 1990]: No. I understand that no police resources have been used in any recent report on Notting Hill carnival prepared by North Kensington task force.

PRIME MINISTER

Zimbabwe

Q41. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has made recently to the President of Zimbabwe regarding the abuse of human rights in Zimbabwe.

The Prime Minister: None. Our assessment, which is shared by Amnesty International and other independent human rights organisations, is that Zimbabwe's human rights performance has significantly improved in recent years. The Catholic Commission for Justice and Peace in Zimbabwe annual report for 1989 says that the situation in the country was generally good with only a few areas of concern. We take every suitable opportunity to encourage the Zimbabweans to reinforce this improvement.

Local Government Finance

Q50. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she plans to make a further statement on the progress of the Government's review of the community charge.

The Prime Minister: The Government are continuing their review of the operation of the community charge and will announce the results in due course.

Finchley

Q119. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to make an official visit to Finchley.

The Prime Minister: I do not visit Finchley in my official capacity but as the local Member of Parliament.

Rainham

Q134. Mr. Squire: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Rainham in Essex.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Bradford

Q138. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to a Bradford school.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Food Prices

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the extra cost per family of food prices caused by the common agricultural policy; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have frequently raised at the European Council the consequences of the common agricultural policy for the Community's consumers and taxpayers, and have pressed for reforms to be made. I am glad to say that a significant measure of reform has been achieved. I shall certainly continue to stress to my Community partners the importance of continuing this process of reform, particularly in the context of the current GATT negotiations.

Polaris

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what is the current status of the 1958 Polaris agreement.

The Prime Minister: The 1958 United Kingdom-United States agreement for co-operation in the uses of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes, as contained in Cmnd. 537, and amended by Cmnds. 859, 4119, 4383, 6017, 7976 and 9336, remains extant. The 1963 Polaris sales agreement was adapted in October 1982 to cover the purchase of the Trident-II weapon system, and remains extant.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister if, further to her reply to the hon. Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) on 14 June, Official Report, column 270, she will give the cost of each of the trips she has undertaken overseas since 1979 and the number of staff who have accompanied her on each occasion.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 270-1, to the hon. Member for The Wrekin listing her official visits abroad, she will indicate in each case the cost of the visit.

The Prime Minister: This information is not available in the form requested except at disproportionate cost. The total cost of my overseas travel, and of those accompanying me, for each year since 1979 is as follows:

1979-80[1]	151,864
1980-81	133,206
1981-82	556,000
1982-83	523,587
1983-84	216,146
1984-85	414,259
1985-86	457,483
1986-87	447,066
1987-88	341,880
1988-89	637,096
1989-90[2]	387,040

[1] From May 1979.
[2] Expenditure to date. Billing delays mean that some of the services used in 1989-90 have not yet been paid for.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer on 14 June to the hon. Member for The Wrekin, Official Report, column 270-71, listing her 74 official visits abroad, she will list the criteria which determine whether or not oral statements are considered appropriate.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave the hon. Member on 14 June.

Engagements

Mr. Gill: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 June.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 June.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 June.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 June.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 June.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 21 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the mayor of Paris, M. Jacques Chirac, and this evening I shall preside at a dinner in honour of the Crown Prince of Morocco.

EMPLOYMENT

Skill Centres

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how, in each individual case, the 61 potential bidders for the skill centres, who agreed that their identities might be disclosed, were assessed under appendix IV, principal lease terms, of the Deloitte information memorandum issued on his behalf; which bidders were informed of the possibility of grant being available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The 61 organisations that the hon. Member describes as potential bidders were those which had expressed an interest in the sale, and had agreed to have their identities disclosed to STA staff and trade unions. Not all those organisations submitted an initial bid.

Bidders had the choice of acquiring the Government's freehold or long leasehold interest in the properties or of taking a short lease, under the terms referred to in appendix IV of the information memorandum. Whichever option was chosen was up to the bidder and, provided that the main lease terms were met, no other element of assessment attached to appendix IV.

There were no grants available to bidders and none was paid. Most bids involved a negative consideration, which reflected factors such as the nature of leasehold, and estimated costs of turning the business round. All the bids received were evaluated by our professional advisers on a common basis. The Government chose the mix of bids which best met the objectives for the sale, a copy of which was placed in the Vote Office on 13 February 1990.

Employment Training

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to reduce the drop-out rate from his Department's employment training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department is already pursuing a range of initiatives to ensure that those who express an intial interest in training receive appropriate information and help to enable them successfully to take up a training place and complete their agreed training. In addition, the recent efficiency scrutiny of take-up of my Department's programmes has produced its report. My right hon. and learned Friend is presently considering its findings and recommendations and plans to make it publicly available before the recess.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the reduction in expenditure on the technical and vocational education initiative extension for Blackburn and Darwen.

Mr. Eggar: I have agreed that Lancashire education authority, which includes Blackburn and Darwen, should start the extension phase of the technical and vocational education initiative (TVEI) in September 1990. The authority will receive its full share of funding over the lifetime of the programme. Lancashire will receive £870,000 for the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table giving the expenditure on the technical and vocational educational initiative and its extension for Blackburn and Darwen for each year since its inception and that planned for future years.

Mr. Eggar: Blackburn and Darwen did not take part in Lancashire preparatory TVEI project. Development funding of £22,000 was spent by the Blackburn and Darwen consortium in 1989-90. Funds allocated to Blackburn and Darwen during the extension phase of TVEI will depend upon resources available and on Lancashire education authority's plan.

Tourism

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment approximately how many people are currently employed in jobs related to tourism within the United Kingdom; and what was the figure five years ago.

Mr. Nicholls: There were an estimated 1,330,000 employees employed in tourism-related industries in Great Britain in December 1989, the last available date, compared with 1,146,000 in the corresponding month of 1984. Employment in these industries is seasonal and in September 1989 there were 1,390,000 employees compared with 1,205,000 in September 1984.

Local Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his best estimate of the value of the unemployment benefit office network.

Mr. Eggar: The unemployment benefit office network, formerly wholly owned and managed as part of the civil estate by the Property Services Agency, is now divided into two separate estates. These are:

The common user estate—owned and managed by DoE Property Holdings;

The departmental estate—owned and managed by the Employment Department.

Information as to the value of the unemployment benefit office network is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to rationalise the unemployment benefit network.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployment benefit offices were in operation on 1 April.

Mr. Eggar: The Employment Service became an executive agency on 2 April 1990. Mr. Mike Fogden, the Employment Service agency's chief executive, will be replying in writing to the hon. Gentleman.

HEALTH

Immunisation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure that the level of take-up of vaccines is consistent nationally.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that Britain reaches the World Health Organisation's target of 90 per cent. for Europe for vaccination uptake.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has funded the Health Education Authority to mount a joint nationwide immunisation campaign later this year which will provide health professionals with advice and training materials and the public with information on the benefits of immunisation. The campaign will include television advertising, posters and leaflets aimed at responding to the questions most frequently raised by parents of 0 to 5-year-olds.

We have accepted the World Health Organisation's 90 per cent. target for vaccinations against diphtheria, tetanus, poliomyelitis, whooping cough, measles, mumps and rubella. Departmental officials hold regular meetings with district immunisation co-ordinators to advise them of national developments, identify areas of difficulty and exchange information on local initiatives.

The new contract for general practitioners which applies from 1 April 1990 provides for bonus payments if 90 per cent. of patients are immunised as recommended.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve the awareness of health professionals of the contra-indications to measles and whooping cough vaccines.

Mr. Dorrell: Clear advice on contra-indications and false "contra-indications" is given in the new edition of the memorandum "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease", a copy of which has been issued to all doctors and to other health professionals involved in immunisation. Copies of the memorandum have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records his Department holds of the number of deaths which have occurred through non-vaccination.

Mr. Dorrell: Reports are made to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys of deaths from diseases for which vaccination is recommended, but it is not possible to say that all those deaths occurred in unvaccinated individuals.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what records his Department holds of the number of cases of disablement caused through non-vaccination.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to monitor the effects of the new general practitioner's contract on immunisation uptake in inner city areas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Immunisation uptake rates in all areas are monitored routinely. The target payment system introduced in the new contract is one of a number of current initiatives aimed at increasing uptake rates. It will therefore not be possible to measure the impact of the new contract arrangements in isolation. The Government are satisfied that the target system provides a powerful incentive for GPs to undertake immunisations in all areas including inner cities.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to encourage immunisation uptake among ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Dorrell: Public information leaflets on immunisation, funded by the Department and prepared by the Health Education Authority, including new leaflets for use in the national campaign later this year, are produced in a number of ethnic languages. In addition, health authorities with substantial ethnic minority populations mount local initiatives.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to improve the level of take-up of vaccines in inner city areas.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department arranged a three-day immunisation seminar last September for the 25 lowest achieving districts in England. These districts were mainly but not exclusively "inner city". The seminar analysed the reasons for low uptake. One of these was failure by parents to bring their babies for the full course of vaccinations against diphtheria, tetanus, whooping cough and polio, which were recommended at three, four to five and eight to 11 months. This finding contributed to the decision to accelerate the schedule from 1 May this year to two, three and four months, when mothers and babies are still attending the doctor's surgery for other reasons. In addition posters on immunisation produced by the Health Education Authority have been targeted on low uptake areas, which include the inner cities.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the levels of immunisation uptake.

Mr. Dorrell: Frequent representations on immunisation uptake are received from hon. Members, and from members of the public and the health professions.

Subjects raised recently have included the publication of a new edition of the handbook "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease" (issued to all doctors) a copy of which is available in the Library; the target levels we have urged general practitioners to aim for; immunisation record cards and compulsory immunisation.

We are pleased to say that our present policy of providing the health professionals with the fullest possible information on immunisation—to enable them to persuade parents of its benefits—is leading to steady improvement in uptake, with the latest estimates showing 88 per cent. coverage for diphtheria, tetanus and polio, 85 per cent. for measles and 80 per cent. for whooping cough.

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will publish a table from the latest Labour Force Survey showing the population resident in each metropolitan county broken down by ethnic origin, showing both the number resident and the proportion of each ethnic group.

Mr. Dorrell: The tables give the information requested from the Labour Force Survey. To improve their reliability the data are presented as averages from three year's surveys (1986, 1987, and 1988); nevertheless, the data are still subject to sampling errors. The volumes for 1986 and 1987 have both been published and copies are available in the Library. The 1988 volume is expected to be published in 1991. A similar table will also be published in Regional Trends 25, later this year.

Northumberland Health Authority

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the existing members of Northumberland health authority will cease to hold office and carry out the duties of their office; on what date new members of the authority will take office; and whether he will list both the retiring members and the new members who will serve on the authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Subject to parliamentary approval for the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, it is proposed that the terms of office of existing district health authority members will be brought to an end approximately 11 weeks after Royal Assent. New members of the reconstituted health authority will take office on the following day. Responsibility for appointing the current members of Northumberland health authority rests with Northern regional health authority and certain local authorities. The new non-executive members of Northumberland health authority would be appointed similarly by Northern regional health authority. Lists of district health authority members are not held centrally.

Drugs

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to change the procedures followed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in licensing new drugs; and whether he will bring forward proposals for an interim procedure before full licensing while medical data about side-effects are established.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The internal procedures of the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) are a matter for CSM itself under schedule 1, paragraph 4 of the Medicines Act 1968. We respect and value the independent scientific judgments made by the CSM on the information laid before it and have no plans to amend schedule 1, paragraph 4.

Measures are already in place and are already used to assess safety and efficacy before a licensing decision is taken. Applicants for licences are required to report information and data derived from tests laid down in detail by directive 75/318 EEC, including toxicity tests and clinical trials.

After licensing, data sheets communicate to doctors the licensed uses of medicines and precautions, warnings, and necessary information about side-effects. Newly introduced medicines are subject to the black triangle scheme on product literature for at least two years after initial marketing. This is to alert doctors to report all adverse reactions (side-effects) to these medicines to CSM. Also, CSM monitors them intensively and takes appropriate action for example, by special "current problem" communication to all doctors, if new adverse reactions are identified. In addition, there is a legal requirement on companies to report adverse reactions to their own products. Since 1986, the CSM has recommended that companies carry out post-marketing surveillance studies on new medicines for widespread long-term use.

The existing system is therefore comprehensive in its scope to the objects of making the best scientific judgment before licensing and for monitoring after licensing. It is in line with present European Community pharmaceutical directives.

Corwin

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have been held between the medical profession and the Committee on Safety of Medicines about withdrawing the heart drug Corwin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the quality, efficacy and safety of Corwin was rigorously assessed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) prior to the granting of a product licence. It was placed on the market in May 1988, licensed for the treatment of mild to moderate heart failure. It was clearly recommended that the drug should not be used in severe heart failure as it had not shown benefit in these patients.

Corwin has been carefully monitored since its introduction on to the market and the CSM has collected and assessed extensive information on the effects of the product. In 1989 the findings of a clinical trial showed that the drug could cause deterioration in patients with severe heart failure; other information from the yellow card adverse drug reaction monitoring scheme indicated that it was sometimes being used inappropriately in such patients. A letter from ICI Pharmaceuticals, which markets the product, was sent to all doctors in August 1989 warning them of the dangers of the use of the product in severe heart failure, clearly defining those patients who should not be given the drug. The product's data sheet was amended accordingly.

In January 1990, on the basis of further information, the CSM made recommendations severely restricting the use of Corwin. Doctors were informed of this advice in a letter from ICI Pharmaceuticals and in the CSM bulletin "Current Problems" No. 28 of May 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library. The CSM is satisfied that the product can be used safely if these recommendations are followed, but will continue to monitor the situation.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of prescriptions involving use of the drug Corwin.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Available figures relate to the issue of prescriptions in England, in 1988, and are based on a sample of all prescriptions. Prescriptions issued for Corwin were 3,800 and for Xamoterol the generic equivalent were 1,420.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on deaths connected with the use of the drug Corwin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Committee on Safety of Medicines CSM has received 29 spontaneous reports under the yellow card scheme of deaths occurring in patients receiving treatment with Corwin. The report of a suspected reaction does not necessarily imply a causal association with the drug. In the case of patients treated with Corwin, the majority of those who died were critically ill and receiving a number of concurrent drugs.

In a clinical trial carried out in severe heart failure, the findings suggested a 2·5-fold greater mortality in association with Corwin compared to the group given no drug treatment.

As a result of this study's findings the CSM has recommended restrictions on the use of Corwin to ensure it is not used in patients with moderate to severe heart failure but only in patients with mild heart failure who benefit from treatment. Doctors and pharmacists were informed of these restrictions by the CSM's "Current Problems" bulletin distributed in May 1990, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Steroids

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of drug reaction were reported in each year of operation of the yellow card reporting system; what percentage of the cases reported each year were steroid related; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of reports received in each year were:

Year	Reports
1964	1,414
1965	3,987
1966	2,600
1967	3,500
1968	3,466
1969	4,463
1970	3,601
1971	2,837
1972	3,638
1973	3,619
1974	4,818
1975	5,052
1976	6,490
1977	11,255
1978	11,873
1979	10,840
1980	10,179
1981	13,032
1982	10,922
1983	12,689
1984	12,163
1985	12,652
1986	15,527
1987	16,431
1988	19,022
1989	19,246

Information on the numbers of these reports which are steroid related is not readily available; to prepare percentage figures per year for such reports would incur disproportionate costs.

Adverse reactions to medicinal products are reported to the CSM on a voluntary basis by doctors and dentists under the yellow card scheme and there is a statutory requirement for pharmaceutical companies to submit reports. The more reports received the better the system works. We have encouraged reporting in a number of ways over the years.

Smoking

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health authorities in England and Wales provide counselling services for people trying to reduce cigarette smoking.

Mr. Dorrell: We do not hold information centrally about the provision of such services in England. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of the regional health authorities. Responsibility for the provision of health services in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Eye Tests

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of children aged under 16 years received free eye tests in England (a) in each quarter of 1988-89 and (b) in each quarter in 1989-90.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 June.

Northern Region

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the remuneration of (a) the chair of the Northern regional health authority, (b) members of the Northern regional health authority, (c) the chairs of every district health authority in the Northern region, (d) the members of each district health authority in the Northern region, (e) the chair of every family practitioner committee in the Northern region and (f) the members of each family practitioner committee in the Northern region on 1 April; and what he now proposes it to be in each case.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Until 1 April 1990 the chairman of Northern regional health authority and the chairmen of each district health authority received £12,462 per annum.

New rates authorised with effect from 1 April for the chairmen of the regional health authority and district health authorities are:

Regional health authority
Northern	18,921
District health authority
Darlington	13,674
Durham	13,674
East Cumbria	15,503
Gateshead	13,674
Hartlepool	13,674
Newcastle	17,437
Northumberland	15,503
North Tees	13,674
North Tyneside	13,674
North West Durham	13,674
South Cumbria	13,674
South Tees	15,503
South Tyneside	13,674
South West Durham	13,674
Sunderland	15,503
West Cumbria	13,674

Until 1 April 1990 FPC chairmen received £5,000 per annum.

New rates authorised for 1 April 1990 for FPCs in Northern region are:

Cleveland	10,600
Cumbria	10,600
Durham	10,600
Gateshead	9,805
Newcastle	10,600
North Tyneside	9,805
Northumberland	10,600
South Tyneside	9,805
Sunderland	10,600

At present members of health authorities and FPCs do not receive remuneration, although they are eligible to claim expenses for travel and subsistence. Subject to parliamentary approval for the NHS and Community Care Bill, non-executive members of the reconstituted RHAs, DHAs and family health services authorities will receive remuneration at the rate of £5,000 per annum.

Water (Aluminium)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has made an assessment of the health implications of the presence of aluminium in water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Aluminium and its salts are of low toxicity, and no disease is known to be caused by aluminium naturally present, or as a result of approved use, in drinking water.

Aluminium in water used for haemodialysis is a recognised cause of degenerative diseases of the bone and brain in patients with chronic renal failure. To avoid this possibility it is standard practice to ensure that water used for dialysis has low levels of aluminium.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the possible connection between aluminium in water and the onset of Alzheimer's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The cause or causes of Alzheimer's disease are unknown. However, the question of a possible relationship with aluminium is one of several hypotheses under investigation. The independent expert scientific and medical advisory Committee on Medical Aspects of the contamination of air, soil and water advised in November 1988 that,

"it has not been established that a reduction in the aluminium intake of the general population would be likely to reduce the incidence of Alzheimer's disease. The association between Alzheimer's disease and aluminium concentrations in drinking-water, suggested by recent studies in Norway and the United Kingdom, was too tentative to justify changes in the use of aluminium sulphate in water treatment," and therefore,

"further research is important, particularly on the bioavailability of aluminium from all sources".

Research on the bioavailability of aluminium from food and water is in progress at the trace metabolism unit at Southampton with funding from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Further epidemiological and neuropathological research is in progress at the Medical Research Council units in Southampton and Newcastle. Research into Alzheimer's disease in general, and into the aluminium hypothesis in particular, is expanding nationally and internationally. This research will be kept under review.

Ambulance Dispute (Costs)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he now has the bills from the Army and the police incurred during the ambulance dispute; if he will detail the total costs from both the sources; and how they are being divided between each health region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The bill for the provision of military assistance during the ambulance dispute was £7·2 million. The cost, which stemmed partly from the training and general preparations needed to achieve a state of readiness across the country, is being shared between all regional health authorities in proportion to their share of main hospital and community health service revenue allocations. Information is not held centrally on the costs of assistance by police and other organisations which are being met directly by the health authorities concerned.

Baby Milk Food

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the restrictions on mothers' choice of baby milk formulas resulting from some health authorities' financial arrangements with manufacturers of infant formula;

(2) if he will list, so far as the information is available to him, the district health authorities in England and Wales which have made financial arrangements with manufacturers of infant formula to stock only one brand of baby milk food.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Other than infants formulas supplied under the welfare food scheme, health authorities are free to purchase from the full range of available infant formulas. Purchases by authorities are determined on the advice of relevant health professionals. Information about purchases by individual district health authorities in England is not collected centrally. However, authorities are aware of problems that may arise by purchasing from only one manufacturer. Information about purchases in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

SCOTLAND

Transport to Europe

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken in respect of the availability of transport of passengers and manufactured goods from Scotland to Europe after 1 January 1993.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Our plans to upgrade the A74 to motorway, together with the completion of the M40 and the proposed widening of the M6, M1 and M25, will substantially increase road capacity to Europe. In addition, the Scottish Development Department is undertaking a major review to ensure that the strategic Scottish trunk and key principal road network will meet future demands. We are encouraging potential Scottish rail customers to make known to British Rail their requirements for services to Europe via the channel tunnel. The Government's policy of liberalising air services will assist operators to provide improved services where demand exists.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost per person of collecting the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On the basis of local authorities' budget estimates, the cost of collecting the community charge in 1990-91 will be £13·86 per personal charge payer. This figure includes the cost of the registration work but excludes the cost of operating the rebate and transitional relief schemes. Full account has been taken in successive revenue support grant settlements of the costs incurred by local authorities in collecting the community charge.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of people who have not so far paid the poll tax for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally but we understand that in most regions 85 to 95 per cent. of those eligible for the community charge have made some payment, with a figure of 98 per cent. in one area. Payment levels are increasing as local authorities employ procedures for recovering arrears.

Employment Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the amount of money in real terms for employment training for each of the years from 1979 including the current year and the proposed amount for 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: As employment training started in September 1988, the information requested is available from that time only. At constant 1988-89 prices, details (inclusive of training allowances and income support) are as follows:

Financial Year	£ million (1988-89 prices)
1988-89[1] (actual expenditure)	46·8
1989-90 (actual expenditure)	116·8
1990-91 (estimated expenditure)	130·0

[1] (Half-year September to March only)

Registers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether following the conversion of the Registers of Scotland to agency status, he intends to (a) increase the levels of recording dues and registration dues and (b) introduce charges for provision of any services which are at present provided free of charge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 11 June. The fees order referred to there makes relatively minor adjustments to the main fee scales, leaving most recording dues and registration dues unchanged. Some new fees are to be introduced so that increasingly each service is paid for by its users. The fees order will increase income so that extra staff can be recruited to provide a better service.

A full-scale review of fees is to take place this year as provided for in the framework document for the Department of the Registers of Scotland, which was published on 6 April when the department became an agency.

Shellfish Ban

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to compensate fishermen for losses resulting from the shellfish ban.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No ban was imposed. The Government issued a warning to the public on 26 May that consumption of locally caught shellfish taken from the coast between Montrose and the Humber could cause illness. The risk arose from a natural cause and the Government acted to safeguard public health. In such circumstances compensation would not be appropriate.

Handicapped Prisoners

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has commissioned any research studies into the experiences and needs of prisoners with mental and/or physical handicaps in prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The Scottish Home and Health Department has recently commissioned two studies which are concerned with the needs of mentally disturbed people in prison.

The first, under the direction of Dr. David Cooke of the Douglas Inch clinic, Glasgow, is designed to examine the prevalence of various forms of mental illness among the prison population and to develop training packages to assist prison personnel in dealing with these groups of offenders. The second is being conducted by Dr. James McManus of Dundee university, and is concerned with the possible impact which regime factors may have in the creation and exacerbation of mentally disturbed behaviour.

Both studies began in January 1989 and are scheduled to report in December 1991.

In addition, the Scottish Home and Health Department is currently in discussion with a Scottish university over the possibility of conducting work on the problems faced by physically handicapped persons while in prison.

Adult Education

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he has taken to monitor the provision by education authorities in Scotland of community-based adult basic education and English as a second language service; what criteria he has used to determine whether or not those are adequate (a) in terms of scale and (b) in terms of quality; and what conclusions he has drawn from the application of these criteria;

(2) what plans he has to ensure that all those leaving long-stay institutions without essential skills in literacy and numeracy receive adult basic education tuition;

(3) what guidance he has issued to Scottish education authorities in order to ensure the development of an educational dimension to care in the community; and what steps has he taken to ensure that these guidelines have been implemented;

(4) what steps he has taken to assess (a) increases in volume and (b) improvement in quality in community-based adult education over the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 June 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 12 June to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) at columns 123-24.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total amount of funds made available in each of the past five years to train and accredit adult basic education practitioners in Scotland.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 June 1990]: The funding of adult basic education practitioners in Scotland is primarily the responsibility of education authorities to determine in the light of local needs and with regard to their own priorities and the total resources available to them, including the resources provided by central Government.

In addition to revenue support grant, the Government have made available to education authorities in both 1989-90 and 1990-91 specific grant of £30,000 towards the costs of in-service training for adult basic education practitioners.

Railways

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the grant aid paid by central Government to British Rail for (a) the restoration of double track and related modernisation of the Perth to Inverness line and (b) the resignalling of the Perth to Inverness line since 1970; what grant, other than section 56 grant, was paid towards these two projects; and what was the economic rate of return, both before and after grant, for each project, or the project as a whole, on the basis of which grant was paid.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Detailed information on these schemes is not held in the Department. However, public service obligation grant is paid towards the difference between the costs and revenues of the subsidised sectors of British Rail. It is not hypothecated to particular costs or individual projects.

A rate of return would not have been calculated in assessing these projects, because there is no requirement for investment which renews existing assets of services supported by public service obligation grant to earn a specific rate of return. The option chosen is that which maintains services at least net cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many states have acceded to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty since the last review conference of the treaty; how many states have withdrawn from the treaty since it came into force; and what information he has on how many states have threatened publicly to withdraw but declined to carry out the threat.

Mr. Waldegrave: Five states have acceded to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty since the 1985 review conference, and four others have ratified the treaty. In addition, North Korea, which we do not recognise as a state, acceded in 1985. No state has withdrawn from the treaty since it entered into force on 5 March 1970. As regards the last part of the question I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 11 June 1990 to the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme) at column 43.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the current year's review of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom is a depositary power of the non-proliferation treaty and, as such, we have received several communications about the fourth review conference from other states' parties from non-governmental organisations and from members of the public.

Oman

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Oman regarding their refusal to adhere to CITES.

Mr. Waldegrave: We hope that countries not at present party to CITES, such as Oman, will in due course sign the convention, and we fully support any effort by the CITES secretariat to encourage wider participation in CITES.

British Citizens Abroad (Deaths)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many deaths of British citizens abroad his Department is aware of in each of the past five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no requirement for the death of a British national overseas to be registered at a British consulate. Many such deaths are not reported. The numbers of deaths overseas in circumstances requiring the assistance of British consular officials are available only for the past three years. They are:

	number
1987	751
1988	833
1989	852

Some of these deaths were registered at British consular offices. The total numbers of deaths of British citizens registered by British consular officers during the period under reference were:

	number
1985	1,052
1986	1,231
1987	1,295
1988	1,193
1989	1,029

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what procedures are followed by his Department to assist relatives of British citizens who have died abroad;

(2) if he will review the procedures followed by his Department to assist relatives of British citizens who have died abroad.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no set procedures. Each case is dealt with as the circumstances demand. Consular officers provide all the help they properly can. They have no powers to undertake inquiries of a police nature. Their help is normally restricted to ensuring that the next-of-kin is informed, assisting relatives and friends in organising the repatriation of the remains or arranging local burial or cremation, obtaining information from the local authorities and giving any other general assistance they can.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department takes to accurately record the cause of death abroad of British holiday-makers.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no requirement for the death of a British national overseas to be registered at a British consulate. Many such deaths are not reported. Consular registers record the fact that a death has taken place. There is no requirement under the regulations for the cause of death to be entered on death certificates.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department takes to ensure that official reports by foreign authorities on the deaths of British citizens in European Community countries are received by relatives in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Official reports on such deaths received by consular officers are made available direct to relatives in the United Kingdom or to Her Majesty's coroners when an inquest is being held.

Dall's Porpoises

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Japanese Government over the slaughter of Dall's porpoises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have already raised this matter with the Japanese Government who have assured us that they are committed to the responsible management of small cetaceans, including the Dall's porpoise, which live within 200 nautical miles of Japan's coast. In 1989 the Japanese Government introduced new regulations which will reduce the numbers of Dall's porpoises caught.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 18 and 19 June.

Mr. Hurd: The Foreign Affairs Council met in Luxembourg on 18 and 19 June. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council discussed preparations for the Dublin European Council on 25 and 26 June. Ministers agreed their report to the European Council on political union, and briefly discussed economic and monetary union, co-operation against drugs trafficking and on the environment, and recent developments on frontiers issues.

The Council approved directives for negotiations with EFTA for the extension of the single market to EFTA countries through the creation of a European economic area. The first round of negotiations with EFTA on the basis of this mandate were held in Brussels on 20 June.

In the light of recent violence against opposition demonstrators in Romania, the Council deferred a decision on the signature of the EC/Romania trade and commercial and economic co-operation agreement. There was also broad support for freezing G24 economic aid to Romania and withholding an invitation to Romania to attend the G24 ministerial meeting on 4 July. The Commission announced its intention to table proposals on aid to the other central and eastern European countries after that meeting. The Council also asked the Commission to conduct exploratory talks on association agreements with those countries in eastern Europe implementing economic and political reform most quickly and effectively.

The Commission reported to the Council on preparations for the Houston economic summit. The three main issues were likely to be east-west, the environment and the GATT Uruguay round.

The Commission put forward proposals for strengthening the Community's relations with Yugoslavia and Turkey, and for new Mediterranean policy. These were referred for further detailed work at official level.

The Council finalised the internal financing agreement for the fourth Lomé convention allowing the Community and its member states to proceed to ratification of the convention. The House will have the opportunity to debate this in the autumn.

The Council discussed progress in the GATT Uruguay round, with a view to the Houston economic summit on 9 to 11 July and the GATT trade negotiations committee —TNC—in Geneva in the week beginning 23 July. Ministers reaffirmed their strong commitment to a successful outcome to the round.

In the margins, Ministers discussed the treatment of imports of Japanese cars after 1992. The Commission reported progress in contacts with Japan. There was also discussion in European political co-operation of eastern Europe, the Soviet Union, South Africa, middle east, Lithuania and Ethiopia. Statements were issued on Ethiopia and Romania.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much ivory has been exported from Hong Kong since 30 March; and what amounts to which countries.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 7 June 1990]: Between 30 March 1990 to 31 May 1990 the Hong Kong CITES Authority has been notified of the following ivory exports.

Destination	Quantity kilograms
Taiwan	1·9
South Korea	6·6
Mexico	9·8
China	3,268·6
Saudi Arabia	8·8
United Kingdom (personal affects for which the United Kingdom CITES management authority has issued licences)	5·4
Andorra	9·1

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the Hong Kong authorities to ensure that none of the 116 tonnes of ivory without CITES certification leaves the territory.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The Hong Kong authorities have made it clear that export licences will not be issued for any commercial exports of ivory without CITES certificates. The special task force set up by the Hong Kong Customs and Excise service in June 1989 is responsible for enforcing these controls.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the Hong Kong authorities to monitor the movement of the 116 tonnes of ivory in the territory without CITES documentation.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 7 June 1990]: All commercial ivory in Hong Kong, including stocks without CITES documentation, has to be registered. Those holding stocks are required to have possession licences. These licences have to be amended whenever ivory is transferred between traders. Spot checks are made to ensure that these regulations are enforced.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the ivory seized by the special task force in Hong Kong since 22 March according to amount; from whom it was seized; what was the country of origin; and what is the current stock of confiscated ivory now held by the Hong Kong authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 7 June 1990]: Since 22 March 1990, the Customs and Excise special task force has seized five consignments of worked ivory totalling 75·35 kg. Three consignments were illegal exports from Hong Kong not permitted into the destination country and confiscated from the returning travellers. One was an illegal export from the United Kingdom. The remaining item was found in a piece of unclaimed baggage so its origins remain unknown. The Hong Kong authorities now hold 2·4 tonnes of confiscated ivory.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much elephant ivory was exported to South Korea from Hong Kong in 1988 and 1989; and how much has been exported since the reservation entered on behalf of Hong Kong by the United Kingdom to the CITES ban.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 7 June 1990]: The following amounts of raw elephant ivory were exported from Hong Kong to the Republic of Korea (South Korea):

	Kg
1988	Nil
1989	[1]460

[1] Value HK dollars 407,596.

In addition, Hong Kong exported worked ivory—including tooth products of animals other than elephants—to South Korea as follows:

	Value in HK dollars
1988	1,066,021
1989	747,742

In the period 18 January to 31 May, 214·6 kg of raw and worked elephant ivory have been exported to South Korea.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Energy Policy

13. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's energy policy for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Energy policy in Northern Ireland is aimed at reducing dependence upon oil both for electricity generation and as an energy source for industry and commerce; and at promoting the efficient use of energy in all sectors of the economy.

Belfast Prison (Fights)

14. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent steps have been taken to reduce the level of fights at Her Majesty's prison, Belfast.

Mr. Cope: The governor is taking all the steps available to him in the management and supervision of movement within the prison to reduce the opportunities for conflict.

Extradition

15. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the arrangements for extradition from the Republic of Ireland to the United Kingdom; and when he last raised this matter at the Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Cope: United Kingdom Government concern that extradition arrangements between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom be fully effective was raised at the last Intergovernmental Conference on 19 April when Ministers commissioned officials to undertake a review of the situation and report back to a future conference.

18. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further applications have been made for the extradition of terrorist suspects from the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland since he last answered questions in the House.

Mr. Cope: It is not the practice to disclose what warrants have been sent to the Republic of Ireland. However, no new application for the return of fugitive offenders to Northern Ireland has been heard in the courts in the Republic of Ireland since I last answered questions in the House.

Poaching

16. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the extent of illegal netting and poaching on salmon and dollaghan rivers in Northern Ireland and in Lough Neagh.

Mr. Peter Bottomley The total amount of illegal netting seized in Northern Ireland by the Fisheries Conservancy Board and the Foyle Fisheries Commission for the two years 1988 and 1989 was 17,839m and 15,620m respectively while the netting seized in Lough Neagh was 11,142m and 6,400m respectively. In the same two years the total number of prosecutions taken in Northern Ireland for illegal netting and poaching related offences was 427 and 372 respectively.

Mr. Gerard Slane

17. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the current state of investigations into the death of Mr. Gerard Slane.

Mr. Cope: No. This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the RUC. However, I understand that the investigation into the murder of Mr. Gerard Slane is continuing.

Labour Statistics

19. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of employment in Northern Ireland at present and in June 1986.

Mr. Needham: At December 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 518,640 employees in employment. This estimate is 17,200 higher than the corresponding figure for June 1986 and employment in Northern Ireland is now at its highest level for nine years.

Ministerial Visits

20. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many visits abroad have been made by Northern Ireland Ministers in the last two years in which inward investment into the Province was promoted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Since April 1988, Northern Ireland Ministers have made 15 visits overseas to encourage inward investment contributing to the promotion of almost 4,000 new jobs.

Stevens Report

21. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in giving effect to the recommendations of the Stevens report.

32. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to give effect to the recommendations contained in the Stevens report.

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the recommendations contained in the Stevens report are being acted upon.

Mr. Cope: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State indicated in his statement to the House on 17 May, at column 1027, action in relation to many of the matters to which Mr. Stevens drew attention in his recommendations has already been taken, or is in hand. All his other recommendations are now being followed up by the appropriate authorities.

22. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary about the Stevens report since the limited publication of the report.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet the Chief Constable and other senior RUC officers when we discuss a range of issues with which we are jointly concerned. Naturally, these issues have included the results of Mr. Stevens' inquiry. We are at one in our desire that a positive response should be made to his valuable report.

Benefit Claimants

23. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claimants in Northern Ireland, as a result of replacement of supplementary benefit by income support, have had a net reduction in benefits received between April 1988 and April 1990.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available but, because of transitional additions, it must be very few.

Health Provision

24. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of the Northern Ireland health boards to discuss health provision.

Mr. Needham: My noble Friend Lord Skelmersdale last met board chairmen on 13 June and has had regular meetings with other representatives of the board. His discussions with them have covered a wide range of issues dealing with the policy and management of the health and personal social services, including progress on the reforms in "Working for Patients" and the proposals in "People First" to achieve improved provision of community care.

Ulster Defence Regiment

25. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Ulster Defence Regiment soldiers have been killed in terrorist attacks (a) in the current year so far and (b) since the regiment was founded.

Mr. Cope: Six members of the Ulster Defence Regiment have been killed in terrorist attacks this year. A total of 187 serving members of the regiment have been killed since it was founded.

Debenhams Store, Belfast

26. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the Burton group concerning the opening of the Debenhams store in Belfast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No such representations have been received.

Community Relations Council

27. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the role of the Community Relations Council.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Community Relations Council was established in January 1990 to provide support, facilites and recognition for organisations operating at local level which are concerned with the development of community relations, awareness of cultural diversity and conflict resolution. The council aims to increase mutual respect and understanding, increase public awareness of activities which improve community relations and promote constructive debate about community relations and cultural diversity.

Around £100,000 will be available to the council in 1990-91 to develop new project work. The council will also have responsibility for a number of funding programmes previously carried out by central Government, the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Voluntary Trust. These programmes are concerned with supporting cross-community contact and widening understanding of and respect for the different cultural traditions in Northern Ireland.

NHS Trusts

28. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received any expressions of interest from hospitals wishing to become self-governing trusts in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Formal applications to become a self-governing trust can be invited only after Parliament has approved the necessary Northern Ireland legislation. However, to date the following have expressed an interest in exploring the implications of self-governing status:

1. Downe Hospital, Downpatrick
2. The Royal Group of Hospitals
3. The Ulster, North Down and Ards Hospitals Unit of Management.
4. Craigavon Area Hospital Group

The management executive for the health and personal social services will be discussing expressions of interest with the hospitals concerned with a view to identifying which candidates should be encouraged to develop formal business plans.

Fair Employment

29. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the implementation of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989.

34. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action has been taken to implement the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden).

Arts

30. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to promote the contribution of the arts to education in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government recognise the importance of the arts as part of the educational development of young people. Elements of creative and expressive studies have been included as a compulsory part of the Northern Ireland school curriculum. In addition, the Arts Council for Northern Ireland has established a range of programmes—for example, young arts, youth dance and youth drama—designed to expose children to the influence of professional artists as creators and performers.

"Shoot to Kill"

31. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will obtain a copy of the transcript of the ITV programme "Shoot to Kill" for his departmental library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I watched the programme and was concerned because I did not think that it showed an appropriate degree of balance and because the drama-documentary technique used was an unsatisfactorary approach to the serious issues at stake. On the events in question, there is nothing I can add to the statement made by the Attorney-General in the House on 25 January 1988 at column 21.

Community Relations

33. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much his Department spent on community relations in 1989-90; what he is proposing to spend in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Measures directed at improving the relationships between the different parts of the community in Northern Ireland have a high priority in Northern Ireland public expenditure plans.

In 1989-90 around £2·6 million was spent on community relations programmes supported by the central community relations unit and the Department of Education. In 1990-91 it is proposed to spend £3·984 million.

In addition, all Northern Ireland Departments are required to take account of the impact of their policies and programmes on community relations in the Province. As such, many mainline expenditure programmes make an important contribution to healing community divisions.

The main objectives of community relations programmes are:

—to ensure that all sides of the community enjoy equality of opportunity and equity of treatment;
—to develop cross-community contact and co-operation;
—to encourage the development of mutual respect and understanding.

45. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to bring Protestant and Catholic schools together to foster better community relations; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: In October 1987 I introduced the cross-community contact scheme to stimulate cross-community schools and youth and community groups to undertake projects on a cross-community basis.

Since its introduction some 400 schools—about one third of all schools in Northern Ireland—and 300 youth community clubs have applied for assistance under the scheme which has a budget in 1990-91 of £500,000.

In addition, and in support of this scheme, I am providing funds to the Ulster folk and transport museum for residential and teaching facilities in which groups from both communities can meet and work together.

As part of education reform in Northern Ireland I have also included education for mutual understanding and cultural heritage as compulsory cross-curricular themes. These will not only improve the awareness of all children of the various strands in our cultural heritage but provide a framework within which opportunities for contacts between schools can be increased.

Constitutional Developments

35. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his discussions with Northern Ireland political parties regarding the constitutional developments.

43. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how he intends to inform Parliament about progress with his talks with the political parties in the Province relating to some form of devolved administration.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of his talks with political groups in the Province.

Mr. Brooke: I have had useful preparatory talks with leaders of the main political parties in Northern Ireland, and with others, on the possibility of embarking on collective discussions. I am encouraged by the constructive approach of party leaders to believe that the basis for such discussions exists. It is common ground that the resolution of such talks would need to comprehend the transfer of power to locally accountable political institutions, the relationship between such institutions and the Irish Government and the implications for the relationship between the British and Irish Governments.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek to include representatives of the Conservative party in Northern Ireland in his talks on constitutional developments in the Province.

Mr. Brooke: In exploring the scope for political progress in Northern Ireland, I and my colleagues, take soundings from a wide range of political opinion, not excluding representatives of the Conservative party in Northern Ireland.

Community Workshops

36. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to ensure that community workshops receive payments as promised.

Mr. Needham: Promised payments are being made.

Security

37. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will next meet Ministers of the Government of the Republic of Ireland to discuss security matters.

Mr. Brooke: Security matters will be discussed at the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference, which is likely to take place within the next few weeks.

38. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

46. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

48. Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on security in the Province.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Members and the right hon. Member to the answer which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Brown).

47. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met Ministers from the Irish Republic; what discussions took place on security matters; and what subsequent action has followed.

Mr. Brooke: I met the Irish Foreign Minister, Mr. Collins, on 11 June to discuss political development. Security matters were not raised on that occasion; they were last discussed at the Intergovernmental Conference meeting on 19 April. My hon. Friend would, for obvious reasons, not expect me to comment publicly on the details of security co-operation.

RUC (Shoot-to-Kill Allegations)

39. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to hold a judicial inquiry into the allegations of a shoot-to-kill policy by the Royal Ulster Constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: These allegations have already been the subject of an exhaustive inquiry led first by John Stalker, deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester police and then by Colin Sampson, chief constable of West Yorkshire whose report was considered in full by the DPP(NI). There is not, and never has been, a so-called shoot-to-kill policy and I see no justification for a further inquiry.

Hazardous Waste

40. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much, by volume, toxic and other hazardous waste material passes through Northern Ireland en route from Eire to the mainland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the 12 months to 31 May 1990, the weight of toxic and other hazardous waste material authorised for passage through Northern Ireland from the Republic of Ireland en route to disposal facilities in Great Britain was 2,386 tonnes. Although the volume of each consignment is not necessarily recorded, its weight is specified in the prescribed documentation.

Conservation

41. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to appoint a director of conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. We shall combine the functions of the conservation and environmental protection divisions of the Department of Environment Northern Ireland within an expanded directorate of environmental services. It will be headed by a new post at grade 4 level.

Two further senior appointments, at grade 5 and grade 6 level, will be made. A successor to the director of conservation, who retired on 11 June 1990, will be appointed as soon as possible. This will continue the process of enhancing the profile of conservation and environmental protection in Northern Ireland and of strengthening the resources directed to that end.

Human Rights

42. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the protection of human rights in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. Ross).

Debt

44. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average amount of debt per head of the adult population in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: Information is not available in the form requested, but, according to a recent study undertaken by the Policy Studies Institute, the average amount of problem debt in 1989 was approximately £36 per head of the adult population. The PSI study defined a problem debt as a regular commitment, including a credit agreement or household commitment, which satisfied both the following conditions:

(a) respondents had fallen behind or failed to make a payment during the previous 12 months, and
(b) respondents were worried about the arrears or stated that making payments was a difficulty.

The figure therefore does not include all moneys owed; it does not cover credit agreements or household commitments where there is no problem making repayments.

Nurses

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the conversion courses available to nurses in Northern Ireland; if he will indicate commencement dates for each course and the number of places available annually; and what assistance has been given to the health boards in Northern Ireland by the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Mr. Needham: Conversion courses, approved by the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland, are presently available at three colleges of nursing in Northern Ireland as follows:—

Name of College	Conversion to Part of the Register	Number of Intakes per annum	Number of Places available	Commencement Date	Length of Course
Northern Area	1	One	Minimum 12 Maximum 15	5 March 1990	Full-time course of 55 weeks duration minimum
Southern Area	1, 3 or 5	One	Minimum 8 Maximum 12	13 November 1989	Full-time course of 44 weeks duration minimum
Western Area	1 and 3	One	Minimum 6 Maximum 10	28 August 1988 Part 1 and 20 February 1989 Part 3	Full-time course of 48 weeks duration minimum

A proposal to provide a conversion course to part 6 of the professional register at the Eastern area college of nursing, Northside, is presently under consideration by the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland. If approved, this course will offer at least one intake of up to 20 students. It is hoped to introduce a second intake later this year. The Eastern area college of nursing, Southside, is presently developing a conversion course which is expected to be available early next year. It is also proposed to provide a conversion course to part 5 of the register at the Western area college of nursing in the near future.

Health and social services boards may second "second level nurses", previously referred to "state enrolled nurses", in their employment to the national board's colleges of nursing to undergo a period of further training for registration as a "first level nurse" or parts 1, 3 or 5 or the professional register. The health and social services boards liaise with the colleges of nursing about the numbers of nurses requiring training.

In addition to the traditional conversion courses available, there is also a proposal to enable conversion through an open learning inititative. This is being organised jointly by the Open university and an independent nursing publication and is scheduled for launch in October 1990. The Northern Ireland national board will be responsible for approving the open learning courses made available in the Province.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northen Ireland what is the present status of the secretariat of the Anglo-Irish Agreement in Belfast.

Mr. Brooke: The secretariat services the Intergovernmental Conference and provides a useful channel of communication between the two Governments on issues of mutual concern under the agreement.

Road Fatalities

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on levels of road fatalities at the present time and in 1980.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Too many people are dying in crashes and collisions. In 1980, a total of 229 people died on the roads in Northern Ireland compared with 181 in 1989 and a provisional figure of 73 in the first five months of 1990.

These figures show an encouraging downward trend in road fatalities over the last 10 years. Much remains to be done if we are to achieve our target of a 30 per cent. reduction in fatalities by 31 October 1990.

The approaching summer months are frequently a time of high risk for road users. Sadly, children figure high amongst the victims. Looking forward to summer activities, drivers need to take extra care to ensure that our thoughtlessness does not lead to ruined holidays and wrecked lives.

Religious Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the religious education syllabus was last updated; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no prescribed religious education syllabus in Northern Ireland, apart from those offered by recognised examining bodies. The recent Education Reform Order contains provision whereby the Department of Education may designate a "core syllabus" for religious education where such has been prepared and consulted upon by a drafting group. The main churches, in their capacity as trustees and transferors of schools, have been invited to collaborate in taking forward this task.

Beef

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is able to estimate the value of beef traded between Northern Ireland and the Republic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1989 exports of beef from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland had an estimated value of £67 million. Imports from the Republic were estimated at £8·3 million.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a further statement on the operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government remain committed to the Anglo-Irish Agreement and the principles it embodies, but would operate it sensitively in the interests of bringing about talks between the political parties. I remain willing to examine any proposals concerning the agreement, particularly if they are likely to command widespread support.

1020 CW68/36 Job 9-11

Republic of Ireland

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects he expects to be raised at his next meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I expect matters discussed at the next Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference to include the prospect for political development in Northern Ireland, cross-border security co-operation, arrangements for dealing with fugitive offenders, the Stevens report and cross-border economic and social co-operation.

Eye Tests

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will consider introducing proposals to remove charges for eyesight tests.

Mr. Needham: Children, those on low incomes, people with certain special medical needs and other vulnerable groups continue to be entitled to free health service sight tests. There are no plans to extend this entitlement.

Electricity

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of the Northern Ireland electricity board to discuss the provision of electricity.

Mr. Needham: I last met the chairman, the chief executive and other representatives of Northern Ireland Electricity on 7 November 1989.

DHSS Offices

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for the years (a) 1969, (b) 1972, (c) 1979, (d) 1985 and (e) the current year for the month of April in each case the number of persons on his best estimate (i) unemployed and (ii) employed in the areas covered by the DHSS offices in (1) Londonderry, (2) Strabane, (3) Limavady, (4) Coleraine, and (5) Magherafelt.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 June 1990]: Information is not available on the number of people employed by SSO area. Nor are records of the number of unemployed people held for longer than 10 years. However, the number of people registered as unemployed at these social security offices in April 1985 and April 1990 was as follows:

Social Security Office	April 1985	April 1990
Londonderry	9,840	8,231
Strabane	3,535	3,043
Limavady	2,240	1,895
Coleraine	3,647	3,228
Magherafelt	2,799	2,349

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Charge Benefit

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the poll tax rebate scheme would cost in Scotland in 1990-91 if everyone presently receiving an 80 per cent. rebate received a 100 per cent. rebate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimated cost of increasing maximum community charge benefit for all benefit recipients in Scotland from 80 per cent. to 100 per cent. of the community charge set by the local authority would be about £80 million in 1990-91.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1985-6-7 Family Expenditure Survey.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners have ceased to be eligible for exemption from community charge benefit as a result of S.I. 1990, No. 142, introduced in April.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None. As far as we are aware, the Companies Act 1989 (Commencement No. 2) Order 1990 did not affect retirement pensioners' entitlement to community charge benefit.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has issued any guidelines to local offices concerning disregarding mobility and attendance allowance when assessing eligible income for entitlement to community charge benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Local authorities are responsible for administering community charge benefit on a day-to-day basis, in accordance with the provisions in the Community Charge Benefit Regulations. The housing benefit and community charge benefit guidance manuals provide local authorities with guidance on how to disregard both mobility allowance and attendance allowance when assessing community charge benefit. Copies of both manuals are in the Library.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the community charge in each London borough and with it the gross weekly income levels at which (a) single pensioners, (b) pensioner couples, (c) lone parents with one child under five years and (d) married couples with two children under 11 years lose entitlement to community charge benefit and/or family credit as appropriate.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 17 May 1990]: The table shows the level of net income at which entitlement to community charge benefit or family credit is lost. Entitlement to all income-related benefits is determined by comparing net income with the relevant applicable amount. The relationship between net and gross income depends on the personal circumstances of the individual taxpayer; my right hon. Friend's question has therefore been answered by reference to net income alone.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much he estimates it would cost his Department to abolish the 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge presently being paid by claimants on income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The estimated cost in terms of community charge benefit of increasing the maximum benefit, for income support recipients alone, from 80 to 100 per cent. of the community charge set by the local authority is about £330 million in 1990-91.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1985-6-7 Family Expenditure Survey.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of granting married couples the equivalent joint income and savings limit for community charge rebate purposes as would be available to two individual adults.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 5 June 1990]: The estimated cost for community charge benefit of granting to all couples (i) a personal allowance double the single person's personal allowance for the income-related benefits and (ii) lower and upper savings limits double the current limits of £3,000 and £16,000 respectively is around £230 million in 1990-91.

Retired Women

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of women over retirement age; and what number are in receipt of means-tested benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In mid-1988 there were about 6·7 million women aged 60 or over in Great Britain. Of these an estimated 2·8 million were in receipt of an income-related benefit. The estimate relates to all women aged 60 or over including those who are the partners of claimants.

Retirement Pension

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of average net male earnings the retirement pension is in 1988-90; and if he will provide an estimate for 1990-91 for a single person and a couple.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures are not yet available to provide a 1990-91 estimate.

Management Consultants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the studies conducted inside his Department by management consultants over the last 10 years, naming the consultancy, the cost, the subject and the outcome in each instance.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Details of the studies conducted from 1986-87 are shown in the tables. The costs of individual studies are not given, as that could breach commercial confidentiality. Information on the outcome of studies is not collected centrally, and this and information on studies prior to 1986-87 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. As the studies prior to April 1989 were undertaken on behalf of the Department of Health and Social Security, some do not relate solely to social security matters.

Widowed Mother's Allowance

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women who receive widowed mother's allowance also receive income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available figures show that at May 1988[1] some 6,000 women getting widowed mother's allowance—approximately 8 per cent of the total —were in receipt of income support.

[1] Source: annual statistical inquiry, May 1988

Local Offices (Visits)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many visits were made by his Department's local office staff to (a) retirement pensioners, (b) families, (c) young people and (d) single people in (1) Leeds, West, (2) West Yorkshire and (3) England in each year from 1979 to 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information about visits is not held in the form required. The table records total numbers of benefit visits made since 1985 by (1) Leeds West local offices, (2) West Yorkshire local offices, and (3) local offices in England and Wales.

Year ending March	Leeds West local office	West Yorkshire	England and Wales
1985	6,464	104,564	2,535,148
1986	5,171	91,326	1,988,934
1987	2,141	54,775	1,351,712
1988	1,655	41,576	1,058,051
1989	1,616	34,676	870,642
1990	1,774	33,493	911,046

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants in Scotland have had deductions made from their income support for payment of the poll tax each month since it was introduced; how many have had deductions in each case of 5 per cent. of their personal allowance as (a) single persons and (b) married couples; and how many in each case had deductions of their income support for other reasons as well.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The most recent count of income support cases in Scotland with a community charge deduction, completed in May 1990, identified a total of 2,434 with deductions in place. The further information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Carr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the income support live load cases for his Department's offices covering Sefton, Knowsley and St. Helens, for the years 1979 and 1990.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information from 1979 is unavailable. The information for May 1990 is as follows:

Area	Number of Income Support claimants[1]
Sefton	30,214
Knowsley	30,484
St. Helens	16,005

[1] 100 per cent. count of cases in action which include a number where payment has ceased but other action is continuing. Data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Disability Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will give his estimate of the number of people with mental illness who will benefit from the new lower mobility component of the proposed disability allowance;

(2) if he will give estimates of the number of people with severe mental handicap, with moderate mental handicap and with mild mental handicap who will benefit from the new lower mobility component of the disability allowance; and what are the criteria used to define these groups.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 9 February at column 800.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the basis of his estimate of 150,000 disabled people being entitled to the new lower level of the mobility component of the proposed disability allowance.

Mr. Scott: The estimate which has to be regarded as tentative was derived by examining data from the OPCS surveys of disability to identify the number of people in the relevant age group whose responses to the survey questions indicated they were not independently mobile and did not otherwise fulfil the current criteria for mobility allowance.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to increase the £3,000 disregard on capital in assessing entitlements to income-related benefits;

(2) what plans he has to revise regulations relating to assumed tariff income from capital;

(3) what plans he has to increase from £250 the amount of capital assumed to yield an income of £1 per week in calculating entitlement to income-related benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans for changing capital rules beyond those announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement, but, of course, all such issues are considered periodically.

Minister for the Disabled

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is considering any change in the title of the Minister for the Disabled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that with effect from today, my departmental title will be "Minister for Social Security and Disabled People".

I have become increasingly aware of the concerns expressed both by people with disabilities and the organisations which represent them about the use of the term "the disabled". I believe that the new ministerial title will be more appropriate.

Fraud

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the results of the efficiency scrutiny of social security fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have today placed a copy of the report in the Library.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and I have carefully considered the recommendations contained in the report. On the major organisational issue raised by the report we have considered that it would not be right to establish a unified fraud investigation agency separate from the normal benefit administration of either Department. In our view action on fraud must be seen as an integral part of each Department's overall responsibilities to ensure that benefits go to those properly entitled to them. All benefits staff need to be alert to the risk of fraud and those investigating it need to understand the detail of benefits and be able to work in close co-operation with staff delivering them.

Instead, we propose to adopt the alternative approach recommended by the report, reorganising fraud resources within DSS into sector teams and reaching a liaison agreement between the two Departments to strengthen co-operation between them in preventing and detecting fraud.

A number of the report's other recommendations will also be implemented, with particular emphasis on those which seek to increase efficiency and effectiveness and to improve the monitoring of performance. Officials of the two Departments will prepare a joint action plan with a view to having the new organisational arrangements in place by the end of the year.

Industrial Deafness

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants within his Department deal with industrial deafness cases; and if this number is expected to increase in expectation of individuals who are now eligible for benefits after the abolition of the five-year rule governing claims for industrial deafness benefit.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to identify the number of staff currently engaged on industrial deafness cases as this type of work is dealt with alongside wider disablement benefits work. In the light of the additional claims and applications for review received so far following the Court of Appeal decision on the five-year rule for occupational deafness, we consider that these can be accommodated within existing local office resources.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals who have been rejected for claims as a result of the five-year rule governing claims for industrial deafness benefit have now been notified of the recent change as a result of the ruling by the Law Lords in October 1989.

Mr. Scott: None.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many individuals who suffer from industrial deafness have reapplied for benefits now that the five-year restriction has been removed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people who were previously denied benefits under the former five-year rule governing claims for industrial deafness benefit have reapplied since the ruling of the Law Lords in October 1989 on good cause grounds.

Mr. Scott: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why his Department has excluded the glass industry from its list of recommended industries for claims for industrial deafness.

Mr. Scott: The list of prescribed occupations for industrial deafness is based on recommendations by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council. The council has made no specific recommendations concerning the glass industry.

Local Offices

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many offices providing public access for the purpose of claiming benefit, including unemployment benefit, were in operation in Great Britain on 1 April.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The total number of offices giving public access for the purpose of claiming benefits in operation on 1 April was 1,825. These figures can be broken down as follows.

	Number
Integrated Social Security Local Offices	432
National Insurance Offices (Contributory Benefits only)	22
Area Offices (Income Support and Social Fund only)	19
District Offices	1
Branch Offices	4
Full-time Caller Offices	67
Part-time Caller Offices	176
Unemployment Benefit Offices	764
Unemployment Benefit Offices (sharing premises with Job Centres)	209
Employment Service integrated offices (combining Unemployment Benefit Offices and Job Centres)	131
Total	1,825

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many integrated local offices were in operation on 1 April this year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: On 1 April there were 432 integrated local offices in operation.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 June, Official Report, columns 52-53 relating to social security benefits, if he will specify the further information that is required by his Department in order to enable it to provide an answer to the question.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Entitlement to income-related benefits can be established only once certain, quite precise, personal details are known.

Even if the value of benefit in respect of housing costs were excluded, information would still be required to enable an assessment to be made of what additional requirements each beneficiary may have received under the supplementary benefit scheme, for example, the exact ages of claimant, partner and children, their state of health and whether this meant they had to follow any special diet, needed extra baths or wore out their clothing unusually quickly, what laundry facilities were available and the size and condition of the accommodation. This list is by no means exhaustive but serves to illustrate the complexities of the old scheme and the intrusive questioning necessary to determine entitlement.

Further information would also be required to determine whether each individual satisfied the conditions for the receipt of other social security benefits such as attendance allowance, mobility allowance, retirement pension, and unemployment benefit and, if so, at what level.

Debt Recovery

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer on 11 June, Official Report, column 53, what action has resulted from the efficiency scrutiny on the recovery of money owed to the Department; and whether he will place a copy of the scrutiny report in the Library.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Following completion of the scrutiny, officials have been preparing a draft action plan for consideration. When final decisions have been taken we shall announce them and also decide what supporting material should be published.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his best estimate of the value of the existing resettlement units.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are 22 resettlement units throughout Great Britain. Two of the units are leasehold and one is owned by a health authority. From 1 April 1990 all the properties, except the one owned by the health authority became part of the Department of Social Security departmental estate under the aegis of the Resettlement Agency which has directed responsibility. Valuation of 12 units has been undertaken by the PSA. The value of those units at 1988 prices was just under £9 million.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the basis of calculation under the income support and housing benefit regulations which produced the result that the claimant who was the subject of commissioner's decision CIS/236/1989 was £2·49 per week worse off as a result of the £2·82 increase in her pension in April 1989; in how many cases similar losses have occurred; and whether he will amend the regulations to restore the total benefit entitlement in such cases retrospectively.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 18 June 1990]: Prior to the uprating in April 1989, the claimant concerned was in receipt of retirement pension in excess of the appropriate income support level. But income support was payable in the form of a transitional addition of £1·49, to protect the value of the claimant's total benefit income at April 1988 on the introduction of income support. This addition entitled the claimant to maximum housing benefit that is rent and rates rebates of 100 per cent. and 80 per cent. respectively. After meeting the net liability for housing costs of £0·70 a week, the claimant's disposable income was £48·23 for each week in which rent was due.

The increase in retirement pension of £2·82 a week in April 1989 more than overtook the need for the transitional addition of £1·49. The claimant was no longer entitled to income support, the transitional addition, or maximum housing benefit. As income was in excess of the appropriate level, the rent and rates rebates were reduced by 65p and 15p respectively for every pound above the level. After meeting liability for housing costs of £4·62 a week, the claimant's disposable income was £45·64 for each week in which rent was due.

It is estimated that some 30,000 people on income support receiving a transitional addition lost entitlement to maximum housing benefit in a similar way in April 1989. But an estimated 95 per cent. of all those floated off maximum housing benefit at the uprating—some 550,000—gained or were no worse off. The transitional additions were intended as a temporary cushion in April 1988. We have no plans to reinstate them in this situation.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery Nurses

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many Nursery Nurses Education Board graduates there have been in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many graduates there have been in B.Tec nursery nursing.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not available centrally.

Teacher Training

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what support his Department is giving to the in-service training of teachers of children with severe learning difficulties and the national curriculum.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department is making grants available through the local education authority training grants scheme to support some £70 million expenditure on training related to the national curriculum in 1990-91. The Department has made it clear, in guidance to local education authorities, that all aspects of training in the basic curriculum should apply to pupils with special educational needs. The scheme is also supporting over £2·2 million expenditure on specialist training in severe learning difficulties, which may also include aspects of national curriculum training.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students have graduated from the initial teacher training course at Westhill college, specialising in training to work with children with severe learning difficulties, in the last five years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Numbers of students graduating from the initial teacher training course at Westhill college, specialising in training to work with children with severe learning difficulties, in the last five years are shown in the table. Related figures for in-service provision in this area are also shown.

Academic Year	4 year BEd	Full-time (1 year) In-service[1]	Part-time (2 year) In-service[2]
1989-90	18	11	0
1988-89	18	17	0
1987-88	22	9	3
1986-87	21	10	4
1985-86	19	13	9

Notes:

[1] The last entry to the four year primary BEd with a major subject option in mental handicap was in September 1987 and the final cohort of students will graduate in 1991.

[2] The college offered a diploma in special education (mental handicap) prior to September 1987 and a B. Phil. Ed. in severe learning difficulties after this date.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has for initial teacher training and the education of children with severe learning difficulties.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Initial training in this field is now provided mainly through long in-service courses, which are eligible for support at the higher rate of grant under the local education authority training grants scheme. We are currently reviewing the way in which this and other areas of training in special educational needs are organised and funded, with a view of establishing whether the effectiveness of the current arrangements could be improved. The outcomes of this review will not be determined until later in the year.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many bachelor of education graduates had specialist training in work with children with special educational needs in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: All initial teacher training courses have been required since 1984 to include training in the recognition of children with special educational needs and strategies for developing all children's potential. Training for specialist teachers of children with special educational needs is now provided through post-experience training.

The following table shows the numbers of students recruited to bachelor of education courses which provided specialist training for teachers of children with special educational needs from 1983 until 1987, the last year in which such courses recruited.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) in respect of each city technology college what amount of annual per capita grant he has agreed to pay for the financial year beginning in September 1991; what unit of cost per pupil has been used in calculating the amount of annual per capital grant; how this unit cost has been determined; and what enhancement of annual per capita grant has been allowed under the terms of paragraph 11 of the model funding agreement;

(2) what amount of earmarked annual grant he has agreed to pay in the financial year beginning in September 1991; and for what purpose each element of earmarked annual grant has been approved.

Mrs. Rumbold: The level of recurrent expenditure for city technology colleges for the academic year beginning September 1991 has not yet been agreed.

Creches

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what sources of external funding are available to support nursery, creche and playcare schemes held at education establishments attended by numbers of women returners and retainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department does not collect information on the extent to which employers or others support the provision of child-care facilities at educational institutions.

REPLAN, funded jointly by the Department and the Welsh Office to promote educational opportunities for the adult unemployed, last year carried out a survey of childcare provision in institutions of higher education. I am placing copies in the Library.

Under the education support grants scheme administered by the Department, expenditure totalling £2 million will be available to local education authorities in each of the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 to support the development of measures to increase the recruitment of former teachers and mature entrants to teaching. These measures may include the provision of creche and other child-care facilities, as well as more flexible working practices. Out of 45 successful bids supported, 17 LEAs will receive funding for child-care initiatives amounting to nearly £150,000.

I am sure that employers will wish to explore every avenue when considering ways to encourage women back into the work-force, including the possibilities of co-operating with educational institutions in the provision of child-care facilities.

Haberdashers' Aske's CTC

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate consultations, similar to those for the proposed city technology colleges at Derby, Telford and Wandsworth, with relevant local education authorities, local schools and other interested parties on the pupil numbers and catchment area proposed for the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college in Deptford.

Mrs. Rumbold: The consultation on "Securing the Future of the Schools" undertaken by the then governing body of the Haberdashers' Aske's Hatcham girls' and boys' schools in July 1988 provided an opportunity for interested parties to consider three options, including that of establishing a city technology college (CTC). A majority of parents of pupils at the schools voted for the option of a CTC opening in September 1991.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what catchment area and pupil numbers are proposed for the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college; and what additional measures will be taken to ensure that admissions to the college focus on pupils drawn from the disadvantaged parts of its catchment area;

(2) if he will consider imposing a condition on the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college that a minimum proportion of its pupils should be drawn from the areas of the Deptford and North Peckham inner city task forces and other disadvantaged parts of its catchment area.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college trust, when established, to submit proposals to my right hon. Friend relating to pupil numbers and catchment area. None has so far been submitted and my right hon. Friend would not wish to anticipate his response.

Anglia Institute

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make an announcement as to whether the Anglia institute is to be granted polytechnic status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The chairman of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (PCFC) wrote to my right hon. Friend on 13 June with the council's advice on the designation of new polytechnics. In his letter he indicated that the council had deferred consideration of the case submitted to it by Anglia higher education college pending accreditation of the college by the CNAA, which is one of the criteria established for designation as a polytechnic. My right hon. Friend will respond to the PCFC advice as soon as possible.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

World Population (United Nations Report)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he received the United Nations report, "The State of the World Population 1990".

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration received an advance copy of the UNFPA report on 10 May and attended the UNFPA's executive director's press conference to launch the report in London on 14 May.

We welcome the report and strongly support the urgent need for reduction in global population growth rates. Population will continue to be a priority issue in Britain's aid programme. Our spending on activities directly related to population concerns has increased from £6·5 million in 1981 to over £17 million in 1989. We are considering ways of increasing this assistance, but much depends on the willingness of recipient Governments to give population concerns a high priority in their own spending and action plans.

TRANSPORT

London Underground (Passenger Safety)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new plans he has to improve the safety of women and other passengers on London Underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: London Underground Ltd is currently implementing a programme of new measures to improve passenger security with the aid of a £15 million Government grant. These measures, include trained staff with radios; help-point booths; passenger talkback alarms; closed-circuit television; safe waiting areas; and mirrors and improved lighting in passageways. They have been introduced at selected stations on the Northern and Central lines and at Oxford Circus station, in order to assess their effectiveness, and are now being installed at stations between Hammersmith and Paddington on the Metropolitan line. London Underground Ltd is also considering additional anti-crime features, such as the use of closed-circuit television in carriages. The new generation of rolling stock, now on order, incorporates a number of security features, including alarms allowing communication with the driver, and greater visibility between carriages.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from relatives of those who died on the MV Derbyshire, following the publication of the wreck commissioner's inquiry into the ship's loss.

Mr. McLoughlin: The report of the court of formal investigation into the loss of MV Derbyshire was published on 15 January 1990. Since that date I have received one written representation from a relative of one of those lost in the Derbyshire tragedy.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has received concerning the sinking of the MV Derbyshire since the conclusion of the inquiry of the commissioner for wrecks.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have received no fresh evidence concerning the sinking of the MV Derbyshire since the court of formal investigation concluded in March 1988.

Roll on/Roll off Ferries

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the specialist sub-committee on stability matters to report to the maritime safety committee of the International Maritime Organisation on the adoption of a higher standard of residual stability for existing roll on/roll off ferries; and whether he intends to take any action to impose higher standards of residual stability on existing roll on/roll off ferries using British ports in the meantime.

Mr. McLoughlin: The specialist sub-committee has been requested to report back to the maritime safety committee in May 1991.

In addition, a number of European Ministers for Maritime Affairs have been invited to send their officials to a meeting in London on the 24 July. The aim of this meeting will be to obtain European agreement on the application and timing of a higher standard of residual stability to existing roll on/roll off passenger ferries.

ENERGY

Energy Saving

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to substantially reduce energy consumption.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government's policy is to promote improvements in energy efficiency through the programmes of the Energy Efficiency Office and by other means.

Nuclear Energy (Joint Ventures)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what role the United Kingdom plays in providing expertise and information in support of the joint venture programme, the international nuclear event scale project, by the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's nuclear energy agency.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom has played a key role in the establishment of the international event scale (INES). This scale was developed under the joint auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency and the OECD's Nuclear Energy Agency by an international committee chaired by a United Kingdom expert from Nuclear Electric. All operators of the United Kingdom's civil nuclear installations have been consulted throughout the development of the scale.

The United Kingdom has agreed to participate in a trial period of application of INES which will begin this autumn and will last for around 12 months. When in full use, INES will provide a means for promptly communicating to the public, in consistent terms, the safety significance of events reported at nuclear power plants. By putting events into proper perspective, the scale can facilitate a common understanding between participating countries, the nuclear industry, the media and the public. It should significantly reduce the risk of misunderstandings and help to pre-empt speculation in the media and elsewhere.

I am arranging for further details of the scale to be placed in the Library of the House.

Redundant Mineworkers Pension Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the inquiries of complaints he has had in each month over the last two years on behalf of redundant miners who are unable to transfer their pension in the redundant mineworkers pension scheme because of the cut-off date; what were the sources of the complaints in each case; and what consideration he is now giving to a review of the position.

Mr. Baldry: Ministers in this Department have received six letters from right hon. and hon. Members and six letters from mineworkers and ex-mineworkers on this subject. The transfer of accrued pension entitlement prior to 1 January 1986 is a matter for the trustees of the pension schemes concerned.

Nuclear Safeguards

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he received a copy of the 1989 safeguards implementation report of the International Atomic Energy Agency; and if he will make a statement on its implications for his Department's current policies.

Mr. Baldry: My officials received a copy of the IAEA's safeguards implementation report in May. The agency concluded that the nuclear material under its safeguards in 1989 remained in peaceful nuclear activities. There are no new implications for the policies of my Department arising from the report. A summary of the report will be contained in the agency's 1989 annual report, which will be placed in the Library of the House when it becomes available.

International Atomic Energy Agency

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he intends to table at the 34th regular session of the International Atomic Energy Agency general conference to be held in Vienna on 17 to 21 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom delegation will play a full and active role in the International Atomic Energy Agency's 34th general conference. However, in the light of the provisional agenda, I do not expect any new initiatives to be launched.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce his decision on flotation of the generating boards by (a) placing (b) tender or (c) general sale to the public.

Mr. Baldry: Decisions have yet to be taken on the precise structure of the sale of National Power and PowerGen. I announced on 28 February that the sale would take place in February 1991 subject to market conditions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce what proportion of the shares of the electricity (a) distribution and (b) generating companies will be sold to (i) United Kingdom, (ii) other European community and (iii) foreign investors and institutions.

Mr. Baldry: Decisions have yet to be taken on the precise structure of the sale of the 12 regional electricity companies, National Power and PowerGen. These will be determined by a number of factors, notably market conditions, nearer the time of the sales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has made of the savings in public expenditure resulting from placing of the shares in the electricity supply industry companies.

Mr. Baldry: The cost to the taxpayer of privatising the electricity supply industry is being kept to the minimum commensurate with maximising the proceeds from the sales and achieving a successful privatisation. No final decisions have yet been made on the structure of the offers.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the total cost of the advertising budget to publicise the privatisation of (a) the electricity distribution companies and (b) the generating companies, in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 1 May and 6 June 1990.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the name of the advertising agency that has been commissioned to publicise the privatisation of the electricity generating companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A number of advertising agencies have been invited to apply for the job of providing the pre-flotation advertising campaign for the privatisation of the generating companies. An announcement will be made when the decision on the appointment has been made.

DEFENCE

Lavington Research Establishment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to investigate allegations that secrets related to the latest generation of weapons were missing from the research establishment at Lavington, Wiltshire; if he will indicate the nature of the weapons involved; what progress has been made in the investigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: I am aware of a recent newspaper article which contained such an allegation. However, while I can confirm that an Army warrant officer serving at West Lavington was arrested last September and charged with the theft of official documents; these concerned equipment which has been in service for many years. Ministry of Defence police investigations of this matter have now been concluded.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research contracts his Department has with the research establishment at Lavington, Wiltshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: None. The proof and experimental establishment at Lavington is part of the Ministry of Defence.

Service Personnel (Security)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the cost of providing an allowance to armed forces personnel towards the cost of installation of bullet-proof glass in their personal cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All proposals, including the installation of bullet-proof glass, are considered in relation to the threat and their cost-effectiveness. It is not our policy to divulge the details of our security precautions.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice is offered to armed forces personnel on personal security when off duty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have a comprehensive security education programme aimed at reducing the security risk to all service personnel and Ministry of Defence-employed civilians. The intention is to provide sensible and practical advice in a number of different formats (for example, videos and lectures). The type of advice provided includes the need to avoid clothing or luggage which could identify an individual as a member of the services; the importance of checking vehicles for bombs and booby traps and the need to be aware of the danger of any unnecessary gathering in a group in a public place. The central message of the programme is that personal awareness is the key to security.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has assessed the potential security risk of the Royal British Legion selling mailing lists of ex-service men and women.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has no responsibility for the Royal British Legion. However, the Royal British Legion has sought and accepted the Department's advice on the security arrangements for its mailing lists.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of United States Navy Tomahawk nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles in employment plans for NATO theatre nuclear forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The details of NATO's operational plans are classified.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if his Department is participating in NATO action to examine how to integrate the use of United States Navy Tomahawk nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles into NATO theatre nuclear force targeting, command, control and employment plans; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department is participating in the development of a military concept of operations for the use of United States Navy Tomahawk nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles in support of NATO military operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, the examination of the potential contribution of sea-launched cruise missiles to European security is principally a matter for NATO and United States authorities.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning progress by NATO in developing concepts of military operations for the employment of United States Navy Tomahawk nuclear sea-launch cruise missiles in conjunction with dual, nuclear/conventional weapon, capable aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1984, the United States has deployed nuclear-armed sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCMs) on United States naval vessels as an integral part of its worldwide deterrent forces. In 1988 NATO Defence Ministers instigated, as part of a larger force restructuring programme, an examination of the potential contribution of SLCMs to European security.

With this remit, United States and NATO military authorities are continuing to develop the necessary arrangements that would permit the United States to make SLCMs available to NATO in wartime.

RAF Shackletons

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will deposit in the Library the reports or summaries of the reports of the completed boards of inquiry into the crash of RAF Shackletons since the end of 1967.

Mr. Neubert: The decision that military aircraft accident summaries would be published following service boards of inquiry into major military aircraft accidents was announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chertsey and Walton (Sir G. Pattie) on 15 January 1980 at column 686. There are no such summaries for accidents occurring before that date and, as my right hon. Friend made clear, the proceedings of service boards of inquiry are, and must remain, privileged.

There have been three major aircraft accidents involving RAF Shackleton aircraft since the end of 1967, two before 1980 (on 1 and 19 April 1968 respectively) and one on 30 April this year. A military aircraft accident summary in respect of this last accident will be published and a copy placed in the Libraries of both Houses as soon as it is available.

Armaments Depot, Beith

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian and military personnel have been employed at the royal naval armaments depot, Beith, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Neubert: No military personnel are employed at the royal naval armaments depot, Beith. The figures for civilian personnel employed over the past 10 years are shown in the table:

	Personnel
1981	537
1982	523
1983	506
1984	523
1985	496
1986	511
1987	444
1988	469
1989	499
1990	563

Information prior to 1981 is not available.

Deal Explosion

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now proposes to make available the conclusions of the inquiry into the explosion at Deal on 22 September 1989; and what is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Neubert: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Stoney Castle Ranges

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department first initiated action to establish the status of access across Ministry of Defence land at Stoney Castle ranges, Pirbright, for the illegal tipping of waste.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department first initiated action to establish the status of the access across Ministry of Defence land at Stoney Castle ranges, Pirbright, on 6 March 1987.

Defence Exports

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of total visible exports was accounted for by defence exports for each year since 1985.

Mr. Alan Clark: Taking account of some defence goods which are not readily identifiable as such in the Customs tariff, it is estimated that United Kingdom exports of defence equipment have fluctuated around an average of 3 to 4 per cent. of total visible exports during the period from 1985. Because of changes in the coverage of the statistics, it is not possible to give a consistent annual series of figures over the period.

Mooring Buoys, Loch Linnhe

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the mooring buoys located in Loch Linnhe, off Onich; who paid for their installation; who pays for their upkeep; and what use has been made of them in the past 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply as these moorings are the responsibility of the Department of Transport. They form one of a number of sets of moorings maintained by the Department for emergency use. The cost of installation and maintenance is met by the Department. These moorings have not been required for emergency use over the past 10 years but have occasionally been hired out for short-term use by private barge operators.

EMPLOYMENT

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the total expenditure on the action for jobs campaign in 1988-89 was spent on outdoor advertising.

Mr. Eggar: A total of £63,000 was spent on outdoor advertising on the action for jobs campaign in 1988-89.

Employment Training

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of parents unable to accept employment training because of inability to pay for nursery, creche or play care for their children while undertaking employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what help he provides for parents taking employment training to place their children in nursery, creche or play care schemes or assistance in meeting the costs of placing their children in private schemes.

Mr. Nicholls: Lone parents participating in assessment or training in ET are entitled to receive the costs of caring for children under 16. They can train on a part-time basis if full-time child care facilities are not available. Training providers are encouraged to help parents generally, for example by offering creche facilities, flexible hours of training and distance learning materials.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to reply to the letter dated 14 May from the hon. Member for South Hams concerning Mr. Paul Hill of Furzehill, Moult road, Salcombe, Devon, and Mrs. Jean Rolfe of South Africa.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 19 June.

Birmingham Prison

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the extent of the shortages of shirts, pants, socks, shoes and towels discovered at Birmingham prison during the special stocktaking in March.

Mr. Mellor: The shortages were as follows:

Item	Scale holding for population of 960[1]	Actual holding	Shortfall March 1990
Shirts	9,600	6,474	3,126
Pants	6,720	1,858	4,862
Socks	9,600	1,910	7,690
Shoes	1,680	1,008	672
Towels	5,760	2,777	2,983

[1] The scales provide for articles actually in inmates' possession, in the laundry and in store awaiting laundering or issue.

Following the stocktaking substantial additional supplies were issued to the prison, and new control procedures were introduced to ensure that the issue and re-issue of clothing to prisoners is carefully monitored in future.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his investigations into the evidence supplied to him by Advocates for Animals regarding experiments carried out by Professor Feldberg and John Stean.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government have considered the recommendations in the report on the National Institute for Medical Research by Advocates for Animals, a copy of which has been sent to him; and whether there are any plans to implement their proposals.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The matters raised in this document are being studied and a report has been made to the Animal Procedures Committee. The Medical Research Council has set up an inquiry, which is expected to report in December.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many scientists licensed to carry out animal experiments under the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 are aged (a) 65 to 70, (b) 70 to 75, (c) 75 to 80, (d) 80 to 85 and (e) 85 to 90 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows: (a) 65 to 69, 69 (b) 70 to 74, 24 (c) 75 to 79, 15 (d) 80 to 85, four. There are no licences over 85.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inspectors of the animals (scientific procedures) inspectorate are currently in post; how many inspections they carried out in the past 12 months; and how many laboratories are registered for animal experimentation by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is published annually in the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals" (1988, Cm 743). Information for 1989 will be published in July. A total of 375 places are designated as scientific procedure establishments under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Policing, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a borough-by-borough breakdown of the Metropolitan police precept and the standard policing costs in each of the same boroughs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The precept for Metropolitan police purposes is £112·79 per head of relevant population on the community charge registers maintained by each charging authority within the Metropolitan police district. Information on policing costs in each of the boroughs is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mirza Sabir Hussain

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a decision is to be taken on the application for British citizenship made by Mr. Mirza Sabir Hussain (Ref: IMP H257707/5); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Hussain's application was approved on 11 May. A letter about the remaining formalities was sent to him on 16 May but to an address from which it was subsequently realised he had moved. A further letter to his new address was sent on 21 June.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list any circulars and advice documents he has circulated on the subject of cautioning juvenile offenders during the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office circular 14/1985 is the only one about cautioning which has been issued in this period. It is soon to be superseded by new guidance.

Independent Television

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he plans to meet the chairman of the IBA to discuss movements in the ownership of equity in companies which hold current independent television franchises.

Mr. Mellor: We have frequent meetings with the chairman of the IBA, at which a wide range of broadcasting policy questions are discussed. But it is for the IBA, and not Government, to operate the ownership provisions in section 20 of the Broadcasting Act 1981.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give for (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) the latest available year (i) the number of crimes reported in each police force area in England and Wales, (ii) the number reported as cleared up, (iii) the number which were reported as cleared up as a result of other offences taken into consideration, (iv) the percentage cleared up in each of the three years and (v) the percentage which was reported as cleared up as a result of offences taken into consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The information requested on the total number of crimes recorded and cleared up is published annually in tables 2.4, 2.18 and 2.19 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest information on crimes cleared up by being taken into consideration is for 1989 and is given in the table:

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the average number of crimes directly apprehended by each police officer in each police force in England and Wales in (a) 1974, (b) 1979 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 11 June 1990]: The available information on crimes cleared up by the primary means of charge, summons and caution is given in the table. The equivalent information is not available for 1974 and 1979.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department has made since March 1989 on reducing re-offending by child sex abusers and identifying predicting factors.

Mr. John Patten: [holding answer 18 June 1990]: A number of initiatives have been put in hand since March 1989.

A working group has been established to review existing arrangements for the treatment of sex offenders in prison service establishments and consider ways in which they can be developed and better co-ordinated, with the object of reducing the likelihood of re-offending upon release. The aim of the group is to co-ordinate and develop better arrangements for the care and treatment of sex offenders in custody to reduce the likelihood of re-offending after release.

Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation is currently undertaking an inspection of the probation service's treatment of sex offenders. Its report should be available later this year. This will give a much clearer idea of the range of existing programmes and will contribute to decisions on how best to develop the supervision and treatment of sex offenders in the community.

The proposals in the White Paper "Crime, Justice and Protecting the Public" (Cm. 965) for the supervision by the probation service of offenders following their release from custody are aimed at reducing re-offending. The probation service has a key role to play in making offenders, including sex offenders, face up to what they have done; this is often the first step in preventing further offences.

The Home Office contributes to the work of the inter departmental group on child abuse and a sub-group on working with offenders has recently been established so that the various Departments can develop a framework for a strategic central approach.

On the question of predicting factors, the Institute of Psychiatry has been carrying out a study of sex offenders in prisons. The purpose of the study is to try to identify factors in sex offenders' histories which appear to distinguish them from other types of offender and non-offender populations and which may help in making decisions about which types of sexual offender are likely to benefit from treatment and which may not. The institute is also carrying out a study of convicted rapists. The purpose of the study is to describe the offenders and their offences in detail and to assess their treatment needs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iraq

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the £100 million arrears of Iraqi debt is underwritten by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Redwood: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to publish the details of ECGD's exposure on individual markets for reasons of commercial confidentiality, but it is no secret that there are some payments overdue as far as Iraq is concerned.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Internal Market Council on Wednesday 20 June.

Mr. Redwood: I attended the Internal Market Council in Luxembourg on 20 June. A series of decisions was reached in the insurance sector. Ministers agreed a common position on the life insurance services directive which confirmed the political agreement of last December. This will allow the measure to go before the European Parliament again under the co-operation procedure. A common position was reached on the motor insurance services directive, enabling insurers to sell motor insurance across borders to consumers in other member states, though subject to a number of restrictions. A progress report was also made on the insurance accounts directive, the entry into force of which will partially determine the full application of the motor services directive. Agreement in principle, subject to the opinion of the European Parliament, was reached on a measure permitting the Commission to grant a block exemption from article 85 of the treaty of Rome (prohibition of restricted agreements) for certain kinds of insurance agreement.

Common positions were reached on two company law directives. The first relates to small and medium-sized enterprises, and the second will improve transparency in disclosures made by certain types of partnership, especially GMBH and Co KG in Germany. It will not affect ordinary United Kingdom partnerships.

A common position was reached on a regulation on Community transit which will ease the movement of Community goods across internal frontiers post-1992. A further 11 measures in the area of customs procedures and industrial standards were adopted without discussion.

Progress reports were made on trans-European networks, biotechnological inventions and recognition of vocational training and education, and further work was discussed in the area of food irradiation. Further consideration on the use of certain dangerous substances was postponed until the next Internal Market Council.

Three measures concerning rights of residence for economically inactive persons were agreed subject to the view of the Danish Folketing.

Holiday Accommodation (Safety)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to ensure that United Kingdom tour operators carry out proper safety checks on holiday accommodation offered to United Kingdom citizens.

Mr. Forth: In the event of injury, United Kingdom citizens might be able, in the absence of adequate safety checks by tour operators in certain circumstances, to sue the tour operator in contract or in tort. In addition the recently strengthened ABTA code of practice and the EC package travel directive adopted on 13 June will extend the liabilities of those who organise package holidays. I understand that the United Kingdom travel industry is currently examining ways of ensuring adequate standards of holiday accommodation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Funerals

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what guidance he gives to local offices on the cost criteria to be applied to funerals conducted at crematoria as against church funerals and as to what weight to give to these relative costs when asked to provide assistance with meeting these costs;

(2) what guidance his Department gives to local offices about the financing of church funerals when the deceased dies in a state of destitution.

Mr. Scott: None. Social fund funeral payments are made under regulations. Decisions on claims are taken by independant adjudication officers. The chief adjudication officer provides guidance to them in the adjudication officers' guide, a copy of which is in the Library.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list any circulars and advice documents he has circulated on the subject of cautioning juvenile offenders during the last five years.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Within the last five years, as a result of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, all staff employed on fraud investigation duties have been issued with a copy of the code of practice for the treatment and questioning of persons. Additional instructions on dealing with young people are contained in the Department's fraud investigator's guide.

Social Fund

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the total number of (i) community care grants and (ii) loans from the social fund made in 1988-89 and 1989-90 broken down into pensioners, couples with children, lone parents, sick and disabled people and others.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 June 1990]: The information available is set out in the table:

	1988-89 Number of awards		1989-90 Number of awards
	Loans	Grants	Loans	Grants
Pensioners	28,320	33,920	30,350	59,130
Lone parents (without disability premium)	278,390	36,600	380,160	58,390
Others with family premium[1]	140,280	18,240	171,690	25,100

Total	881,460	152,420	1,030,650	229,950

Note: Figures are rounded to nearest 10.
[1] Includes couples with children. It is not possible to identify separately this group.
[2] Applicants receiving a disability premium. It is not possible to identify applicants who are sick but not receiving a disability premium.
[3] Includes crisis loan payments to couples with children not in receipt of income support.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the proportion of pensioners, couples with children, lone parents, sick and disabled people and others on income support who received (i) community care grants and (ii) loans from the social fund in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 June 1990]: Information is not available on the number of individuals receiving an award in each client group. The available information set out in the table relates to the total number of awards made to the relevant client groups:

Number of awards expressed as a percentage of income support caseload for the relevant client group

	1988-89		1989-90
	Loans Per cent.	Grants Per cent.	Loans Per cent.	Grants Per cent.
Pensioners	1·7	2·1	1·8	3·6
Lone parents (without disability premium)	37·3	4·9	50·9	7·8
Others with family premium[1]	27·4	3·6	34·4	5·0
Disabled[2]	22·8	8·0	14·6	12·4
Others[3]	28·2	3·4	29·1	3·8

[1] Includes couples with children. It is not possible to identify separately this group.
[2] Applicants receiving a disability premium. It is not possible to identify applicants who are sick but not receiving a disability premium.
[3] Includes crisis loan payments to couples with children not in receipt of income support.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Bailiffs

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General how many bailiffs were employed in 1987, 1988 and 1989 and during the current year to date to enforce county court judgments.

The Attorney-General: All bailiffs as part of their duties enforce county court judgments. In 1987, 1988 and 1989 the number of bailiffs employed in the county courts was, respectively, 898, 930 and 921. For the current year the number of bailiffs employed is, at 20 June, 910.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General what educational requirements are required from persons wishing to be employed as county court bailiffs; and what form of training they are given.

The Attorney-General: There are no educational qualifications required to be employed as a bailiff. Bailiffs are trained by their line managers at the court or group of courts where they are employed. This training is supplemented by a five day departmental procedural and job skills training course.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General if he will publish in the Official Report the criteria needed to pass the Certificated Bailiffs Association examination.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department is not responsible for the criteria needed to pass the Certificated Bailiffs Association examination. Under the Distress for Rent Rules 1988 those seeking certification must apply to a county court and are required to supply two references, one of which may be from the applicant's employer or an approved officer of the Certificated Bailiffs Association of England and Wales, together with a certificated copy of the result of a serach of the register of county court judgments and confirmation that he is able to provide a security totalling £10,000.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General how many county court bailiffs there are in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: The number of county court bailiffs employed in England and Wales is 839 and 71 respectively. There are no county court bailiffs in Northern Ireland. There is, however, an analogous post of enforcement officer and there are 16 officers in post at present.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General how many bailiffs operating under section 7 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act 1888, certificated by a county court judge, are operating in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: There are currently 889 certificated bailiffs operating in England and 40 in Wales. There is no certificated bailiff system in Northern Ireland. The number of certificated bailiffs on the register maintained by the Lord Chancellor's Department does, however, frequently change as fresh applications for general certificates are granted by the county courts.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Attorney-General how many certificated bailiffs there are operating within the county courts in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: There are no certificated bailiffs operating within the county courts in England, Wales or Northern Ireland. All bailiffs operating within the county courts in England and Wales are employees of the Lord Chancellor's Department.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what assessment he has made of the extent to which the objectives of the agency system are being fulfilled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The central aim of the "next steps" initiative is to improve management in the civil service, and so bring about lasting improvements in the quality and efficiency of Government services. Each agency is set clear targets covering both efficiency and quality of service, and the results so far show that these targets are being met. As I told the House on 2 April, we propose to publish annually, starting later this year, a general report on the initiative overall including summaries of developments and results in individual agencies.

Staff Secondments

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what interchange of staff there has been in the last 12 months between Government Departments and the business sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: As I announced on 23 May, Official Report, column 190-91, we have had considerable success in increasing the interchange of staff between Government Departments and the business sector. In 1989, the latest period for which figures are available, there were 627 secondments lasting more than three months between the civil service and industrial or commercial organisations. This is 24 per cent. higher than in the previous year. There were also some 550 shorter-term secondments and increases in the attachments arranged under the Whitehall and industry and non-executive directorship schemes.

Details of these activities are included in my Department's report "Interchange of Staff between the Civil Service and Other Organisations—1989" which has been placed in the Library. This interchange is an essential ingredient in the fostering of greater understanding between Government and business. We hope to build further on the success of these arrangements in future years.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tobacco

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the proportion of the retail price of an average packet of cigarettes which is taken by public sector taxation in each of the European Economic Community member states and (b) the total revenue, in £ sterling at the latest convenient exchange rates, which each European Economic Community member state obtains from taxation on tobacco products.

Mr. Ryder:

VAT

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received since 1979 calling for the abolition of value added tax on tampons and sanitary towels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have received a number of such representations since 1979. There are no plans to zero rate sanitary products or other essential items of personal hygiene.

Gilts

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many gilts have been issued by the Treasury in the current financial year.

Mr. Ryder: The Government have issued no new stock so far this year.

Iraq

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what checks are used to ensure that consignments sent to Iraq described as milk powder are not explosives for military use; and what assessment he has made of the efficacy of these checks in recent shipments.

Mr. Ryder: Milk powder exported to Iraq is presently liable to monetary compensatory amounts (MCAs) which are export charges under the common agricultural policy (CAP) of the European Community. It may also be eligible for CAP export refunds. Customs and Excise regularly spot-checks and samples a proportion of such consignments as part of its normal responsibilities for the controls of CAP exports. Given the high level of CAP export refunds involved, Customs has in recent times given greater prominence to milk products in its sampling campaigns. This involves checks and sampling at premises where loading for export takes place. Customs also conducts spot checks on export freight generally for a variety of preventive purposes.

None of these checks has revealed the presence of explosives of any kind.

WALES

Suckler Cow Premium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he intends to implement to increase the level of the suckler cow premium following the recent meeting of European Community Agriculture Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My agriculture colleagues and I are considering the suckler cow premium rate for 1990-91 and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Higher Education

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of students currently studying at each public sector higher education college in Wales; and how many of the students are normally resident in Wales, both in terms of total numbers and as a percentage of the main student body.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information for the academic year 1988-89 is as follows:

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list any circulars and advice documents he has circulated on the subject of cautioning juvenile offenders in Wales during the last five years.

Mr. David Hunt: "Handling Juvenile Crime in Wales" published in November 1986 and "Juvenile Crime in Wales" published in October 1989 both contain relevant information.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to implement the Children Act 1989 in Wales in whole or in phases.

Mr. Grist: Some minor provisions of the Children Act 1989 are already in force. We expect to implement all the remaining provisions in October 1991.

ENVIRONMENT

Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money was spent on research by his Department in 1988-89; and how much was allocated for expenditure in 1989-90.

Mr. Chris Patten: Full details of my Department's expenditure on research in 1988-89 and the financial provision for research in 1989-90 are given in the 1989 Cabinet Office review of Government funded research and development, copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Environmental Audit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to conduct an environmental audit of all civil service departments.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's environmental policies, including the implications for Government Departments, will be set out in the Environment White Paper, to be published in the autumn.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will call in a planning application over proposals by Leigh Environmental to build incinerators in Nash road, Trafford Park, Manchester, for the burning of chemical waste.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will institute a public inquiry over plans to build two incinerators to process polychlorinated biphenyl chemicals in Nash road, Trafford Park, Manchester, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have no present plans to do so. The planning application is still being examined by the local planning authority, Trafford Park urban development corporation.

Departmental Research (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total identifiable expenditure on research by his Department in each year since 1979; what proportion was awarded on a customer-contractor basis; and what proportion of his total departmental budget was expended on research for each year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Expenditure by my Department on research since 1979 is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	33·4
1980-81	39·0
1981-82	35·8
1982-83	32·2
1983-84	31·5
1984-85	34·9
1985-86	41·4
1986-87	54·0
1987-88	56·1
1988-89	56·6

The proportion of this research commissioned on a customer-contractor basis was in excess of 97 per cent. for each of the above years. The proportion of my Department's total budget spent on research is as follows:

	Per cent.
1984-85	0·75
1985-86	0·98
1986-87	1·37
1987-88	1·48
1988-89	1·63

Homelessness

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for dealing with the problem of people sleeping rough in London.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are seriously concerned about people sleeping rough on the streets of London and other cities. The problem of rough sleeping in small but concentrated numbers is one that has begun to affect major cities throughout the western world. It has developed for complex reasons, involving in particular the break-up of families and other social ties.

This is placing substantial new pressures on hostel accommodation, especially in London, despite the Government's hostels initiative which has created nearly 25,000 hostel spaces throughout the country since 1981 and the availability in London of 23,000 hostel spaces. Most hostel dwellers in the past have moved on to ordinary accommodation in the private sector, and will continue to do so. We are already encouraging householders to offer lodgings and we have put a number of new policies in place to help revitalise the private rented sector. We are considering what further initiatives to take in this field.

In addition, I am announcing today that we are bringing forward a special programme of resources to provide additional subsidised accommodation for single homeless people. This will take the form of direct access accommodation for people on the streets, and of "move-on" accommodation to provide longer-term housing for people in hostels.

We will allocate £15 million for these new initiatives in the present financial year; the provision of resources for future years will be discussed in the public expenditure survey process in the next few months. Effective use of these new resources requires close co-operation between a number of Government Departments and other agencies. Police officers working on the streets will point those sleeping rough towards the new accommodation being made available.

The success of the strategy also depends very much on the co-operation of the voluntary bodies active in dealing with single homeless people and on co-operation with housing associations and the local authorities. We have had informal preliminary discussions with the voluntary groups and we will now talk to them and to the London boroughs urgently about the provision of both direct access and "move-on" accommodation. It is essential that we should ensure that any additional accommodation provided is well directed and meets acceptable standards, but that we do not create a magnet to attract more people into sleeping rough.

We also intend to discuss with the voluntary groups concerned the possibility of establishing a special fund to enable people living in hostels to get over the first hurdle of finding a deposit to gain access to rented accommodation. I hope that we will be able to secure the co-operation of voluntary groups in providing more counselling for people who have been sleeping on the streets. I hope, too, that it will be possible to enlist the support of the private sector in providing advice and support to help single homeless people to obtain jobs, making full use of the range of employment services and training provision which can be made available.

Those resources are additional to the allocation of £250 million that we have provided for local authorities and housing associations to house homeless families this year and next and to this year's programme of £2 million for voluntary bodies which provide advice and practical help to homeless and potentially homeless people. These special programmes in turn supplement £3 billion a year support for local authority housing revenue accounts and a programme of expenditure on housing associations which is rising over the next two years to almost £1·7 billion a year.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health is announcing a separate initiative today. It is designed to address the particular needs of young people who are sleeping rough or might be tempted to do so. He will also announce soon an initiative to help homeless mentally ill people.

The Government are determined that there should be no excuse for sleeping out on the streets. Emergency accommodation will be made available. Sleeping rough is unacceptable. It is unhealthy and often dangerous. We must see an end to the concentrations of people sleeping out in city centres.

Drinking Water Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many professional staff are currently employed by the drinking water inspectorate.

Mr. Trippier: The complement of the drinking water inspectorate is 23 posts, of which 16 will be held by professional staff. Currently, eight professional staff are employed in the inspectorate, including two on secondment from the Water Research Centre. Recruitment of other professional staff is in progress.

Migrating Birds (Italy)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what efforts he is making to strengthen EEC regulations on the slaughter of migrating birds in Italy.

Mr. Trippier: Member states are already required to protect migratory birds by EC directive 79/409 EEC on the conservation of wild birds. It is the responsibility of the EC Commission to ensure that effective measures have been taken to comply with the terms of the directive.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority the voluntary organisations in receipt of funds from his Department; and if he will make a statement concerning his policy towards the funding of such groups.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer of 5 June to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley)—Official Report, column 481—in which I provided a complete list of organisations and persons in receipt of direct grants from my Department in 1989-90 and the size of each grant. Many of those organisations are national rather than local. For local organisations information broken down by local authority area is not readily available.

My policy towards the funding of voluntary groups follows the line set out by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, on 4 April 1990, Official Report, column 639, when he announced publication of the report of the efficiency scrutiny of Government funding of the voluntary sector.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implication for research relating to the development of policies on the environment of the reduction of the Aculeate Hymonoptera section of the natural history museum.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 19 June 1990]: None. My Department is not responsible for the development of policies on stinging insects.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Armenia

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by what means he travelled to and from Armenia during his recent visit to the Soviet Union.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I flew privately with Sir Jeffrey Sterling, one of the sponsors of the Lord Byron school.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give the expenditure during 1988-89 on solid fuels and liquid fuels of the buildings occupied by the Privy Council Office and the consumption of solid fuels in tonnes and of liquid fuels in litres.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Privy Council incurred no expenditure during 1988-89 on solid fuels and liquid fuels.

SCOTLAND

Railways

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the grants paid and the projects or rolling stock grant-aided by him to British Rail since 1968, at outturn prices.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There was none.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Brian Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is taken against livestock producers who send cattle suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy for slaughter without declaration of the disease.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy is a progressive disease of cattle which was made notifiable under the Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (No. 2) Order 1988 and failure to notify the divisional veterinary officer is an offence against the Animal Health Act 1981. However, there is at present no blood or other tissue test available for detecting the disease in the live animal; a presumption that the disease may be present can therefore only be made on the basis of clinical symptoms as observed. Confirmation can be made only after slaughter on the basis of analysis of brain tissue.

Stress appears to cause exacerbation of clinical symptoms in some animals, particularly, for example, if transported. In some cases, therefore, it is possible that little or no evidence of the disease may be apparent on the farm and the disease may not be recognised until after transportation and arrival at the abattoir.

The question of whether a prosecution should be undertaken in such cases must be decided in the light of the individual circumstances relating to the case.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases bovine spongiform encephalopathy has been identified (a) on farms and (b) in abattoirs in Scotland, in each of the past six months.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy identified on farms in Scotland between 8 December 1989 and 8 June 1990 is 230.

The requirement separately to record cases found in abattoirs was introduced on 1 February 1990 and since that time four cases have been reported.

Transport Grant

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of all section 56 grants paid to Strathclyde regional council, or Greater Glasgow passenger transport authority or executive since its creation at out-turn prices, including the nature of the infrastructure works or the numbers of electric units grant-aided on each occasion.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested on section 56 grants is set out in the table:

Project details	Section 56 grant (out-turn prices) £ million	Period
Modernisation of Glasgow underground including signalling and 33 new sets of Electrical Multiple Units (EMUs)	32·0	1974-75 to 1980-81
Clyderail—re-opening, electrification, signalling and 16 new sets of EMUs	27·2	1974-75 to 1987-88
EMU Life Extension—modernatisation of 50 EMU sets	14·2	1983-84 to 1987-88
Ayrshire Electrification—modification/modernisation of 11 EMUs and purchase of 9 new EMU sets	10·3	1985-86 to 1986-87
Ardrossan/Largs Electrification—purchase of 1 new EMU set	0·7	1987-88
New Rolling Stock—purchase of 22 new sets of EMUs and 14 new sets of Diesel Multiple Units (DMUs)	[1]18·8	1988-89 to 1989-90

[1] A further £10·5 million is still to be paid.

Geriatric Day Hospitals

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of geriatric day hospitals in Scotland, their location and the numbers of patients seen annually by each.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There were 68 day hospitals—that is, day care facilities—with geriatric day patients attending in the year ending 31 March 1990. These hospitals are listed in the table together with the numbers of new patients attending. Information on the number of patients seen annually is not available centrally.

Schools, Angus

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was spent on running costs for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Angus.

Mr. Lang: The information on expenditure provided to my Department by education authorities is not broken down to district level.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been spent on funding school boards in Angus's primary and secondary schools; and on what basis the allocation of funds was made.

Mr. Lang: Information for the first year of the school board system will be contained in local financial returns for 1989-90 which we expect from authorities in the autumn. The returns do not break down information to district level.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the poll tax of each official residence of Cabinet Ministers; and who is the responsible person.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only ministerial residence in Scotland is Bute house in Edinburgh. Lothian region's community charge registration officer has determined that, with the exception of the caretaker's flat in the basement, the property is non-domestic in nature and is therefore subject to non-domestic rates. There is therefore no responsible person except in respect of the caretaker's flat.

Sheriff Officers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheriff officers there are in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of commissions issued by sheriffs principal authorising individuals to act as sheriff officers was 191 on 1 January 1990, the latest date for which figures are available centrally.

Aquagard

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the findings of research carried out by scientists of his Department on the effects of Aquagard sea lice treatment.

Mr. Lang: Scientists of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's marine laboratory have carried out the following studies on the use and the effects of dichlorvos (the active ingredient of Aquagard).

1. Toxicity of dichlorvos to larvae of the common lobster (Homarus gammarus L.) and herring (Clupea harengus L.).
2. Comparative toxicity of dichlorvos to marine invertebrates.
3. Toxicity of dichlorvos to stage 4 Homarus gammarus larvae.
4. Effects of repeated short exposures to dichlorvos on lobster larvae.
5. Effects of dichlorvos treatment at fish farms upon lobster larvae and mussels maintained in cages.
6. Survey of invertebrate communities in the vicinity of salmon farm cages in Scottish west coast sea lochs.
7. Toxicity of insecticides to larvae of the common lobster (Homarus gammarus L.).
8. Fate of dichlorvos (DDVP) in sea water following treatment for salmon louse Lepeophtheirus salmonis infestation in Scottish fish farms.

I have arranged for copies of reports on these studies to be placed in the Library and they will also be made available as Scottish fisheries working papers.

Toxic Waste (Scottish Ports)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish ports that received toxic waste in 1987, 1988 and 1989 respectively; and what was the quantity of such waste imported, the composition of the waste and the country of origin and ultimate destination of the waste.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 June 1990]: There is no requirement under the legislation on waste disposal for specific ports to be registered for imports. Returns made by Scottish local authorities indicate that the total amounts of waste imported into Scotland in 1987 and 1988 were as follows:

Country of origin	Amount (tonnes)	Destination (District Council)	Nature of waste
1987
Holland	15	Strathkelvin	Sub-soil
1988
Sweden	2	Inverness	Sodium metal
Eire	451	Edinburgh	Solvent and contaminated methylated spirits (for recycling)

Information is not yet available for 1989.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he hopes to reply to the letter dated 24 May from the hon. Member for South Hams concerning South Devon Shellfisherman Ltd. and gear losses; and if he will meet the hon. Secretary of South Devon Shellfisherman Ltd. with the hon. Member for South Hams.

Mr. Curry: I shall be writing to my hon. Friend the Member for South Hams shortly.

Quota Hopping

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on measures to deal with quota hopping.

Mr. Curry: The Government are firmly committed to the view that quotas allocated to this country under the 1983 agreement on the common fisheries policy should be for the benefit of British fishing communities. The measures that we have taken to deal with the problem of quota hopping uphold the common fisheries policy and its essential components—national quotas and relative stability.

The action that we have taken to seek to ensure that the quota system operates for the benefit of the genuine United Kingdom fishing fleet has been on two fronts. First, we have imposed operating conditions to ensure that fishing vessels entitled to fly the United Kingdom flag have a real economic link with this country, through licence conditions imposed under powers contained in the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967. Secondly, we have gone to the heart of the problem by enacting the provisions of part II of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988, as amended, where we require British-registered fishing vessels to be mainly owned, managed and controlled by people resident in Britain.

These provisions have been attacked in our courts by representatives of Spanish interests and questions have been referred to the European Court of Justice. The Commission has also taken proceedings, and is considering further proceedings, in the European Court of Justice.

We have defended, and will continue to defend, these cases before the Court of Justice. The recent judgments of the court in the Agegate and Jaderow cases, although critical of some aspects of our licence conditions concerned with the nationality and residence of crews, upheld our right to require fishing vessels to operate in a way which would ensure that vessels fishing against our national quotas should have a real economic link with this country. We will continue to enforce these conditions vigorously.

The substantive question whether the fishing vessel registration requirements of the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 are compatible with Community law has still to be considered by the European Court of Justice. The recent judgment of the court in case 213/89 Factortame means that our national courts now have jurisdiction to grant interim protection of Community rights in appropriate cases, pending a final decision of the European Court. But it will be for our domestic courts to decide, on a case-by-case basis, whether interim protection should be given to individual quota hoppers and, if so, what conditions or limitations should be imposed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport will continue to contest vigorously the grant of interim relief in the circumstances of this case.

PRIME MINISTER

Armenian School Infrastructure

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Swansea, West, Official Report, column 405, 18 June, how much of the funding for the Armenian school infrastructure comes from Government sources.

The Prime Minister: The total cost to public funds of the British school at Leninakan will be about £4·6 million.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give the 1989-90 consumption of solid fuel by the Cabinet Office in tonnes and in expenditure.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office consumed no solid fuel in 1989-90.

Official Visit (USSR)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of her official visit to the USSR, and if she will list (a) those covered by and (b) those making a contribution towards the cost.

The Prime Minister: The details of the total cost of my visit to the USSR are not yet available. I was accompanied by four officials and 17 support staff, mostly security and communications personnel, whose costs are met from public funds. In addition, 24 media representatives travelled with the official party. Their travel costs will be recovered from their employers.

Science and Technolgy

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the recommendations contained in reports from the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology during the 1988-89 Session, which have been accepted wholly or in part by Her Majesty's Government, indicating which have already been implemented.

The Prime Minister: The reports of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology during the 1988-89 Session, together with Government responses, are available in the Library of the House, with the exception of the Government response to the report on agricultural and food research which will be published early next month.

HEALTH

Steroids

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce free eye tests for long-term users of steroids to bring them into line with other glaucoma high-risk groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no plans to extend the current national health service exemption categories to include long-term users of steroids. Patients receiving such treatment are normally under continual medical care where examination of the lens for symptoms of eye disease by the doctor or hospital clinician involved would be routine.

NHS Reform

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the professional organisations which were sent invitations to take part in the consultation on working paper 11 "Framework for Information".

Mr. Dorrell: The following professional organisations were sent invitations to take part in consultations on working paper 11:

Association of Anaesthetists
Association of British Paediatric Nurses
Association of Chief Ambulance Officers
Association of Clinical Biochemists
Association of Cytogeneticists
Association of Clinical Pathologists

Drug Reaction

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to improve the yellow card reporting system for drug reaction; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Adverse reactions to medicinal products are reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) on a voluntary basis by doctors and dentists under the yellow card scheme, and there is a statutory requirement for pharmaceutical companies to submit reports. A new improved computer system is currently being developed to support the scheme.

Reporting by prescribers is encouraged in a number of ways, for example by organising lectures to doctors on adverse reactions, exhibitions and a video to publicise the scheme, and by including yellow cards in publications used regularly by prescribers, for example, the British National Formulary, the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry data sheet compendium and MIMS—the monthly index of medical specialities.

Specialist yellow cards are produced for anaesthetists; these are to be included in the drug administration record books used in operating theatres. The format of the yellow card is in the process of being revised in order both to help and improve reporting; CSM will undertake a publicity drive to promote the yellow card scheme once the revision has been completed.

CSM regional monitoring centres have also been set up in a number of national health service regions to encourage adverse reaction reporting locally and to improve follow-up. There is a freefone service available to all parts of the United Kingdom for doctors seeking advice and information on adverse reactions.

Corwin

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been given by his Department to doctors concerning the prescribing of the heart drug Corwin.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Sir M. McNair-Wilson) on 21 June.

Tampons

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether his Department has any plans to provide tampons and sanitary towels free of charge to all women;

(2) how many representations his Department has received since 1979 calling for the provision of tampons and sanitary towels free of charge through national health service clinics.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Figures on the number of representations made on this subject are not available. We have not recently received any representations from organisations on this matter, although it has been raised from time to time in correspondence from Members of Parliament and members of the public.

It would not be appropriate to provide sanitary protection products through the national health service free of charge. We are satisfied that it is more appropriate to assist disadvantaged people through income support and other similar measures, which are the responsibility of the Department of Social Security.

Homelessness

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to tackle the problem of homelessness among young people and people with a mental illness.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has today announced a number of initiatives to address the problem of people sleeping rough in London. My Department is also initiating a number of measures specifically to address the needs of two particularly vulnerable groups of homeless people—young people, and those with a mental illness. We hope to be in a position to make a further announcement on plans that we are developing for this latter group in central London as soon as possible.

It is important that young people who arrive in London without adequate support have somewhere to go where they can receive help and advice in a safe place, and where efforts can be made to pave the way for a return home. For a number of years, my Department has provided funding for the Children's Society to run a refuge of this kind for runaway children in London, and this year we have agreed a further grant totalling around £200,000 over three years for it to run a short-stay annex attached to this refuge.

I am particularly keen to develop work with young people outside London who are at risk of becoming roofless and possibly heading for the capital. This requires close working between a number of local agencies and voluntary bodies. I intend to make funds available to help establish a number of projects in towns outside London run by voluntary organisations in collaboration with local agencies. We will allocate £250,000 from my Department's budget to start up these projects in the present financial year, and the provision of resources for future years will be discussed in the public expenditure survey process over the next few months. The projects will be targeted at young people who are, or are at risk of becoming, roofless. Their specific aim will be to help these young people find a stable environment which enables them to stay in their home community. The details of the scheme will be discussed with the voluntary sector and local authorities, and I hope that it will yield valuable lessons for service providers more generally.

A significant proportion of young runaways appear to have been at some time in local authority care, and there is clearly scope for improving the arrangements that local authorities make for children in their care, particularly in preparing them for leaving it. The Children Act 1989 gives local authorities enhanced duties and powers, and my Department will shortly be issuing draft guidance on how they should fulfil their leaving care responsibilities under the Act. I have also this year agreed a grant of £118,000 to a voluntary organisation, First Key, to provide authorities with advice on good practice in leaving care; and research has been commissioned from Leeds university to assess various approaches to leaving care policy and practice which should help local authorities to develop and improve their services.

Taken together, these measures will make an important contribution to overall Government policies aimed at reducing the risks of young people leaving home or care and coming to live in our cities without adequate protection or support.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has identified any candidates within his Department for agency status under the "next steps" initiative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following a detailed feasibility study, I have identified my Department's estates directorate as a candidate for possible executive agency status.

Agency status could enable the directorate to operate with greater freedom and clearer responsibility within an agreed framework of objectives, performance targets and resources, and to respond more readily to the needs of the Department, the NHS management executive and the NHS.

The agency proposal and other options, including extending the scope of contracting out, will be considered further. Detailed discussions, which will include the preparation of a draft agency framework document have been set in hand. I will be considering other candidates for agency status in due course.

NHS Laboratories

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps national health service management has taken to improve staffing levels in national health service laboratories and the pay and conditions of service of the staff who work in them.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since 1979 the number of qualified medical laboratory and scientific officers (MLSOs) in post has increased by 38 per cent. NHS management also undertook an extensive pay review and grade restructuring for this group of staff in 1988-89 to make a career in NHS laboratories attractive and to reward increased levels of skills and responsibilities. As a result of this review, the salary of the basic grade of qualified MLSOs, which includes 44 per cent. of all qualified MLSOs, increased by 11 per cent. in that year. Many MLSOs received substantially greater increases on assignment to the new grade structure. Current pay scales for qualified staff range from £7,897 to £20,244. These are currently under review in the Whitley council. In addition, about 25 per cent. of MLSOs now receive up to £2,527 extra through the discretionary local pay supplements for special skills or responsibilities. Many MLSOs also earn allowances relating to "out of hours" duties averaging 15 per cent. of their basic pay.

Local NHS management has not reported any significant difficulties in recruiting and retaining laboratory staff except in some places mainly in the south-east. Essential patient services are not affected.

In order to overcome local staffing difficulties NHS management, through the Whitley council management side has proposed a system of local pay supplements of up to 30 per cent., which could mean increases of up to £3,647 for basic grade MLSOs, greater flexibility in the way hours are worked and extra duty paid for and further local discretion on starting pay. These have all so far been rejected by the trade unions.

NHS management has taken positive steps in recent years to improve the pay and conditions of service of MLSOs and to resolve local recruitment and retention problems. Partial, inadequate and misleading surveys of the type recently published by the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) serve only to undermine NHS management and the laboratory service.

Births (Registration)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will take to ensure that babies born in hospitals outside Wales but which serve people within Wales, can be registered in the Welsh language.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's White Paper "Registration: proposals for change" (Cm. 939), a copy of which is available in the Library, has proposed new arrangements whereby, provided that a declaration is made at a registration office in Wales of a birth or death taking place in an English hospital, it will be possible to register that event in both languages. However, introducing such a procedure requires amendment to the present law; it is therefore one of the measures which the Government will bring forward when an opportunity arises to legislate on registration matters.

Cot Deaths

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration is being given to making the care of the next infant programme available nationwide, in order to support families who have experienced cot death.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Foundation for the Study of Infant Deaths has developed this programme for use by health authorities. The Department helped with the printing costs of guidance leaflets. I understand that there is already widespread take-up and the foundation's promotion of the programme is continuing. We will monitor use of the CONI programme, but believe the initiative is best taken forward through collaboration with the voluntary sector.

Children Act 1989

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to implement the Children Act 1989 in whole or in phases.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Some provisions of the Children Act 1989 are already in force. We plan to implement the remaining provisions in October 1991.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all working papers, implementation documents, departmental circulars, and other publications whether in draft or final form that have been issued to date arising from the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, "Working for Patients", "Caring for Patients" and associated Government initatives.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 19 June 1990]: The main documents issued in England include:
"Working for Patients" and Discussion Documents:

"Self-Governing Hospitals" (Working Paper 1) (HMSO; 1989)

"Funding and Contracts for Hospital Services" (Working Paper 2) (HMSO; 1989)

"Practice Budgets for General Medical Practitioners" (Working Paper 3) (HMSO; 1989)

"Indicative Prescribing Budgets for General Medical Practitioner" (Working Paper 4) (HMSO; 1989)

"Capital Charges" (Working Paper 5) (HMSO; 1989)

"Implications for Family Practitioner Committees" (Working Paper 8) (HMSO; 1989)

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 174

SESSION 1989–90

11th June—22nd June 1990

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
